I want to draw the attention of my colleagues to a provision in the conference report that I believe is especially important. One of the best investments this country makes is in the education of its children. And among the best programs Congress has ever created are those that expand the availability of a college education. The bill presently under consideration by the House provides $146 million for the Pell Grant Program, a program that I have enthusiastically supported since its inception. These additional funds will make it possible for 100,000 students, who could not otherwise make use of the program, to receive Pell grants. The potential benefit to our country's future from making the opportunity of higher education available on the basis of merit, rather than means, is incalculable. I believe it is therefore imperative that we continue to provide the maximum possible assistance to programs like the Pell grants, and I am pleased that is the course charted by the legislation now before us.

Mr. Speaker, I want to provide a summary of the HUD-Independent Agencies provisions in this bill. Chapter VI includes a number of urgent items for the Department of Housing and Urban Development and Independent Agencies. First, there are three rescissions of housing funds totalling $6.9 billion. These rescissions do not, however, reduce the number of housing units provided. They simply reflect the conversions from the old rent supplement and rental housing assistance programs to the section 8 program—and also the accounting change in public housing development to direct financing.

In addition, chapter VI overturns the five deferrals proposed for the Department of Housing and Urban Development. This includes the $500 million deferred for the Community Development Block Grant Program and $2.3 billion for annual contributions for assisted housing.

I think everyone is well aware of the problems the Federal Housing Administration fund has been having. Since June 6 no FHA loan commitments have been made. This chapter addresses two problems within the FHA Program. First, it increases the limitation on loans by $57,580 million. This should provide sufficient ceiling to continue the program through September 30, 1986. In addition, the Secretary's authority to make FHA loan commitments is extended until July 25.

With respect to EPA's sewage treatment construction grants program, the conference agreement would provide for the release of an additional $1.2 billion. Even though the Clean Water Act has not yet been reauthorized, about 25 States have run out of money and the conferees felt it was essential that we make these funds available. However, the final $600 million appropriated will not be made available until after the program has been reauthorized.

For the FEMA disaster relief program, we provide an additional $250 million. The disaster relief fund has virtually run out of money so these funds are urgently needed and should address all current problems as well as anticipated disasters over the remainder of the fiscal year.

This chapter also provides supplemental funds for NASA to correct the problems with the shuttle solid rocket boosters. Four hundred and thirty-one million dollars is provided as a 1986 supplemental and an additional $100 million is appropriated for 1987, but the 1987 funds will be available only after NASA has certified that they are implementing the recommendations of the Rogers Commission.

This chapter also has a number of provisions dealing with the Veterans' Administration. A transfer is permitted up to $30 million to medical care to maintain the current staffing level of 193,941 FTE. And, $35 million is provided for veterans job training, to be available until September 1988. A number of transfers are also provided for HUD, EPA, NASA, and the Veterans' Administration to take care of shortfalls in operating accounts.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 355, nays 52, not voting 26, as follows:

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

REIMBURSEMENT FOR NET REALIZED LOSSES

For the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation, not to exceed $5,300,000,000 for capital restoration, to enable the Corporation to use the authority authorized by the Charter of the Corporation and other laws to carry out programs handled by the Corporation: Provided, That, during fiscal year 1986, the Corporation shall use not less than $4,000,000 worth of surplus agricultural commodities owned by the Corporation in establishing and carrying out a research and development program on external combustion engines under section 4(m) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, as amended by the Food Security Improvements Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-260, approved March 20, 1986).

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

REIMBURSEMENT FOR NET REALIZED LOSSES

For the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation, not to exceed $5,300,000,000 for capital restoration, to enable the Corporation to use the authority authorized by the Charter of the Corporation and other laws to carry out programs handled by the Corporation.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so only to ask a question: in considering this amount for the Commodity Credit Corporation, are we now confident that that amount will get us through the rest of the year? Is that a fair assumption at this point?

Mr. CONTE. I would have to tell the gentleman "No."

Mr. WALKER. Do we have any idea at this point how much additional money we might have to come back for?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman address his question to this gentleman?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts or the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CONTE. Let me say this: the $5.3 billion will make a total of $24.988 billion. Moreover, with the new farm bill, the dairy buyout and everything else, they could be up here again before it is all over with.

Mr. WALKER. Before September 30.

Mr. CONTE. Before September 30.

Mr. WALKER. Do we have any idea how much more they could be in for?

Mr. WHITTEN. May I say that the Commodity Credit Corporation has various obligations that we cannot anticipate what will be required. This is the full amount requested. Two billion dollars of this is to pay the interest to the Treasury on loans made to the CCC. There are certain provisions in the agriculture law that we passed this year that are such that we cannot tell you what may occur later, but this is all they see at this time that they need. We gave them every dollar they asked for.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 20: Page 5, strike out lines 17 to 24.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

COOPERATIVE STATE RESEARCH SERVICE

(TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

The Secretary of Agriculture shall transfer $5,000,000 from the Commodity Credit Corporation to the Cooperative State Research Service to meet the matching funds requirement for development of an international trade center at Oklahoma State University.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 22: Page 6, after line 6, insert:

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

(a) Effective only for the 1986 crop of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Agriculture shall make deficiency payments to producers on a farm under section 107D(c)(1), 105C(c)(1), 103A(c)(1), or 101A(c)(1) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445b-3(c)(1), 1444e(c)(1), 1444-1(c)(1), or 1441-1(c)(1)), as the case may be, if the Secretary determines that—

(1) the producers on a farm are prevented from planting any portion of the acreage intended for a commodity to the commodity or other nonconserving crops because of flood, heavy rains, or excessive moisture; and

(2) the farm is located in an area that the Secretary determines has been substantially affected by a natural disaster in the United States or by a major disaster or emergency designated by the President under the Disaster Relief Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5121 et seq.).

(b) The amount of deficiency payments under subsection (a) shall be computed by multiplying—

(1) 40 percent of the projected payment rate; by

(2) the number of acres so affected but not to exceed the acreage planted to the commodity for harvest (including any acreage that the producers were prevented from planting to the commodity or other nonconserving crops in lieu of the commodity because of flood, heavy rains, or excessive moisture) in the immediately preceding year; by

(3) the farm program payment yield established for the crop for the farm.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

(3) the farm program payment yield established for the crop for the farm.

(c) Such sums shall be deducted from crop insurance indemnity payments due as a result of such disaster.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 23: Page 6, after line 6, insert:

PREPAYMENT OF LOANS BY RURAL ELECTRIFICATION AND TELEPHONE SYSTEMS

In the case of a borrower of a loan made by the Federal Financing Bank, and guaranteed by the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration, under section 306 of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (7 U.S.C. 936) that is outstanding on the date of enactment of this Act, the borrower may prepay the loan by payment of the outstanding principal balance due on the loan using private capital with the existing loan guarantee. No sums in addition to payment of such balance shall be charged as the result of such prepayment against the borrower, the Rural Electrification and Telephone Revolving Fund established under section 301 of such Act (7 U.S.C. 931), or the Rural Electrification Administration.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 42: Page 7, after line 5, insert:

MODEL STATE STATUTE

SECTION 1. ATTORNEY GENERAL TO DEVELOP MODEL STATUTE.

The Attorney General as Chairman of the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board, in consultation with State and local law enforcement agencies, shall develop a model statute for States to prohibit the establishment and use of freebase houses.

SEC. 2. GOALS AND CONTENT OF MODEL STATUTE.

(a) GOALS OF MODEL STATUTE.—The model statute developed pursuant to section 1 shall—

(1) address the need to prohibit the use of houses, buildings, rooms, or apartments as places where manufacturing, processing, distributing, purchasing, and using illegal drugs takes place; and

(2) encourage coordination with the Controlled Substances Act, statutes on drug paraphernalia, and other relevant drug law enforcement statutes.

(b) CONTENT.—(1) The model statute shall clearly—

(A) define a freebase house and activities which take place in such dwellings;

(B) define the offenses which take place in such freebase houses;

(C) define penalties for such offenses; and

(D) allow for civil seizure and forfeiture of property confiscated in such offenses.

(2) The model statute shall include prohibitions—

(A) making it illegal for a person to own or operate a freebase house;

(B) making it illegal for a person to work in a freebase house which includes managing, selling drugs, collecting fees and admission, processing or preparing drugs, distributing drugs, or contributing to the overall drug enterprises in the dwelling with a knowledge of or having reason to believe that illegal drugs are present on the premises;

(C) making it illegal for a person to frequent a freebase house with knowledge or reason to believe that illegal drugs are present on the premises; and

(D) making it illegal for employers, employees, and customers to be present in freebase houses when they have knowledge or have reason to believe that drugs are on the premises.

(c) RECOMMENDATIONS.—The Attorney General shall include with the model statute recommendations for procedures to allow law enforcement officials to notify owners and managers of dwellings where freebasing and drug distribution is taking place.

SEC. 3. REPORT TO CONGRESS AND STATE AND LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITIES.

The Attorney General shall—

(1) develop the model statute and recommendations required by this Act within six months after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(2) make the report and recommendations available to the appropriate committees of Congress and to State and local law enforcement authorities in his capacity as Chairman of the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board.

SEC. 4. DEFINITION OF FREEBASING.

For purposes of this Act, the term "freebasing" is the conversion of cocaine crystals into a smokable base form of the drug.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

NATIONAL ASSISTANCE PLAN TO HALT ROCK AND CRACK COCAINE TRAFFICKING

The Attorney General as Chairman of the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board is directed to convene the Board to address on an emergency basis the crisis phenomenon that cocaine freebase, "rock" and "crack" cocaine, have caused in communities throughout the nation.

Within 60 days of enactment, the Board is directed to report to the Congress and to develop and implement a national plan of assistance to state and local governments to halt trafficking in rock and crack cocaine; to promote effective law enforcement efforts to identify, investigate, prosecute and incarcerate perpetrators engaged in enterprises involving rock and crack cocaine; and, to foster public understanding of the dangerous effects of this substance on public health and safety.

This plan of assistance shall concentrate on methods of using existing laws in such areas as conspiracy, aiding and abetting, forfeiture, possession and trafficking to address this drug with its special potency and distribution characteristics, including the use of rock or freebase houses where the cocaine freebase is processed, distributed, and smoked. The Board's plan should also address those areas where existing law should be amended to strengthen enforcement and prosecution against rock and crack cocaine.

CHAPTER III A

AUTHORIZATION OF CERTAIN UNAUTHORIZED APPROPRIATIONS

SECTION 1. AUTHORIZATION OF CERTAIN UNAUTHORIZED FISCAL YEAR 1986 APPROPRIATIONS.

Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, funds appropriated or otherwise made available to or for the use of the Department of Defense by the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1986, (as contained in section 101(b) of Public Law 99-190), and which were not otherwise authorized by law, are authorized to be obligated and expended as provided in such Act.

SEC. 2. PROHIBITION AND LIMITATION ON OBLIGATION OF FUNDS FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES.

MARINER FUND.—Of the funds appropriated or made available by the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1986, none shall be available for construction of commercial type vessels, with or without military specifications, for lease to private shipping concerns under the Mariner Fund or any other program.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION FOR OBLIGATION OF CERTAIN UNOBLIGATED FUNDS.

Of the funds appropriated by the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986 (as contained in section 101(b) of Public Law 99-190, but which may not be obligated or expended for the purposes for which appropriated by virtue of section 2 of this chapter, and of the funds made available for obligation and expenditure form prior year unobligated balances by section 8103 of the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1986, the following amounts are authorized to be obligated and expended for the stated purposes:

(1) for military pay, $1,599,400,000;

(2) for military retirement accrual payments, $2,156,000,000;

(3) for Coastal Defense Augmentation, $140,000,000;

(4) for the Expendable Launch Vehicle Program, $1,498,686,000; and

(5) Any amounts remaining available from such funds shall be available for readiness and for other purposes, including funds authorized for obligation and expenditure for purposes listed in clauses (1), (2), (3), and (4) not otherwise required for such purposes.

SEC. 4. REVISION OR REPEAL OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF PUBLIC LAW 99-190.

(a) AIR DEFENSE AIRCRAFT COMPETITION.—The paragraph under the heading "Aircraft Procurement, Air Force" in title III of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986 (as contained in section 101(b) of Public Law 99-190), is amended by striking out "of which $200,000,000 shall be available only to initiate the air defense aircraft competition authorized by law" in the matter preceding the first proviso; and REVISION OF CONTRACTING OUT PROVISION.—Section 8089 of such Act is amended by striking out "ten" and inserting in lieu thereof "40".

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF CERTAIN LIMITATION ON THE P-3 AIRCRAFT.

Funds made available for the procurement of P-3 aircraft for the Navy for fiscal year 1986 may be used for procurement of such aircraft for the active or reserve forces of the Navy, as determined by the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 6. TEMPORARY WAIVER ON POLYGRAPH EXAMINATION LIMITATIONS.

In computing the number of counterintelligence polygraph examinations that may be conducted during fiscal year 1986 under section 1221 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1986 (Public Law 99-145; 99 Stat. 726), there may be excluded from such computation any polygraph examination conducted during the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on September 30, 1986, if such examination—

(1) is conducted by the Air Force under an authorization granted by the Secretary of Defense on November 24, 1981; or

(2) is conducted under an authorization granted by the Secretary of Defense on August 31, 1982, and is conducted on a person who is participating in a national program—

(A) which has as its purpose the collection of specialized intelligence through reconnaissance;

(B) which is under the purview of the Director of Central Intelligence; and

(C) for which a polygraph examination was established on or before October 1, 1985, as a condition for participation in such program.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

CHAPTER III A

AUTHORIZATION OF CERTAIN UNAUTHORIZED APPROPRIATIONS

SECTION 1. AUTHORIZATION OF CERTAIN UNAUTHORIZED FISCAL YEAR 1986 APPROPRIATIONS.

Notwithstanding section 8109 of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986 (Public Law 99-190) and except as otherwise provided in this chapter, funds appropriated or otherwise made available to or for the use of the Department of Defense by the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986 (as contained in section 101(b) of Public Law 99-190), and which were not otherwise authorized by law, are authorized to be obligated and expended as provided in such Act.

SEC. 2. UNAUTHORIZED APPROPRIATIONS.

The following programs and amounts provided in the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986 (Public Law 99-190) are not authorized to be obligated or expended:

(A) which has as its purpose the collection of specialized intelligence through reconnaissance;

(B) which is under the purview of the Director of Central Intelligence; and

(C) for which a polygraph examination was established on or before October 1, 1985, as a condition for participation in such program.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to recede and concur in amendment No. 84 which has been reported in technical disagreement.

Mr. Speaker, for close to a year now, Members concerned with the unchecked decline in American shipyards and the mounting loss of shipyard jobs have been working hard to put in place a program to arrest that decline and save those jobs.

I am proud to have played a role in urging timely, positive consideration of legislation in the House this year to authorize the Mariner Build and Charter Program. The Mariner Program, like its predecessor in the 1950's, would add militarily useful ships to the U.S.-Flag merchant fleet, and provide lifesaving work for a number of troubled domestic shipyards that are on the verge of closing their gates. A sum of $852 million had been set aside in late December's fiscal year 1986 continuing resolution for the Mariner Program, but made contingent on the subsequent enactment of authorizing legislation. Authorizing legislation has been making steady progress in the House. Both the Seapower Subcommittee of the House Armed Services and the full Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committees have approved versions of Mariner authorizing legislation in the last 2 months.

Unfortunately, in the early hours of Friday, June 6, the other body agreed without objection to an amendment prohibiting fiscal year 1986 continuing resolution funds from being spent on the Mariner Program. The other body took the additional action of reobligating the previously earmarked Mariner funds into several nonshipbuilding related Defense Department accounts. That amendment, has been generally incorporated into the conference report before the House today.

Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to debate whether one defense program, such as the expendable Launch Vehicle Program, represents a more urgent and higher priority for defense dollars than a program like the Mariner Build and Charter Program. However, I do want to make the point that the $852 million that had been set aside in the fiscal year 1986 continuing resolution for the Mariner fund had come about as a result of prior year Navy shipbuilding program savings. In the next year or two, or three, our national decisionmakers will finally realize that too many U.S. shipyards have closed, and the U.S.-flag merchant fleet has all but disappeared, and our national security has been placed in jeopardy because of the decline in those critical, related industries. When that moment comes, a program like Mariner Build and Charter will be seen as an effective means of adding militarily useful ships to the U.S.-flag merchant fleet, and maintaining a level of work in the remaining domestic shipyard base. It is unlikely that a funding source like this year's pool of prior year Navy shipbuilding program savings will be found next year, or the year after, especially in the face of Gramm-Rudman. America's shipyards are now facing a crisis situation. This is not a national problem looming down the road. It is upon us now. In the last 3 years, four major shipyards, deemed by the Navy to be key components of the U.S. defense mobilization base, have gone out of business and locked their gates. A century-old tradition of shipbuilding at the Fore River Shipyard in Quincy, MA, is at risk. There is not more work in the yard, and the owner is seeking to dispose of the facility. Several other major U.S. yards are rapidly running out of work. The Mariner program makes sense this year. It must proceed ahead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 87: Page 12, strike out lines 4 to 7, and insert:

Using available funds authorized by section 5 of the Flood Control Act approved August 18, 1941, as amended, the Secretary of the Army shall, in consultation with State officials of the Great Lakes region, develop emergency contingency plans to prevent or control near term flooding along the Great Lakes. The Secretary shall report to Congress within sixty days after the date of enactment of this Act on the contingency plans. The Secretary is authorized to spend up to $1,000,000 for the purposes of this provision.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

For an additional amount, for "Flood Control and Coastal Emergencies", as authorized by section 5 of the Flood Control Act approved August 18, 1941, as amended, $25,000,000, to remain available until expended.

Using available funds authorized by section 5 of the Flood Control Act approved August 18, 1941, as amended, the Secretary of the Army shall, in consultation with State officials of the Great Lakes region, develop emergency contingency plans to prevent or control near term flooding along the Great Lakes. The Secretary shall report to Congress within sixty days after the date of enactment of this Act on the contingency plans. The Secretary is authorized to spend up to $1,000,000 for the purposes of this provision.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 91: Page 13, strike out all after line 13 over to and including line 2 on page 14.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISION

Of the funds previously appropriated or made available for research, development, test and evaluation for the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1986 pursuant to Public Law 99-190, $55,600,000 shall be available only for grants or contributions to educational institutions for research activities, construction of research related facilities and for other related purposes as provided in House Report 99-450 accompanying House Joint Resolution 465, Public Law 99-190, and the Secretary of Defense shall provide these grants or contributions expeditiously: Provided, That such grants or contributions are a one time obligation and expenditure and shall not interfere with or change the existing system of other competitive research grants or contracts.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my distinguished colleagues in supporting the conference committee's amendment to the supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal year 1986. The Senate version of this bill, which delegated funding for a number of university research facilities, was obviously flawed. I am pleased to see that the conference committee saw fit to add these projects back into the bill.

I have many problems with the argument that proposals for university research facilities should be subject to a merit review process. The foremost among them is the geographic discrimination that is likely to result if merit review is applied to facilities funding in the same way that it is applied to research grants. In the distribution of Federal research support, there is a distinct pattern of historical preference for schools in the East, and to a lesser extent, the far West. The geographic distribution of Department of Defense funds to colleges and universities in fiscal year 1984 is painfully illustrative of this fact. Just seven schools in the eastern United States received 54 percent of the year's research money. The West was a distant second, with 7 schools awarded 11 percent of the funds. Perhaps even more startling is the fact that 2 schools in the East accounted for 49 percent—nearly half—of the total DOD funds for university research that year.

The National Science Foundation's peer review system also helps perpetuate this inequitable distribution of research funds. Not only did the top twenty recipients receive 42 percent of all funds in fiscal year 1984, but not a single one of those 20 schools is located in the South and Southwest. Institutions in only 11 States were privileged enough to rank among the top 20.

The trend toward concentration of our Nation's research funds in the hands of just a few institutions must stop. The bill before us, in the long run, will help to redress the current imbalance by providing these universities with the means to compete effectively for research funds and to contribute more greatly to our Nation's scientific progress. I urge my colleagues to support this conference committee's amendment.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the university project funding included in the Supplemental Appropriations Conference Report, and urge my colleagues to join me in opposing efforts to remove them.

There has been discussion about the peer review process and the appropriateness of congressional involvement in the funding of university projects. I would like to clarify the issues and lay to rest the misinformation clouding this debate.

The peer review process was established to ensure that Federal funding was directed toward scientifically responsible projects. It was designed to provide the scientific community a role in determining where research funds were applied, but it was never intended to substitute for or reduce Congress ultimate responsibility for defining and assigning fiscal priorities.

Several weeks ago, arguing that Congress had established peer review as the sole means of allocating university research funds, a member of the other body cited provision of the Competition in Contracting Act as a justification for eliminating this research facility funding. As one of the principle authors of CICA, I too believe that the philosophy of competition is relevant to the debate. I disagree entirely, however, with the conclusions which were drawn from the debate.

The Competition in Contracting Act was written to ensure the Federal Government gets a fair value for its dollar. The provisions regarding peer review were not written to establish peer review as the sole means of distributing research dollars. In fact, the peer review provisions were added, in consultation with the university community, to ensure that CICA did not eliminate peer review as a legitimate procurement tool. This misconception aside, there is a broader policy question for consideration.

The money we are discussing today is not for research. It is for the construction of research facilities. It is an investment in the research infrastructure of this Nation which is both necessary and desirable. It is an investment which will raise the research and development capabilities of the Nation and establish new opportunities for scientific achievement.

As some of my colleagues in the other body have indicated, competition is at the very heart of the question we are considering today. The Federal Government funds about $8.5 billion in university research. According to the National Science Foundation, over 55 percent of this money goes to only 20 universities. The other 45 percent is distributed among the remaining 570 colleges and universities. The investment we make today will enable these universities to enter this elite arena and aggressively compete for research dollars. This is the competition which lies at the very heart of the Competition in Contracting Act.

A few Members of the other body have questioned the scientific merit of these projects. Although I cannot speak for all 10 of the projects, I can speak directly to the merits of the Microelectronic Engineering Center at the Rochester Institute of Technology.

In 1980, RIT, assisted by Texas Instruments, conducted an analysis of the nationwide demand for microelectronic engineers. This study demonstrated a current shortfall of over 2,000 engineers, and projected that this shortfall would increase by more than 400 per year. Studies conducted by the Office of Technology Assessment and the Business-

Higher Education forum caution that this shortfall poses a major threat to America's competitive position in worldwide trade.

In 1982, RIT initiated the Nation's first program to meet the growing need for microelectronic engineers. Working closely with Texas Instruments, IBM, Motorola, National Semiconductor, and Eastman Kodak, RIT designed a program specially suited to meet the needs of the American microelectronic industry. It is anticipated that this program will meet a full 20 percent of the forecasted need for microelectronic engineers.

I would like to lay to rest what is perhaps the greatest misconception. the money we discuss today is not new money. These projects were funded by Congress in the 1986 continuing resolution. In fact, the language we discuss today is the language which the Department of Defense argued was necessary to allow the release of the funds. This is not money being drawn from other research accounts. This is not money that would have otherwise been committed to research and training. This is funding that this Congress already appropriated for the construction of research facilities.

Mr. Speaker, the Rochester Institute of Technology Center for Microelectronic Engineering will not by itself solve the competitive problems we face with the Japanese in the field of microelectronic engineering. But it will provide the support necessary to allow American businesses to compete on a level playing field. I urge my colleagues to support the supplemental conference report and oppose efforts to delete these university projects.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 93: Page 14, strike out lines 7 to 13, and insert:

INTERNATIONAL FUND FOR NORTHERN IRELAND AND IRELAND

(TRANSFERS OF FUNDS)

Of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available in titles I, II, III, and IV in the Foreign Assistance and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1986 (as enacted in Public Law 99-190), not more than $20,000,000 of any of such funds may be made available for the United States contribution to the International Fund established pursuant to the November 15, 1985, agreement between the United Kingdom and Ireland: Provided, That none of the funds contained in such Act may be contributed to the International Fund until the enactment of legislation specifically authorizing assistance for such purpose.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and concur therein. In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

INTERNATIONAL FUND FOR NORTHERN IRELAND AND IRELAND

(TRANSFERS OF FUNDS)

For an additional amount for the "Economic Support Fund", not less than $50,000,000, which shall be available only for the United States contribution to the International Fund established pursuant to the November 15, 1985, agreement between the United Kingdom and Ireland, to be derived from funds appropriated or otherwise made available by the Foreign Assistance and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1986 (as enacted in Public Law 99-190), as follows: $4,900,000 by transfer from title I of such Act, $12,350,000 of funds made available by such Act for the "Economic Support Fund", $9,100,000 by transfer from title II of such Act, excluding funds made available for the "Economic Support Fund", $20,000,000 by transfer from title III of such Act, and $3,650,000 by transfer from title IV of such Act.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is the money of aid for Ireland where the administration had originally requested $20 million. It is my understanding that under this particular provision we are going with a $50 million figure, and could the gentleman tell me what the figure was that the other body brought into the conference?

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I believe the figure was $20 million. The compromise provided that the $50 million be taken from several accounts in the foreign aid bill.

Mr. WALKER. Well, I am a little confused as to how we got a compromise here.

We came in at $50 million, the other body came in at $20 million, and we compromised at $50 million.

Mr. CONTE. I think the big compromise came where we agreed that the money would come proportionally from different accounts in the foreign aid bill.

Mr. WALKER. Well, we are taking this $50 million, as I understand it, out of multilateral assistance, we are taking it out of bilateral assistance, we are taking it out of military assistance and out of the Eximbank.

So we literally now are in a position where we are cutting the biggest amount, as I see it, from the military assistance in order to send the money to Ireland. Is that my understanding of it?

Mr. CONTE. These amounts are based on the proportion of the total 1986 act represented by each of those accounts, and we felt that this was a very fair compromise and worked it out with our Senate counterparts, Senator KASTEN and others.

Mr. WALKER. The biggest single amount that goes into this $50 million that was the compromise figure, the high figure comes out of the military assistance program. Is that correct?

Mr. CONTE. I think $20 million, yes.

Mr. WALKER. So the gentleman does in fact deplete other military assistance programs in order to provide this money for the Irish aid which was a figure above the administration's request and above the Senate-passed figure. Is that correct?

Mr. CONTE. Well, as I recall correctly, the authorization amount is $50 million, and the administration in the letter sent to me does not raise an objection to this $50 million.

Mr. WALKER. But it is a figure which exceeds their original request by $30 million?

Mr. CONTE. At this time I would have to say "yes," but we felt that the situation there was so grave that we had to move forward expeditiously, and the administration at this point would not object to this figure providing we took it from these accounts proportionately, which we did.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support our chairman's motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment in regard to aid to Ireland and Northern Ireland.

All that this motion does is to bring the Ireland aid provision back to the original House position of furnishing $50 million in assistance in fiscal year 1986 rather than only $20 million as provided by the Senate. The amendment to the Senate amendment which is included in the chairman's motion merely specifies in a more detailed way the previously appropriated accounts from which this aid will be taken.

The House bill required a transfer of the entire $50 million from the economic support fund. That fund advances U.S. economic, political and security interests by offering flexible grant or loan economic assistance to friendly countries of strategic concern to the United States. The administration strongly opposed taking the entire $50 million from that account.

The Senate bill allowed the funds to be transferred from any or all of the four titles in the fiscal year 1986 Foreign Aid Appropriations Act. Our subcommittee chairman objected to that because of his concern that the administration might take it all from one or two accounts which he supports.

A compromise was reached, just as it is supposed to be in a House-Senate conference, whereby we set out in bill language exactly how much is to come from each foreign aid account. Those amounts are based on the proportion of the total 1986 act represented by each of those accounts. That is a fair compromise.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not have to tell you how important this aid to Ireland is at this time of promise of change and development in Northern reland. It is not always pretty, but eople are beginning to talk to each ther over there. We earnestly hope nd pray that this is an opportune me to offer material and political upport through this appropriation.

All of us are blessed with varying umbers of Irish-American constituents. They don't give a hoot about the etails of which accounts are tapped or this money, but they strongly support this aid. They don't want this nessed up at this late date.

Let's adopt the chairman's motion nd get on with this timely aid to Ireand.

Mr. WALKER. Does anyone have some idea as we take the money, $20 million out of military assistance, $12 million out of economic support, where this money is coming out of? Is this money coming out of, for instance, food to Ethiopia in the Economic Support Fund? Is it money that comes out of providing military assistance to help, for instance, the Afghan freedom fighters? I mean, where is the money coming from?

Mr. CONTE. That money for Afghanistan is earmarked money and, therefore, it will not come out of that. As for the balance of the $20 million out of military assistance is unallocated at this point.

Mr. WALKER. Will it come out of, for instance, Israel?

Mr. CONTE. No.

Mr. WALKER. Much of the military assistance goes to Israel. Would the money come out of the Israeli fund?

Mr. CONTE. No, it will not come out of the Israeli fund, because that is earmarked money.

Mr. WALKER. I see. Who is not going to get money as a result of the $20 million we are allocating under this program?

Mr. CONTE. We do not know at this point. It is the entire MAP program.

Mr. WALKER. In other words, there will be places. It could be the Philippines?

Mr. CONTE. I doubt that, because that is earmarked money.

Mr. WALKER. Korea?

Mr. CONTE. Any place where the money is earmarked, you cannot use it for this purpose.

Mr. WALKER. Korea?

Mr. CONTE. I do not think Korea gets MAP money. I am quite sure Korea does not.

Mr. WALKER. My point is simply that we took the highest possible figure here and we ended up taking it out of somebody. Now, as I go down through all of this, it is coming out of no one, evidently, and yet it has to come out of somewhere. Someone else is going to suffer in order for us to come out with the highest possible figure. Is that a reasonable assumption?

Mr. CONTE. It is a reasonable assumption. We are giving the President the discretionary authority to determine which funds will be used for this purpose as long as the funds are not earmarked.

Mr. WALKER. But we have taken away his discretion by raising the funding $30 million above what was originally requested.

Mr. CONTE. We have given him the discretion to take a little more money out.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman. I am not really very happy with a compromise that ends up compromising at the highest possible figure. I mean, that is essentially what we did. We came out with a compromise that was the highest possible figure, which is one of my objections to what we often find in supplemental appropriation bills.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his understanding.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 95: Page 14, lines 15 and 16, strike out "for the "Economic Support Fund" in Public Law 99-190" and insert "in title II of the Foreign Assistance and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1986 (as enacted in Public Law 99-190)".

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "in title II of the Foreign Assistance and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1986 (as enacted in Public Law 99-190), subject to the notification process of the Committees on Appropriations".

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 96: Page 14, line 18, strike out "shall" and insert "may".

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the house recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: ", or the equivalent amount in local currencies, may".

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 97: Page 15, after line 7, insert:

Notwithstanding any limitations on assistance to Haiti contained in Public Law 98-473 or Public Law 99-83, funds previously appropriated for the purposes of chapter 2 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended, may be made available for Haiti to carry out such purposes: Provided, That none of the funds made available pursuant to this paragraph may be made available for obligation unless the Appropriations Committees of both Houses of Congress are previously notified fifteen days in advance.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

Notwithstanding any limitations on assistance to Haiti contained in Public Law 98-473 or Public Law 99-83, funds in the amount of $750,000 previously appropriated for the purposes of chapter 2 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended, may be made available for Haiti to carry out such purposes: Provided, That none of the funds made available pursuant to this paragraph may be made available for obligation unless the Appropriations Committees of both Houses of Congress are previously notified fifteen days in advance: Provided further, That the funds provided under this paragraph shall be made available only to provide nonlethal military assistance for Haiti.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 98: Page 15, after line 7, insert:

SPECIAL ASSISTANCE TO THE PHILIPPINES

ECONOMIC SUPPORT FUND

For an additional amount for the "Economic Support Fund", $100,000,000: Provided, That this amount shall be available only for the Philippines: Provided further, That none of these funds may be made available for obligation unless the Appropriations Committees of both Houses of Congress are previously notified fifteen days in advance.

MILITARY ASSISTANCE

For an additional amount of "Military Assistance", $50,000,000: Provided, That in addition, $29,355,000 previously obligated for direct loans to the Philippines under the heading "Foreign Military Credit Sales" in Public Law 98-473 and Public Law 99-190, shall be deobligated and transferred to this appropriation, to be made available for obligation until September 30, 1986: Provided further, That these funds shall be made available only for the Philippines: Provided further, That none of these funds may be made available for obligation unless the Appropriations Committees of both Houses of Congress are previously notified fifteen days in advance.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

SPACE FLIGHT, CONTROL AND DATA COMMUNICATIONS

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

For an additional amount for "Space flight, control and data communications", $431,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1987: Provided, That, upon enactment into law of this Act, $5,000,000 shall be transferred to "Research and development": Provided further, That $100,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1988, is appropriated for fiscal year 1987 for "Space flight, control and data communications", and shall not become available for obligation until October 1, 1986: Provided further, That funds appropriated for fiscal year 1987 in the previous proviso may not be obligated until the Administrator of NASA has certified that the recommendations of the Rogers Commission have been implemented or are being implemented, or that an alternative approach satisfies the direction of the recommendation.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand the language on amendment number 108 basically requires a second sourcing of the solid rocket booster program?

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that we included report language.

Mr. WALKER. Well, the conferees direct NASA to make available sufficient funds to study an alternative solid rocket booster program.

Mr. CONTE. That is the report language, yes.

Mr. WALKER. That is not a requirement that has been placed upon NASA at this point to go to a second sourcing?

Mr. CONTE. That is strong advice, I would say.

Mr. WALKER. The reason why I raise the question is the authorization is in the process of going through full-fledged hearings at the present time looking at a whole variety of things. I am wondering why the Appropriations Committee felt a need to wade in and make this rather substantive determination before the authorization committee has completed its hearings.

We just had a problem here a few minutes ago talking about the agriculture program. Here is another place where the Appropriations Committee has evidently just usurped the ability of the authorization committee to complete its work. I am wondering if we cannot at least wait until the authorization committee can do some of its work.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I can understand the gentleman's concern. The gentleman is one of the important members on the Committee on Science and Technology, and I know of the gentleman's interest in the space program.

What we were doing here is trying to support one of the recommendations of the Presidential Commission that was investigating the accident of the Challenger. One of the recommendations there, of course, was to look closely at the solid rocket booster and, because there has been a sole source on the solid rocket booster in the past, there was an indication clearly on the part of the Commission and also on the part of those who have been funding NASA, that there ought to be a closer look at another source.

So the language does direct NASA to study an alternative solid rocket booster design such as, and I think the gentleman quoted it, "a unitary case, single-cast propellant," et cetera. That does not bar any other particular designs from being considered beyond the unitary case or the single-cast propellant.

So that is the reason why this was inserted in amendment 108. We think it is a good amendment, and it is one I believe that is in keeping with the recommendations of the Presidential Commission.

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, I certainly agree with the gentleman that it is one of the recommendations of the Rogers Commission and one that should be looked at very, very closely, because we all know at this point that the solid rocket boosters were a major contributing factor in the accident.

My question is why we picked out this one area, decided to move ahead with that in the appropriations bill before the authorization committee has completed its work. It seems to me that what we want to do in order to recover from the accident and make certain that we have a responsible program is make certain that all the Rogers Commission recommendations get implemented, that they get implemented in a way which makes sense, which has a policy framework that is agreed upon by both authorization and appropriating committees, and that we do a disservice to that process by beginning to pick and choose among these things and including them in an appropriations bill.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman knows, and perhaps better than most people in the committee or on the floor now, this, of course, was one of the major recommendations by the Presidential Commission. There were some nine recommendations that were made, and I am sure that most of them will be implemented before we return to using the shuttle to lift satellites into orbit. That is the only reason for our putting the language into the bill.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is correct.

I simply further make the point that those are also questions that have authorization implications as well as appropriations implications, and that by making policy decisions of that type in the appropriations bill, I think that we do a disservice to the process that will ultimately produce a broadly based policy.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, I believe this language gives this particular problem greater urgency. Probably every expert that has looked at this problem over the past few months would suggest that the real problem, the most serious problem, was with the solid rocket booster. So that is one of the reasons why we inserted this language.

Mr. WALKER. Let me say to the gentleman that it is my view, after listening to some of the hearings, that technical failure might have been in the solid rocket booster program, but we are also finding the more serious failure may have been in the quality assurance program and some of those things within NASA.

That kind of coordinated policy that assures an upgrade of the quality assurance programs, that assures an upgrade of the safety programs, that assures better management, and so on, is as important as the technical fix that may be involved in the Solid Rocket Booster Program or in a second sourcing of the solid rocket boosters.

That is my concern, that this is being done out of phase, with some of the rest of the things that may very well be a very, very important part of a recovery program.

That is my concern, as I read that language. It seems to me to in some way put the cart before the horse.

I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FAZIO. I appreciate the gentleman's yielding so that I could further question the gentleman from Massachusetts.

I know the Space Shuttle Challenger Accident Commission recommended that no options be prematurely precluded in this area, and I am assuming that the gentleman's intent that the list of alternatives to be studied be longer than the two specific options cited in the statement of the managers' report.

Mr. WALKER. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND].

Mr. BOLAND. The gentleman is correct. We are directing NASA to get a look at more than just the two specific areas that we targeted in the supplemental. We use the word "et cetera," which, of course, would include more than the unitary case or the single cast propellant.

In further response to the gentleman, I am sure the gentleman has read the report rather thoroughly, but on page 45, in the second paragraph from the end of that page, it says:

The conferees have also agreed to provide $100 million of the $531 million recommended as an appropriation for fiscal year 1987. These funds may not be used until the administrator of NASA has certified that the recommendations of the Rogers Commission have been implemented or are being implemented, or that an alternative approach satisfies the objective of the recommendation.

I would think the gentleman would agree with that particular language.

Mr. WALKER. I certainly do agree with that. My problem is not with that particular language. Obviously, the President's Executive order would allow the administrator of NASA to certify that the recommendations are being implemented. The Executive order says that much.

My concern is that by highlighting certain things in this report, we may in fact get some of the things that need to be done out of sync, and the worst possible thing at the present time is to have the kind of recovery where all kinds of people are issuing orders and no one knows precisely what it is that is getting done and how it is getting done.

Mr. BOLAND. If the gentleman will yield further, I am sure that after the administrator of NASA gets a look at this record and gets a clear indication of the other areas with respect to the Commission that have been highlighted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania—attention will be paid to it.

I appreciate the gentleman's comments.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for his remarks, and I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 109: Page 18, line 3, after "care"," insert "up to".

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 109 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following: "not less than $25,000,000 nor more than".

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 111: Page 18, strike out lines 13 to 18, and insert:

For payments to defray the costs of training and provision of incentives to employers to hire and train certain veterans, as authorized to be appropriated by section 16 of the Veterans' Job Training Act (appearing at 29 U.S.C. 1721 and as amended by section 201(d) of Public Law 99-238), $35,000,000, to be derived by transfer from "Construction, minor projects".

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

For payments to defray the costs of training and provision of incentives to employers to hire and train certain veterans as authorized by the Veterans' Job Training Act, as amended (29 U.S.C. 1721), $35,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1988, and to be derived by transfer from "Construction, minor projects".

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 112. Page 18, after line 18, insert:

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

Retroactive to October 1, 1985, all payments for services performed on a contractual basis in conjunction with loan guaranty operations shall be charged to the VA loan guaranty revolving fund.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

Retroactive to October 1, 1985, all payments for appraisals performed on a contractual basis in connection with the liquidation of housing loans guaranteed, insured, or made in conjunction with loan guarantee operations shall be charged to the VA loan guaranty revolving fund.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 114: Page 18, after line 18, insert:

Each provision of law amended by Public Law 99-289, is amended by striking out "June 6, 1986" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "July 25, 1986".

URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACTION GRANTS IMPROVEMENTS

(a) PROJECT QUALITY CRITERIA.—Section 119(d)(1) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended—

(1) by inserting a dash before "(A)";

(2) by indenting subparagraphs (A) and (B) in the same manner as subparagraphs (C) and (D), as inserted by this subsection;

(3) in subparagraph (A), by striking out "as the primary criterion,";

(4) by striking out "and" and the end of subparagraph (B); and

(5) by striking out subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(C) the following other criteria:

"(i) the extent to which the grant will stimulate economic recovery by leveraging private investment;

"(ii) the number of permanent jobs to be created and their relation to the amount of grant funds requested;

"(iii) the proportion of permanent jobs accessible to lower income persons and minorities, including persons who are unemployed;

"(iv) the extent to which the project will retain jobs that will be lost without the provision of a grant under this section;

"(v) the extent to which the project will relieve the most pressing employment or residential needs of the applicant by—

"(I) reemploying workers in a skill that has recently suffered a sharp increase in unemployment locally:

"(II) retraining recently unemployed residents in new skills;

"(III) providing training to increase the local pool of skilled labor; or

"(IV) producing decent housing for low- and moderate-income persons in cases where such housing is in severe shortage in the area of the applicant, except that an application shall be considered to produce housing for low- and moderate-income persons under this clause only if such application proposes that (a) not less than 51 percent of all funds available for the project shall be used for dwelling units and related facilities; and (b) not less than 30 percent of all funds used for dwelling units and related facilities shall be used for dwelling units to be occupied by persons of low and moderate income, or not less than 20 percent of all dwelling units made available to occupancy using such funds shall be occupied by persons of low and moderate income, whichever results in the occupancy of more dwelling units by persons of low and moderate income;

"(vi) the impact of the proposed activities on the fiscal base of the city or urban county and its relation to the amount of grant funds requested;

"(vii) the extent to which State or local Government funding or special economic incentives have been committed; and

"(viii) the extent to which the project will have a substantial impact on physical and economic development of the city or urban county, the proposed activities are likely to be accomplished in a timely fashion with the grant amount available, and the city or urban county has demonstrated performance in housing and community development programs; and

"(D) additional consideration for projects with the following characteristics:

"(i) projects to be located within a city or urban county which did not receive a preliminary grant approval under this section during the 12-month period preceding the date on which applications are required to be submitted for the grant competition involved; and

"(ii) twice the amount of the additional consideration provided under clause (i) for projects to be located in cities or urban counties which did not receive a preliminary grant approval during the 24-month period preceding the date on which applications under this section are required to be submitted for the grant competition involved.

If a city or urban county has submitted and has pending more than one application, the additional consideration provided by subparagraph (D) of the preceding sentence shall be available only to the project in such city or urban county which received the highest number of points under subparagraph (C) of such sentence.".

(d) SELECTION LIMITATIONS AND CRITERIA WEIGHT.—Section 119(d) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) The Secretary shall award points to each application as follows:

"(A) not more than 35 points on the basis of the criteria referred to in paragraph (1)(A);

"(B) not more than 35 points on the basis of the criteria referred to in paragraph (1)(B);

"(C) not more than 33 points on the basis of the criteria referred to in paragraph (1)(C); and

"(D)(i) 1 additional point on the basis of the criterion referred to in paragraph (1)(D)(i); or

"(ii) 2 additional points on the basis of the criterion referred to in paragraph (1)(D)(ii).

"(4) The Secretary shall distribute grant funds under this section so that to the extent practicable during each funding cycle—

"(A) 65 percent of the funds is first made available utilizing all of the criteria set forth in paragraph (1); and

"(B) 35 percent of the funds is then made available solely on the basis of the factors referred to in subparagraphs (C) and (D) of paragraph (1).

"(5)(A) For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall hold—

"(i) 3 competitions for grants under paragraph (1) for cities not described in the first sentence of subsection (i) (relating to small cities) and urban counties; and

"(ii) 3 competitions for cities described in the first sentence of subsection (i) (relating to small cities).

"(B) Each competition for grants described in any clause of subparagraph (A) shall be for an amount equal to the sum of—

"(i) approximately ⅓ of the funds available for such grants for the fiscal year;

"(ii) any funds available for such grants in any previous competition that are not awarded; and

"(iii) any funds available for such grants in any previous competition that are recaptured.".

(c) ADDITIONAL CONSIDERATION.—Notwithstanding any provision of section 119 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, for purposes of funding decisions made before October 15, 1986, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall give additional consideration, equal to the points otherwise awarded under section 119(d)(1)(C) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as amended by this section, in the case of a project to be located in a city or urban county to which no grant under section 119 of such Act was made and not terminated since October 15, 1984, if such project has met the criteria for preliminary approval in 3 consecutive funding cycles including the current cycle. If a city or urban county has submitted and has pending more than one application, the additional consideration provided by the preceding sentence shall be available only to the project in such city or urban county which received the largest number of points under section 119(d)(1)(C) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974.

(d) USE OF REPAID GRANT FUNDS.—Section 119(f) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In any case in which the project proposes the repayment to the applicant of the grant funds, such funds shall be made available by the applicant for economic development activities that are eligible activities under this section or section 104. The applicant shall annually provide the Secretary with a statement of the projected receipt and use of repaid grant funds during the next year together with a report acceptable to the Secretary of the use of such funds during the most recent proceeding full fiscal year of the applicant.".

(e) NONDISCRIMINATION.—Section 119(r) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended to read as follows:

"(r) In utilizing the discretion of the Secretary when providing assistance and applying selection criteria under this section, the Secretary may not discriminate against applications on the basis of (1) the type of activity involved, whether such activity is primarily housing, industrial, or commercial; or (2) the type of applicant, whether such applicant is a city or urban county.".

(f) REPORTS OF COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—

(1)(A) Not later than the expiration of the 6-month period following the date of enactment of this Act and every 3 years thereafter, the Comptroller General of the United States shall prepare and submit to the Congress a comprehensive report evaluating the eligibility standards and selection criteria applicable under section 119 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974.

(B) Such report shall evaluate in detail the standards and criteria specified in such section that measure the level or comparative degree of economic distress of cities and urban counties and the effect of the grants awarded on the basis of such standards and criteria on stimulating the maximum economic development activity.

(C) Such report shall also evaluate in detail the extent to which the economic and social data utilized by the Secretary in awarding grants under such section is current and accurate, and shall compare the data used by the Secretary with other available data. The Comptroller General shall make recommendations to the Congress on whether or not other data should be collected by the Federal Government in order to fairly and accurately distribute grants under such section based on the level or comparative degree of economic distress. The Comptroller General shall also make recommendations on whether or not existing data should be collected more frequently in order to ensure that timely data is used to evaluate grant applications under such section.

(2) Not later than the expiration of the 3-month period following the date of the final competition for grants for fiscal year 1986 under section 119 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, the Comptroller General of the United States shall prepare and submit to the Congress a comprehensive report describing the effect of the amendments made by this section on—

(A) the targeting of grant funds to cities and urban counties having the highest level or degree of economic distress;

(B) the distribution of grants funds among regions of the United States;

(C) the number and types of projects receiving grants;

(d) the per capita funding levels for each city, urban county, or identifiable community described in subsection (p) of such section 119, receiving assistance under such section 119; and

(E) the stimulation of the maximum economic development activity

(g) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall issue such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the amendments made by this section. Such regulations shall be published for comment in the Federal Register not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act. The provisions of subsection (d), and of section 119(d)(1)(D), section 119(d)(3), and section 119(d)(4) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(h) APPLICABILITY.—The amendments made by this section shall be applicable to the making of urban development action grants that have not received the preliminary approval of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development before the date on which final regulations issued by the Secretary under subsection (h) become effective. For the fiscal year in which the amendments made by this section become applicable, such amendments shall only apply with respect to the aggregate amount awarded for such grants on or after such effective date.

(i) FISCAL YEAR 1986 COMPETITIONS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall hold—

(1) 2 competitions for grants under section 119(d)(1) for cities not described in the first sentence of subsection (i) of such section and urban counties; and

(2) 1 competition for such grants for cities described in the first sentence of subsection (i) of such section, between April 15, 1986, and October 1, 1986.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114 and concur there in with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following: Each provision of law amended by Public Law 99-289, is amended by striking out "June 6, 1986" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "July 25, 1986".

URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACTION GRANTS IMPROVEMENTS

(a) PROJECT QUALITY CRITERIA.—Section 119(d)(1) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended—

(1) by inserting a dash before "(A)";

(2) by indenting subparagraphs (A) and (B) in the same manner as subparagraphs (C) and (D), as inserted by this subsection;

(3) in subparagraph (A), by striking out "as the primary criterion,";

(4) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (B); and

(5) by striking out subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(C) the following other criteria:

"(i) the extent to which the grant will stimulate economic recovery by leveraging private investment;

"(ii) the number of permanent jobs to be created and their relation to the amount of grant funds requested;

"(iii) the proportion of permanent jobs accessible to lower income persons and minorities, including persons who are unemployed;

"(iv) the extent to which the project will retain jobs that will be lost without the provision of a grant under this section;

"(v) the extent to which the project will relieve the most pressing employment or residential needs of the applicant by—

"(I) reemploying workers in a skill that has recently suffered a sharp increase in unemployment locally;

"(II) retraining recently unemployed residents in new skills;

"(III) providing training to increase the local pool of skilled labor; or

"(IV) producing decent housing for low- and moderate-income persons in cases where such housing is in severe shortage in the area of the applicant, except that an application shall be considered to produce housing for low- and moderate-income persons under this clause only if such application proposes that (a) not less than 51 percent of all funds available for the project shall be used for dwelling units and related facilities; and (b) not less than 30 percent of all funds used for dwelling units and related facilities shall be used for dwelling units to be occupied by persons of low and moderate income, or not less than 20 percent of all dwelling units made available to occupancy using such funds shall be occupied by persons of low and moderate income, whichever results in the occupancy of more dwelling units by persons of low and moderate income;

"(vi) the impact of the proposed activities on the fiscal base of the city or urban county and its relation to the amount of grant funds requested;

"(i) projects to be located within a city or urban county which did not receive a preliminary grant approval under this section during the 12-month period preceding the date on which applications are required to be submitted for the grant competition involved; and

"(ii) twice the amount of the additional consideration provided under clause (i) for projects to be located in cities or urban counties which did not receive a preliminary grant approval during the 24-month period preceding the date on which applications under this section are required to be submitted for the grant competition involved.

If a city or urban county has submitted and has pending more than one application, the additional consideration provided by subparagraph (D) of the preceding sentence shall be available only to the project in such city or urban county which received the highest number of points under subparagraph (C) of such sentence.".

"(b) SELECTION LIMITATIONS AND CRITERIA WEIGHT.—Section 119(d) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) The Secretary shall award points to each application as follows:

"(A) not more than 35 points on the basis of the criteria referred to in paragraph (1)(A);

"(B) not more than 35 points on the basis of the criteria referred to in paragraph (1)(B);

"(C) not more than 33 points on the basis of the criteria referred to in paragraph (1)(C); and

"(D)(i) 1 additional point on the basis of the criterion referred to in paragraph (1)(D)(i); or

"(ii) 2 additional points on the basis of the criterion referred to in paragraph (1)(D)(ii).

"(4) The Secretary shall distribute grant funds under this section so that to the extent practicable during each funding cycle—

"(A) 65 percent of the funds is first made available utilizing all of the criteria set forth in paragraph (1); and

"(B) 35 percent of the funds is then made available solely on the basis of the factors referred to in subparagraphs (C) and (D) of paragraph (1).

"(5)(A) For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall hold—

"(i) 3 competitions for grants under paragraph (1) for cities not described in the first sentence of subsection (1) (relating to small cities) and urban counties; and

"(ii) 3 competitions for cities described in the first sentence of subsection (i) (relating to small cities).

"(B) Each competition for grants described in any clause of subparagraph (A) shall for an amount equal to the sum of—

"(i) approximately ⅓ of the funds available for such grants for the fiscal year;

"(ii) any funds available for such grants in any previous competition that are not awarded; and

"(iii) any funds available for such grants in any previous competition that are recaptured.".

(c) USE OF REPAID GRANT FUNDS.—Section 119(f) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In any case in which the project proposes the repayment to the applicant of the grant funds, such funds shall be made available by the applicant for economic development activities that are eligible activities under this section or section 104. The applicant shall annually provide the Secretary with a statement of the projected receipt and use of repaid grant funds during the next year together with a report acceptable to the Secretary on the use of such funds during the most recent preceding full fiscal year of the applicant.".

(d) NONDISCRIMINATION.—Section 119(r) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended to read as follows:

"(r) In utilizing the discretion of the Secretary when providing assistance and applying selection criteria under this section, the Secretary may not discriminate against applications on the basis of (1) the type of activity involved, whether such activity is primarily housing, industrial, or commercial; or (2) the type of applicant, whether such applicant is a city or urban county.".

(e) REPORTS OF COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—

(1)(A) Not later than the expiration of the 6-month period following the date of enactment of this Act and every 3 years thereafter, the Comptroller General of the United States shall prepare and submit to the Congress a comprehensive report evaluating the eligibility standards and selection criteria applicable under section 119 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974.

(B) Such report shall evaluate in detail the standards and criteria specified in such section that measure the level or comparative degree of economic distress of cities and urban counties and the effect of the grants awarded on the basis of such standards and criteria on stimulating the maximum economic development activity.

(C) Such report shall also evaluate in detail the extent to which the economic and social data utilized by the Secretary in awarding grants under such section is current and accurate, and shall compare the data used by the Secretary with other available data. The Comptroller General shall make recommendations to the Congress on whether or not other data should be collected by the Federal Government in order to fairly and accurately distribute grants under such section based on the level or comparative degree of economic distress. The Comptroller General shall also make recommendations on whether or not existing data should be collected more frequently in order to ensure that timely data is used to evaluate grant applications under such section.

(2) Not later than the expiration of the 3-month period following the date of the final competition for grants for fiscal year 1986 under section 119 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, the Comptroller General of the United States shall prepare and submit to the Congress a comprehensive report describing the effect of the amendments made by this section on—

(A) the targeting of grant funds to cities and urban counties having the highest level or degree of economic distress;

(B) the distribution of grant funds among regions of the United States;

(C) the number and types of projects receiving grants;

(D) the per capita funding levels for each city, urban county, or identifiable community described in subsection (p) of such section 119, receiving assistance under such section 119; and

(E) the stimulation of the maximum economic development activity.

(f) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall issue such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the amendments made by this section. Such regulations shall be published for comment in the Federal Register not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act. The provisions of section 119(d)(1)(D), section 119(d)(3), and section 119(d)(4) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(g) APPLICABILITY.—The amendments made by this section shall be applicable to the making of urban development action grants that have not received the preliminary approval of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development before the date on which final regulations issued by the Secretary under subsection (f) become effective. For the fiscal year in which the amendments made by this section become applicable, such amendments shall only apply with respect to the aggregate amount awarded for such grants on or after such effective date.

(h) FISCAL YEAR 1986 COMPETITIONS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall hold—

(1) 2 competitions for grants under section 119(d)(1) for cities not described in the first sentence of subsection (i) of such section and urban counties; and

(2) 1 competition for such grants for cities described in the first sentence of subsection (i) of such section.

between April 15, 1986, and October 1, 1986.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition on this motion under rule XXVIII.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts opposed?

Mr. CONTE. To amendment 114, yes, I am opposed to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] will be recognized for 20 minutes, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this motion for two very basic reasons. One is that the Senate amendment contains an extension of the FHA insuring authority to July 25, 1986, and a revision in the criteria for UDAG.

Now, the House approved House Joint Resolution 652 to extend FHA insuring authority until September 30, 1986, today. The House by action in passing H.R. 1, the housing authorization bill, on June 12, adopted the UDAG selection criteria that is contained in this amendment.

I rise in opposition to this motion on behalf of my colleagues on the Banking Committee on both sides of the aisle who have been engaged in lengthy processes of getting a housing bill passed. We have been involved in this process now for almost 2 years, and after extensive hearings, extensive markup, even more extensive negotiations with our Republican colleagues and 5 days of consideration on the floor of the House, we were able to pass the first freestanding housing bill since 1980.

The action taken by the conferees on H.R. 4515 would shortcircuit this bipartisan effort at putting together a housing authorization bill.

If the House defeats this motion to recede and concur, I will offer a motion that the House insist on its disagreement to amendment 114, and I certainly urge my colleagues to defeat the pending motion.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GONZALEZ. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to make a point, very briefly.

I can see where, on occasion, there is a necessity to legislate on an appropriations bill, when the authorizing committees have not acted. In this instance the authorizing committee did indeed act in a very timely fashion.

The vote has been held. The bill is over in the Senate. I have been assured of the fact that the Senate will be entertaining a housing bill in the very immediate future. They just have to get rid of the tax bill.

So the reason we usually have for legislating in this manner on appropriations bills does not exist in this instance.

For that reason, I do hope we can vote against the acceptance of this amendment in disagreement.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, may I say that this represents one of the problems that we have. I would like to make some explanation to my colleagues. The Senate does not have a requirement on germaneness. When we go to conference, we end up dealing with all sorts of legislation added on that side. Out of 224 amendments added by the Senate, probably one-third of them contain legislation. It leaves us with a tough situation. In explanation of this provision here, I understand it was sought through this means to cause the Senate to come up with a housing bill. I am telling you that since it does not show on the surface. I can understand how our colleagues on the Housing Committee want them to bring up the housing bill in the other body.

In view of the statements that they have gotten an agreement now and it will come up in the Senate, I have no desire to press the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE].

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I, too, oppose the motion and support the gentleman from Texas, and the gentleman from Rhode Island. We should not include UDAG legislation in this supplemental appropriations bill.

Mr. Speaker, the Banking Committee is very familiar with the subject of UDAG selection criteria changes. It was hotly debated in both the subcommittee and full committee when we considered H.R. 1. Just 2 weeks ago the House debated the subject at length when the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER] offered an amendment to the housing bill that would have changed the allocation formula for UDAG grants. I was on the losing side of that vote and indeed I voted to discontinue UDAG's all together. My point is, however, that the House has worked its will in the appropriate way through authorizing legislation from the Banking Committee. The House has approved a housing bill and I am hopeful the other body will do so in the very near future. What is the rationale for allowing this one portion of our housing bill to be handled in an appropriation bill?

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I don't like UDAG's but that is beside the point. We fought that battle in the House and lost. We should continue to fight this out in the authorizing arena. If it looked like we were not going to get a housing bill, then the UDAG program could be considered in a separate bill. But let us keep authorizing provisions in the legislating committees.

Mr. Speaker, it seems that the outcome is not in doubt any more, but I, too, wanted to oppose the motion and support the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Rhode Island. We should not include UDAG legislation in this supplemental appropriations bill.

Mr. Speaker, the Banking Committee is very familiar with the subject of UDAG selection. As has been pointed out, the House did work its will here a couple of weeks ago in H.R. 1. Whereas I was on the losing side of that vote, I do think that we should preserve the prerogative of the authorizing committee, especially in areas like this where there is considerable amount of technical discussion that needs to be had.

So I oppose the motion and support the gentleman from Texas and congratulate him for offering it.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND].

Mr. BOLAND. The amendment apparently is giving considerable problems to Members on this side of the aisle and also on the other side of the aisle. I am willing to permit the House to work its own will.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was rejected.

Magnuson Clinical Center of the National Institutes of Health shall be available for payment of nurses at the rates of pay and with the schedule options and benefits afforded nurses by the Veterans Administration pursuant to 38 U.S.C. 4107.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 162 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following:

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISION

Funds made available for fiscal year 1986 and hereafter to the Warren G. Magnuson clinical Center of the National Institutes of Health shall be available for payment of nurses at the rates of pay and with schedule options and benefits authorized for the Veterans Administration pursuant to 38 U.S.C. 4107.

Mr. CONTE. (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

OFFICE OF COMMUNITY SERVICES

COMMUNITY SERVICES BLOCK GRANT

The Administrator of General Services is authorized and directed to convey to the District of Columbia, without cost, all rights, title, and interest in the property located at 425 Second Street, Northwest, in the District of Columbia.

For making a grant to the District of Columbia upon the completion of the conveyance to the District of Columbia of the property located at 425 Second Street, Northwest, in the District of Columbia, and upon the submission of a request to the Office of Community Services, Department of Health and Human Services, by the District of Columbia, $5,000,000 for the repair and renovation of such property for use as a shelter for the homeless.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following:

OFFICE OF COMMUNITY SERVICES

COMMUNITY SERVICES BLOCK GRANT

SECTION 1. (a) The Administrator of General Services shall assign the property described in subsection (e) to the Secretary of Health and Human Services for transfer of such property in accordance with this section to the District of Columbia for use as a shelter for homeless individuals in the District of Columbia.

(b) Immediately after the assignment of such property pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall transfer the title to such property without cost to District of Columbia for use as a shelter for homeless individuals.

(c) The deed of conveyance for the property described in subsection (e) shall provide that, if the District of Columbia sells, leases, or otherwise transfers such property to any other person or agency, a fraction of the proceeds of such sale, lease, or transfer (as determined under subsection (d)) may be retained by the District of Columbia for use in programs providing shelter and related services for homeless individuals in the District of Columbia and the remainder of such proceeds shall be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury and deposited as miscellaneous receipts of the United States.

Any sale, lease, or other transfer pursuant to this subsection shall be made after public advertising for bids or by other means designed to secure full and open competition.

(d) The fraction of such proceeds which may be retained by the District of Columbia for use in programs providing shelter and related services for homeless individuals in the District of Columbia shall be determined by dividing—

(1) the number of months that such property is used as a shelter for homeless individuals in the District of Columbia pursuant to this section prior to such sale, lease, or transfer; by except that such fraction shall not be greater than one.

(e) The property to which this section applies is the property located at 425 Second Street, Northwest, in the District of Columbia, more fully described as follows:

All that parcel situated in the Northwest quadrant of the City of Washington, District of Columbia, and being a portion of District of Columbia Square Number 571, containing in their entirety former lots numbered 9 through 18, inclusive, and 22 through 26, inclusive, as recorded in Liber B, Folio 160 of the Records of the Office of the Surveyor for the District of Columbia, and lots 45 through 51 inclusive, as recorded in Liber 19, Folio 118 of the Records of the Office of the Surveyor for the District of Columbia; such land now known for purposes of assessment as Lot 820, and containing 1.16 acres of land, more or less; and more particularly described in a deed between the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the United States of America, dated July 30, 1947, and recorded in Liber 8761, Folio 79 of the Land Records of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. For making a grant to the District of Columbia upon the completion of the conveyance to the District of Columbia of the property located at 425 Second Street, Northwest, in the District of Columbia, in accordance with section 1 and upon the submission of a request to the Office of Community Services, Department of Health and Human Services, by the District of Columbia, $1,500,000 for the repair and renovation of such property for use as a shelter for the homeless.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SECTION 1. (a) Effective October 1, 1985, the allowance for administrative and clerical assistance of each Senator from the State of Alabama is increased to that allowed Senators from States having a population of four million but less than five million, the population of said State having exceeded four million inhabitants.

(b) Effective October 1, 1985, the allowance for administrative and clerical assistance of each Senator from the State of Florida is increased to that allowed Senators from States having a population of eleven million but less than twelve million, the population of said State having exceeded eleven million inhabitants.

SEC. 2. (a) Subsection (a) of section 110 of Public Law 97-12 (2 U.S.C. 58(a)) is amended by—

(1) inserting "(1)" after "(a)"; and

(2) striking out the last three sentences of such subsection and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2)(A) Each Senator, at his election, may, during any fiscal year (but not earlier than July 1, thereof) transfer from such Senator's clerk hire allowance to his Official Office Expense Account such amounts as the Senator shall determine, but not in excess of the balance as of the end of the month which precedes the month in which the transfer is made. Any amount so transferred to a Senator's Official Office Expense Account shall be available for expenses incurred during the calendar year in which occurred the close of the fiscal year in which the transfer is made. Each Senator electing to make such a transfer shall advise the Senate Disbursing Office in writing, not later than January 15 of the calendar year immediately following the calendar year in which occurs the close of the fiscal year in which the transfer is to be made, and such transfer shall be made on such date (but not earlier than July 1, nor later than December 31, of the calendar year in which the close of such fiscal year occurs) as may be specified by the Senator.

"(B) Each Senator, at his election, may, during any calendar year (but not earlier than July 1 thereof) transfer from such Senator's Official Office Expense Account to his clerk hire allowance such amounts as the Senator shall determine, but not in excess of the balance as of the end of the month which precedes the month in which the transfer is made. Any amount so transferred to a Senator's clerk hire allowance during any calendar year shall be available for expenses incurred during the fiscal year which ends during the calendar year in which the transfer is made. Each Senator electing to make such a transfer shall advise the Senate Disbursing Office in writing, not later than September 30 of the calendar year in which the transfer is to be made, and such transfer shall be made on such date (but not earlier than July 1 of such calendar year) as may be specified by the Senator.".

(b) Subsection (b) of section 110 of Public Law 97-12 is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Transfer of funds by a Senator under subsection (a) of this section shall be made between (1) the allowance of such Senator in the account (which is within the appropriation account under the headings 'SENATE' and 'Salaries, Officers and Employees') for 'Administrative, Clerical, and Legislative Assistance to Senators', and (2) such Senator's Senatorial Office Expense Account within the appropriation account for 'Miscellaneous Items' under the heading 'SENATE'.".

(c) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall be effective in the case of elections made with respect to transfers of funds to be available for expenses incurred after December 31, 1984.

SEC. 3. The Chairman of the Majority or Minority Conference Committee of the Senate may, during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, at his election, transfer not more than $30,000 from the appropriation account for salaries for the Conference of the Majority and the Conference of the Minority of the Senate, to the account, within the contingent fund of the Senate, from which expenses are payable under section 120 of Public Law 97-51 (2 U.S.C. 61g-6). Any transfer of funds under authority of the preceding sentence shall be made at such time or times as such chairman shall specify in writing to the Senate Disbursing Office. Any funds so transferred by the chairman of the Majority or Minority Conference Committee shall be available for expenditure by such committee in like manner and for the same purposes as are other moneys which are available for expenditure by such committee from the account, within the contingent fund of the Senate, from which expenses are payable under section 120 of Public Law 97-51 (2 U.S.C. 61g-6).

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 176 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: Delete the second full sentence on page 66 of the Senate engrossed amendments.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask if someone could explain to me the nature of this amendment; it is not clear in the report what the amendment is.

Can someone explain to me what that is?

I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] for an explanation.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, this is simply some small housekeeping items over on the Senate side.

Mr. WALKER. Such as?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WHITTEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, my notes say that this deletes duplicated language in the Senate housekeeping provisions.

Mr. CONTE. It authorizes some transfers between their accounts; it is strictly technical.

Mr. WALKER. OK. It is strictly technical; there is no substantive involvement?

Mr. CONTE. No; it is just housekeeping.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 179: Page 27, after line 16, insert:

CAPITOL POLICE

CAPITOL POLICE BOARD

For an additional amount for the "Capitol Police Board", $13,000,000, to remain available until expended, to implement an improved security plan for the United States Capitol, after such plan shall have been approved by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, the Senate Committee on Appropriations, the House Committee on Appropriations, the House Committee on Public Works, and the House Committee on Administration: Provided, That such Board is authorized to transfer to the Architect of the Capitol so much of such funds as may be necessary to enable the Architect of the Capitol to carry out appropriate projects to implement such plan, and the Architect of the Capitol is authorized to obligate and expend the funds so transferred to him to carry out contracts entered into without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 179 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

CAPITOL POLICE

CAPITOL POLICE BOARD

For an additional amount for the "Capitol Police Board", $13,000,000, to remain available until expended, to implement an improved security plan for the United States Capitol, after such plan shall have been approved by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, the Senate Committee on Appropriations, the House Committee on Appropriations, the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation, and the Committee on House Administration: Provided, That upon approval of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations, such Board is authorized to transfer to the Architect of the Capitol so much of such funds as may be necessary to enable the Architect of the Capitol to carry out appropriate projects to implement such plan, and the Architect of the Capitol is authorized to obligate and expend the funds so transferred to him to carry out contracts entered into without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended: Provided further, That before any such transfer of funds to the Architect of the Capitol takes place, the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations shall review and approve detailed documentation describing the scope, cost and construction schedule of the work to be accomplished by the transfer of funds.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so to inquire on this amendment whether or not the funding that we have put in here is in fact the funding to build the fence around the Capitol Building?

I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] for his response.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, there is $13 million in the conference report but it was made very, very clear, while the conferees are including these funds in the bill, we are not mandating which security plan will be implemented. Questions about the details such as, "Will there be a fence around the Capitol or not?", are not resolved at all in this bill. Those questions will be dealt with by the appropriate authorizing committees and then, and only then, the Appropriations Committee will review the scope and cost estimates for approval, revision, or disapproval.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I thank the gentleman but my problem comes from this: It is my understanding that the leadership has already agreed upon the very security plan that we are discussing here. That the amount of money for that security plan included $13 million to build a fence around the Capitol Building.

All of a sudden, the Appropriations Committee comes forward with a request for $13 million. Now there is an awfully suspicious hookup that takes place in one's mind when we know that there has been approval of a plan and this funding exactly matches what is said is needed to implement that plan.

Mr. CONTE. If the gentleman will yield further, if the gentleman will look at page 68 of the conference report, it says:

* * * to remain available until expended, to implement an improved security plan for the U.S. Capitol, after such plan shall have been approved by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, the Senate Committee on Appropriations, the House Committee on Appropriations, the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation, and the Committee on House Administration.

So it has to be approved by all of those panels, and as one, as the chairman of that legislative committee knows, as one who is very, very skeptical about going along with a fence around this Capitol, I would not agree with that unless I was sure that it was going to go through the proper process.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I appreciate that but the fact is, it seems to me that with this $13 million we lose control over the money in the process because once those people have approved it, it says nothing about having to come to the House of Representatives again or to the Senate for approval. Once all of those people have signed off, there is enough money here to implement the plan that we have all heard about and it appears to me as though we are determining the amount of money to be spent here with no further approval needed by either the House or the other body in order to bring about that plan after these committees have signed off.

So you are putting the signoff authority in the hands of a committee rather than in the Houses of the Congress. That gives this gentleman some concern.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation of objection I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FAZIO. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate the comments made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. We clearly do not make the final decision here today. In fact, I am a skeptic about the fencing of the Capitol grounds as well. We are in fact informed that the total security package being discussed would require a $22 million expenditure. So this is certainly not all that would be required if we went with most, if not all, of the suggestions that have been made by one or another entity as to how we would improve security here in the Capitol.

I want to call the Members' attention to the fact that there is no mention in this amendment of the accompanying joint statement of a fence or kiosks or any other component of the plan that has been discussed by the whips. We really do retain the authority of the Congress in the normal authorizing and appropriating committees by the language that was agreed to in conference.

I would reassure the gentleman that this is not the last stop. The committees of jurisdiction will retain their authority.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I thank the gentleman but is this gentleman not correct that if you are not one of the Members privileged to sit on the Senate Committee on Appropriations, the House Committee on Appropriations, the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation or the Committee on House Administration, once we have approved this language, you have lost effectively your vote in whether or not we implement a security plan. That those people are going to make the decision and from now on in no one in the House is going to have any say in the process.

We are effectively taking the jurisdiction away from Congress and putting it in the hands of a few committees of Congress to make this determination. Is that not a correct interpretation of this?

Mr. FAZIO. If the gentleman will yield, I think only you could correctly interpret this is to say that the Congress is supportive of additional security improvements in the Capitol area. We have not agreed yet within the normal process as to what those security improvements should be and we, therefore, give endorsement to the whips in terms of making improvements, but this does not sign off on any specific approach. That will be done, as I indicate, by the authorizing committees of jurisdiction and, as Mr. CONTE has said, a very skeptical Appropriations Committee.

Mr. WALKER. But we are giving a signoff to these committees to make that determination rather than allowing the House to make the determination.

Mr. FAZIO. Clearly these committees of jurisdiction have the most to say about the subject area, and have spent the most time studying it thus far. I think they can represent the views of the body very well.

Mr. WALKER. I agree with the gentleman on that, the problem being that we are turning over the final decision now to these committees with this determination. We are not going to allow the House Members to make that final determination. So that if you are not on one of these committees and there is a decision made to build a fence, and these committees sign off on that by a majority vote in each of these committees, the House will have lost its ability to have any say in this if we approve this amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. FAZIO. If the gentleman will yield further, I am not prepared to agree with the gentleman because, as I indicated earlier, it may well be that the cost of the security improvements in the Capitol will be far beyond this $13 million figure. The House retains its authority in the context of any additional funds that would be required. Certainly those would come before the body for approval I do not think we know for certain what recommendations will come before these authorizing and appropriating committees or what they will produce in terms of an outcome.

Mr. WALKER. Why was the $13 million figure picked? That just happens to be the figure that I have seen speculated about that would be the cost to build the fence. Why was $13 million used when that just happens to be that projected cost?

Mr. FAZIO. I would indicate that the fence is not expected to cost $13 million. As I understand it, that would cost well below that. In fact, that is why the next amendment which goes to the study done by the Architect of the Capitol is so important because that study may give us cost information on these items. That will help guide us in the future.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

Sections 4321 through 4335 inclusive, and applicable regulations".

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follow:

Senate amendment No. 187: Page 28, line 26, after "contracts" insert ": Provided, That, at a minimum, the air traffic control on-board employment level shall be 14,480 by September 30, 1986".

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 187 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: ": Provided further, That, at a minimum, the air traffic control on-board employment level shall be 14,480 by September 30, 1986".

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN.]

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 192: Page 29, strike out lines 1 to 6.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 192 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows:

Restore the matter stricken, amended to read as follows:

RELATED AGENCY

PANAMA CANAL COMMISSION

OPERATING EXPENSES

For an additional amount for "Panama Canal Commission, Operating expenses", $18,300,000, of which $17,181,000 may be available either for operating expenses or for vessel accident claims as authorized by Public Law 99-209, and $1,119,000 shall be available for payment to the Republic of Panama, pursuant to article XIII, paragraph 4(c) of the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 199: Page 30, after line 4, insert:

SEC. 4. None of the funds appropriated by this Act or any other Act shall be used to implement temporary Internal Revenue Service Regulation section 1.274-5T or section 1.274-6T or any other regulation issued reaching the same result as, or a result to, such temporary regulations.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 199.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand that the gentlewoman is reserving the right to object?

Ms. FIEDLER. Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to have the motion read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk completed the reading of the motion.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee to please make a full explanation to the House on the details of this particular issue.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk has completed the reading of the motion.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I have moved that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 199. As I pointed out earlier, we have to face many legislative provisions on the Senate side, and occasionally the only way to get them out is to bring them back in true disagreement.

We are opposed to this amendment, the Ways and Means Committee is opposed to it, but under the Senate rules they could add it. So we brought it back here so the Members could help us defeat it.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Speaker, continuing to reserve the right to object, would the chairman make an explanation of the specific details of the disagreement with the Senate?

Mr. WHITTEN. What we do with the Senate amendment, which is legislation, is agree to disagree with them on it, and we brought it back so the Members could help us vote it down, take it out.

Ms. FIEDLER. This deals with the issue of comtemporaneous recordkeeping on the part of the IRS; is that not correct?

Mr. WHITTEN. That is correct.

Ms. FIEDLER. And if the House were to insist upon its position, is it not true then that that contemporaneous recordkeeping which the House voted overwhelmingly in opposition to would be permitted to be enacted into law in the event that it were insisted upon?

Mr. WHITTEN. I did not understand the gentlewoman, if I may ask.

Ms. FIEDLER. I am sorry; we are having a mutual problem here. Is it not true that in the event the House supported the chairman's motion, the contemporaneous recordkeeping which is required by this amendment would be put into effect as opposed to receding to the Senate's position, which would mean that that no longer would be required by the IRS?

Mr. WHITTEN. Let me say that I am not too familiar with the legislation, but the amendment is legislation, and we strike the amendment, so whatever the law is now would continue, since we strike this amendment, which would change it, so we ask that the Members help us defeat it.

Under our rules, this is against the rules; under the Senate rules, it is not. The only way we can get it out is to bring it back and vote it down. So my motion was to strike it, which leaves the existing law as it is.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Speaker, continuing to reserve the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman will be aware that the time is controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. FIEDLER].

Ms. FIEDLER. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am quite concerned about this particular provision, this amendment, because I am concerned about the fact that we will require extensive recordkeeping on the part of the American citizens by the IRS even though the House voted overwhelmingly against this particular provision when it came to the House, and therefore, I am concerned about it being permitted to move into law when there has been an overwhelming statement against it, plus the overwhelming response from the public regarding this contemporaneous recordkeeping requirement. Therefore, I would like to have the opportunity to prevent this from becoming permanent law, since there appears to be not only strong opposition on the part of the House Members, but also strong opposition on the part of the citizenry of the country.

Mr. WHITTEN. If the gentlewoman will yield, I can appreciate her feelings in the matter, but that is another thing. What we have here is the Senate provision, and under the rules of the House, "* * * no bill or joint resolution carrying a tax or tariff measure shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction * * *." That clearly hits this.

The Senate provision will be stricken if my motion is approved. I would not attempt to interpret what the present law is. I agree with the gentlewoman, and I do not want any changes made in the direction which she is opposed to.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield,

Ms. FIEDLER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman correctly pointed out that when this matter was before the House, at the time that the tax bill was considered, the House did overwhelmingly take the position that the gentlewoman says that it took.

As it happens, that matter is before the Senate now in the tax bill, and it is my understanding that the Committee on Ways and Means has demanded—not asked, but demanded—that the conferees strike this out so that they can consider it as a part of the conference on the tax bill.

As of just a few moments ago, in response to the housing question, where the legislative committee said that it was considering that matter, the Appropriations Committee withdrew its intervention; so is the Appropriations Committee attempting to withdraw its intervention in this instance as well to permit the legislative committee to attack this problem. And that is the reason that the chairman is attempting to carry out that action.

Ms. FIEDLER. Is it the gentleman's understanding then that there will be an opportunity for the House to work its will, which is overwhelmingly in opposition to this particular provision of the law, sometime in the near future?

Mr. YATES. The gentlewoman knows as well as I that Members have nothing to say about individual matters. The Ways and Means Committee can make that a matter for our consideration by singling it out, but ordinarily neither the gentlewoman nor I nor any Member of the House can do anything but accept what the Ways and Means Committee gives us as a package in the whole tax bill.

Ms. FIEDLER. I would simply like to say that were it not for the fact that this would hold up the entire bill, I would object, but I will not object, because of the implications on the balance of this particular bill. I would simply urge those Members who are making decisions on this issue not to violate the intent of the House on this issue when the opportunity comes up for a real vote on it.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to compliment the gentlewoman from California (Ms. FIEDLER) for her graciousness in not asking for a record vote. If the motion was rejected, it would have really held up the whole supplement. As you heard earlier, they have curtailed civil jury duties in the Federal courts. I guess that is good for some defendants, but not the plaintiffs. Many other agencies and programs require immediate attention.

Let me just suggest to the gentlewoman from California that if the Committee on Ways and Means fails to act on this issue, she has the opportunity to offer a similar amendment to the Treasury-Postal Service appropriations bill soon after the Fourth of July recess. The House can work its will at that time. I agree with the gentlewoman from California on this issue.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], on the Committee on Ways and Means, would have objected to this had we tried to take it. We assured him that we were going to move to strike it, which we have done.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 216: Page 31, strike out lines 6 to 9.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 216 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken by said amendment insert the following:

SEC. 203. None of the funds in this Act, or any other Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1986, may be used to implement changes to OMB Circular A-21 made subsequent to February 11, 1986: Provided, That this provision shall expire 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the last amendment in disagreement.

SEC. 206. Notwithstanding section 514 of Public Law 99-178, amounts appropriated by that Act for Federal financial assistance to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands shall be available, as would have been available had the Compact of Free Association Act (Public Law 99-239) not been enacted, until alternative funding is available under the terms of the Compact of Free Association Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-239). Thereafter, except insofar as the Compact of Free Association Act otherwise provides, such amounts shall be available only for the Republic of Palau, but only in amounts that such Republic would have received had the Compact of Free Association Act of 1985 not been enacted.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 218 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following:

SEC. 207. Notwithstanding section 514 of Public Law 99-178, amounts appropriated by that Act for Federal financial assistance to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands shall be available, as would have been available had the Compact of Free Association Act (Public Law 99-239) not been enacted, until alternative funding is available under the terms of the Compact of Free Association Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-239). Thereafter, except insofar as the Compact of Free Association Act otherwise provides, such amounts shall be available only for the Republic of Palau, but only in amounts that such Republic would have received had the Compact of Free Association Act of 1985 not been enacted.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the conference report and the several motions was laid on the table.

FOUR NEW DEFERRALS OF BUDGET AUTHORITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 99-238)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

ANNUAL REPORT OF NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION, 1985—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Science and Technology:

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be permitted 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks and to include therein extraneous material on, Senate Joint Resolution 365, which passed the House today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

CARDINAL OBANDO Y BRAVO IS THE REAL LEADER IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. MARLENEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, I'd like a recent editorial from the Washington Post written by Cardinal Obando Bravo to appear at this point in the RECORD.

Most Americans do not know who Obando Bravo is. He is Catholic. He is a cardinal. He is head of the Catholic Church in Nicaragua. He is the real leader of the majority of people in Nicaragua. The Marxist Sandinistas call him a Somocista, a rightwing. Somoza called him a Communist. The people call him leader.

Cardinal Obando Bravo opposes the Sandinistas allowing the Soviet Union and Cuba to use his country as base from which to terrorize, destabilize and export, and I quote, "a revolution without borders." He knows what the Sandinistas want to do to his country and he wants everyone else to know too.

It shouldn't surprise anyone, then, that the Sandinistas have confiscated the cardinal's Catholic newspaper, banned him from television, and clamped down on his travels and talks. Mr. Speaker, the Catholic Church has taken a lead in opposing the Marxist totalitarianism in Nicaragua. That opposition is lead by Cardinal Obando Bravo.

Mr. Speaker, you should recognize that. The Maryknoll nuns should recognize that. U.S. church groups should recognize that. Liberation theology is a fraud exploited by the Marxists for their totalitarian propaganda purposes.

Ortega may be the official leader of the Marxist Communists, but Cardinal Obando Bravo speaks for Nicaraguan people.

NICARAGUA: THE SANDINISTAS HAVE "GAGGED AND BOUND" US

(By Miguel Obando y Bravo)

Your message asking me for an article arrived on Sunday, April 13, just as I finished celebrating Mass, and my first decision was not to grant your request. I must not confuse my pastoral mission with others, however worthy, such as politics or journalism, which are different from the mission that our Lord has entrusted to me. But, I am not obligated to keep silent either. As a man, as a citizen, as a Christian and even as a bishop, I have certain duties that I must fulfill and these duties compel me to grant your request.

In the Mass I just celebrated, I had to announce, with great sorrow, that some of the offices of the Curia, occupied by the State Security Police since October 1985, had been confiscated by government order, despite the fact that they were built on land occupied by the Apostolic Nunciature.

In these offices there was a small printing press donated by the German Bishops' Conference, which was used to print our bulletin "Iglesia," a strictly intra-ecclesiastical publication. Both the press and the bulletin were seized by the State Security Police, along with all the files, including baptismal records and my own personal seal.

During the Mass, I read the pastoral letter which we, the bishops of Nicaragua, had written for Holy Week. The pulpit was now our only means of disseminating information, because the letter was totally censored and pulled from the pages of the newspaper La Prensa, the only private newspaper in the country, which attempted to publish it, but in vain. We believe that the reason for the censorship was that for the second time we called all Nicaraguans to reconciliation and dialogue as the only way to peace.

It was also announced that the Sunday bulletin with the prayers and texts for the day would not be available because it was confiscated and that my Sunday address would not appear in La Prensa, which, under the heading "The Voice of Our Pastor," had been published for many years in that newspaper, because it too had been censored, despite the special care taken to exclude from it anything that could serve as the remotest excuse for censorship.

"Radio Catolico," the only Catholic radio station had been closed by the State several months earlier. It was at this point, when the Church was gagged and bound, that your request arrived.

The reading for the day, taken from the Acts of the Apostles, was about an incident that pricked my conscience. The Sanhedrin sent for Peter and John, intending to force them into silence. "But Peter and John said to them in reply: 'Is it right in God's eyes for us to obey you rather than God? Judge for yourselves. We cannot possibly give up speaking of things we have seen and heard' " (Acts 4:18-20).

I felt then that I ought to tell the truth and speak as a prophet speaks, even at the risk of being a "voice that crieth in the wilderness." I would explain to those that have ears to hear the sensitive situation of our Church and the serious danger we place ourselves in simply by speaking out.

I am reminded of the incident related in the 22nd chapter of Matthew: "Then the Pharisees went away and agreed on a plan to trap him in his own words." The method they chose was to appeal hypocritically to His spiritual authority, saying: "Master, you are an honest man, we know; you teach in all honesty the way of life that God requires. . . . Give us your ruling on this: are we or are we not permitted to pay taxes to the Roman emperor?" Jesus was aware of their malicious intention and said to them: "You hypocrites! Why are you trying to catch me out?"

History repeats itself, and this is the situation of the Nicaraguan Bishops, a situation that we denounced in our recent pastoral letter. An appeal is made to our moral authority and to our position as spiritual leaders of the people. We are asked to make a statement on an extremely sensitive political matter, but the real objective is not to seek moral guidance, but rather to use our statement to manipulate opinion.

If Jesus had answered that taxes should be paid to Caesar, He would have become a collaborator of the occupying Roman imperialists. If He had answered no, he would have become a criminal and an agitator who violated the laws of the land. If He had not answered at all, He would have lost His authority in the eyes of the people.

We are asked to issue a statement against U.S. aid to the insurgents. The state-controlled communications media, the organizations of the masses in the service of the system and their allies in the so-called People's Church and the minister of Foreign Affairs, Father Miguel d'Escoto, are all clamoring for our statement. But, as I mentioned, it is not moral guidance that is sought, since on several occasions our Conference of Bishops has already stated that it was against any outside interference, whether by the United States or the Soviet Union. (Pastoral letter of April 22, 1984). The intention is to use the statement to manipulate.

While no effort was spared in suppressing our earlier statements, this statement would be given international publicity. Not for the faithful—but for the U.S. Congress. But we are not pastors to the Congress of the United States.

If we were to support military aid to the insurgents, we would be persecuted as traitors. If we opposed aid, we would be accused of taking sides, which would automatically disqualify us as pastors to all of the people. If we remain silent, our silence would be considered guilty, the silence of complicity.

It can be argued that the U.S. Conference of Bishops has more than once issued statements on political matters. But there is one big difference: the U.S. bishops' statements are made freely, they are addressed to their own people and their purpose is to provide moral guidance. They can make such statements in complete freedom, and they can give their reasons, with full access to the communications media. Their words are not censored, twisted or distorted. But above all, their statements do not make them criminals and traitors to their country.

In Nicaragua any dissident from the Sandinista cause can be placed outside the law through an ingenious distortion of the truth:

The government, with all the media under its control, has taken great pains to convince the outside world that what is happening is essentially a direct attack by the United States on our country. That there is a war, open or covert, between the two countries, and, consequently, any form of assistance to the enemy, whether material or moral, is punishable by law.

Along the same lines, and with equal insistence, it rejects both the idea that an East-West conflict has made of our country a disposable card, a pawn in the game between the superpowers, and the reality of a civil war: an enormous number of Nicaraguans oppose with all their might the turn taken by a revolution that has betrayed the hopes of the Nicaraguan people and even its own promises.

To accept the reality of an East-West conflict would be to admit that the Sandinistas are just as much the tools of Soviet interests as the insurgent forces are of the United States. If this is accepted, aid from the one is equally as deplorable as aid from the other. It would necessitate the withdrawal of the Soviet and Cuban advisors, as well as the withdrawal of all U.S. military aid.

If the reality of an internal conflict between Nicaraguans is admitted, the conclusion could not be avoided that the insurgent dissidents are now in the same position that the Sandinistas themselves once occupied, and, consequently, that they have the same right that the Sandinistas had to seek aid from other nations, which they in fact did request and obtain in order to fight a terrible dictatorship.

To accept this would mean giving the insurgents the title of "rebels," a title that the Sandinistas proudly gave to themselves in former days.

The only possible argument against this is that unlike the Somozan dictatorship, which the Nicaraguan people fought almost unanimously, this is a democratic government, legitimately constituted, which places the interests of the Nicaraguan people above any ideological struggle or international cause, seeks the welfare and peace of the people and enjoys the support of an overwhelming majority.

Unfortunately, this is not true either. To accept this as the indisputable truth is to ignore the mass exodus of the Miskito Indians, who, on numerous occasions, fled in the thousands, accompanied by their bishop, Salvador Schlaeffer. It is also to ignore the departure of tens of thousands of Nicaraguan men and women of every age, profession, economic status and political persuasion. It is to ignore that many of those who are leaders or participants in the counter-revolution were once leaders or members of the Sandinista front or were ministers in the Sandinista government. It is to ignore the lack of any justification for the most terrible violation of freedom of the press and of speech in the history of our country. It is to ignore the progressive and suffocating restriction of public liberties, under the cover of an interminable national emergency law and the continual violation of human rights. It is to ignore the expulsion of priests and the mass exodus of young people eligible for military service . . . None of this is true of a government that has the sympathy and general support of the people.

And this is what the Nicaraguan bishops wish to state:

"It is urgent and essential that the Nicaraguan people, free of foreign interference or ideologies, find a way out of the situation of conflict that our country is experiencing.

"We reaffirm today, with renewed emphasis, what we said in our pastoral letter on Easter Sunday, April 22, 1984:

"Foreign powers are taking advantage of our situation to promote economic and ideological exploitation. They view us as adjuncts to their own power, without respect for our persons, our history, our culture and our right to determine our own destiny.

"Consequently, most of the Nicaraguan people live in fear and are uncertain about the future. They feel deeply frustrated. They cry out for peace and freedom, but their voices go unheard, drowned out by militaristic propaganda on every side.

"We feel that any form of assistance, regardless of the source, which causes the destruction, suffering and death of our families, or which sows hatred and discord among the Nicaraguan people is reprehensible. To choose annihilation of the enemy as the only possible way to peace is inevitably to choose war."

The Church proposes reconciliation through dialogue as the only real solution, the only way to peace, and maintains, in the words of His Holiness John Paul II, in his visit to El Salvador in March 1983, that this dialogue ". . . is not a delaying tactic to strengthen positions prior to continuing a fight, but rather a sincere effort to respond, by seeking appropriate solutions to the anxiety, the pain, the weariness and the fatigue of the many who yearn for peace. The many who wish to live, to rise again from the ashes, to seek warmth in the smiles of children, free from terror and in a climate of democratic cooperation."

This is the text that was censored by the Sandinista government.

We are asked to issue a statement against aid, the Church and the position of our Conference of Bishops, which is trying to guide the Church through turbulent waters, more by the spirit than by the natural sciences and politics of man, which do not seem to hold any solution for such difficult problems. We are in a difficult situation, but we place our faith and trust in the Lord Jesus, the Prince of Peace and the Lord of History.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LUKEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, I was called away on congressional business on Tuesday, June 24, but had I been here, I would have voted "aye" to H.R. 4060, the bill that requires COLA payments to Federal retirees to be made irrespective of any other legislation.

I was a cosponsor of this bill because I felt it was unreasonable that Social Security COLA's were maintained under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act, while Federal and postal employees were not given the same protection. Such disparate treatment of private sector versus civil service retirees defies any rational explanation and is patently unfair. H.R. 4060 has my full support.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. TORRES] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I was not present for rollcall vote 160 on Thursday, June 12, 1986. Had I been present on the House floor, I would have cast a "yea" vote for approval of the House Journal of Wednesday, June 11.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to advise my colleagues that I have asked for a special order tomorrow to discuss our recent meeting with Mexican parliamentarians.

We have by law, by the way, only two of these between the United States and another country, with Canada and with Mexico.

We meet once a year, once in Mexico and once in the United States. We try to meet away from the capital cities so that we may be away from the pressures and the responsibilities that we have here.

This last meeting was the 26th consecutive meeting and we held it in Colorado Springs, CO. It was a very successful meeting with representatives from all the parties in the Mexican Government and, of course, here from our two parties, there was representation from the Senate and from the House.

We have done in the years that I have served as a member of this parliamentary or interparliamentary group, we have done yeoman work, if I might say so myself.

Some of the problems that have existed between Mexico and the United States that were very serious problems were first mentioned at one of these meetings, the Colorado salinity problem that was eventually resolved, the Chamizal question that eventually became a treaty between our two countries, the salinity of the Lower Rio Grande in my adjacent area was resolved, or the initiation of the resolution was made at this meeting.

I would like to mention this one specifically because it shows how two nations working together with good will and with frankness and in a direct and forceful manner can solve problems that at other times could not be solved in any other nation or adjoining nations.

There was a stream coming from the Mexican side of the river into the Rio Grande with millions of cubic feet of salt. It was ruining the water below that entry point to everyone down river on the Rio Grande. The solution that was arrived at by the engineers was that there be a dam placed before the water reached the Rio Grande River and that there be a channel built some 70 miles to the Gulf of Mexico on Mexican soil. It was paid for one-half by the Government of Mexico, one-fourth by the IBWC, the International Boundary and Water Commission, which would have been, of course, U.S. taxpayers' money, and the other fourth was paid by the water users on the United States side of the river below the dam.

This is what you can do. The solution was solely on the territory of one country. The benefit would be divided, one-half to the two countries and it was paid for one-half by one country and one-fourth by our country and one-fourth by the users.

We had at this meeting in Colorado discussions, of course, on various and sundry matters affecting our two countries.

One of the things that I personally derived from the discussions, both public and private, with our Mexican colleagues, and this I say so only as myself, speaking for no one but myself, they have tremendous problems in Mexico at this time, fiscal problems, budgetary problems. They have a tremendous external debt.

I would commend President de la Madrid for some of the steps which he has taken, austerity measures, in spite of potential harm to the very poor in Mexico, but steps that he was forced to take by imposition from the IMF or other areas to whom they owe their external debt; but the clear message that I perceived from our Mexican colleagues is that at this point in time they need friends. They need friends who can understand their plight, can understand their political situation and can understand their fiscal situation and that it is well and good for friends to be frank with each other, but that it is not a time to criticize or to say, "If you don't do this, or you don't do that, then your system is going to fail or any assistance we could give you won't be triggered."

I sort of sympathize with them that if we would look back to our country and to our time of need, let us say to a time when I can vaguely, but nontheless remember, the Great Depression, and if our friends from across the seas in other countries would have started criticizing President Roosevelt and saying, "No, that is the wrong approach," or, "No, you have to cut here or you have to cut there or you have possibly corruption in your Government," that is not the time that you appreciate that coming from a good friend.

So they looked annoyed with some of the actions taken in our country and they sort of—not questioned, because they know of our friendship, they never questioned our friendship, but they asked, "Why now, bringing out things perhaps if you had done earlier, it would have made us work better toward achieving this goal."

So that is one of the areas that we have to be very cautious in, because the problems of Mexico where I live become our problems and a failure of any system or a failure in any area of the economic sectors of Mexico right away impacts on our side of the border.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for letting me interrupt him.

The only thing that motivates me is that I want to thank the gentleman for his remarks. I have gotten up on two previous occasions on the House floor and have deplored the counterproductive statements that have been made by highly placed administrative officials, in which the reputation and the integrity of the head of state of the Mexican Government, President de la Madrid, has been questioned.

I deplored it very much because it is a slander. It is a libel.

President de la Madrid, as we know from the beginning, has earned a reputation of being one of the most soberminded and honest of administrators.

I just think that what the gentleman is saying is so important that I want to go on record as reinforcing and reaffirming and backing the gentleman up in the statements he is making. They are very valuable and I hope that many of our Members if they are not listening to us on the closed circuit, will read the RECORD tomorrow because what has happened here by these administrative badly advised spokesmen has been very, very detrimental to our relationships, not only with Mexico, but most of Latin America.

I want to thank the gentleman for his very, very perceptive report and the remarks he is making in connection with this situation.

□ 1900

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the gentleman, and I might mention to my colleagues that the gentleman has made valuable contributions in the Inter-Parliamentary Group and also here. I appreciate the fact that he has mentioned it because when a friend is in trouble, it is not right to tell them, "Well, your President is a crook," or "This fellow is a crook." They need help and they need constructive help.

I have seen many areas of cooperation. I mentioned one, that salinity problem, and we are cooperating in many other endeavors.

But what will the Central American nations that we are trying to win to our side, if we call it that, who want our friendship, what will the South American nations that need our help and admire our leadership, admire our system—one of them once called it "this intricate, mysterious thing called democracy that seems to work so well in the United States." That is what we are trying to instill in some of these people beyond our borders.

But to be calling every official, or to be challenging their veracity, or their morals, or their ability to function in government is no way to treat a friend and is no way to treat an ally.

I would hope that our colleagues would take heed of what we are trying to do here in that here we have a friend, here we have an ally. Yes; we have had problems. Yes; we have had very serious problems. We went to war. We invaded Mexico and we took two-thirds of their territory, and now when they are down on their knees, possibly going lower, we should not be leveling accusations at them. We should help in a fair and constructive way.

FREE TRADE MUST BE FAIR TRADE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. KAPTUR] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, free trade must be fair trade. Last month's unemployment figures again reveal the startling evidence that America desperately needs a comprehensive, effective jobs and international trade policy. In May, our Nation lost a record 40,000 manufacturing jobs. Fifteen thousand of last month's job loss came in the automotive sector alone. That means that since 1984, America has seen 300,000 more good jobs disappear from our shores. Is someone at the White House tuned in?

Since the House passed the most far-reaching and balanced trade bill in decades last month, the administration has responded with cheap rhetoric and superficial analysis. Do they not see the dramatic erosion in our manufacturing base? Why are they so wedded to their do-nothing policy? Why is appeasement the game plan of the White House?

Mr. President, give America an opportunity to implement a real game plan to deal with our trade deficit. Give the House bill an honest review and work with us, not so we can say, "we told you so," but so America's auto, steel, textile, lumber, high tech, energy, and machine tool workers can say to their families—"I am going back to work." Let this be their Independence Day celebration.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 4613

By Mr. ENGLISH:

—On page 12 following line 22, insert a new subparagraph (e) as follows:

"(e) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act or any rule, regulation or order of the Commission, any state may adopt any statute, rule, regulation or order to prohibit, in that state, the offer, sale, or confirmation of any transaction described in subsection (a) and permitted under subsection (b). Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, any state may enforce any state statute, rule, regulation or order adopted in accordance with this subsection against any person in a state court or administrative proceeding."

H.R. 5052

By Mr. HAMILTON:

—Strike out title II (as added to the bill pursuant to the rule) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

TITLE II

UNITED STATES POLICY IN CENTRAL AMERICA

SEC. 201. (a) The primary objectives of United States policy in Central America should be—

(1) to preserve the security of the United States;

(2) to prevent the Soviet Union and its allies from seeking to destabilize the region or to develop or deploy an offensive military capability which directly threatens the United States;

(3) to achieve peace and reconciliation;

(4) to promote stability and economic development;

(5) to promote the observance of human rights and the strengthening of democratic processes; and

(6) to live at peace with Nicaragua so long as Nicaragua lives at peace with its neighbors.

(b) United States strategy for achieving the objectives stated in subsection (a) should include—

(1) an emphasis on seeking a negotiated, regional settlement;

(2) respect for the independence and territorial integrity of all nations;

(3) a clear commitment, through appropriate types and levels of military and economic assistance, to assist the nations of Central America in building and sustaining viable, democratic societies capable of withstanding aggression and subversion and of providing their people with an opportunity for better lives; and

(4) consistent diplomatic support on behalf of the observance of human rights by groups and governments, and support for democratic institutions throughout the region, in recognition of the fact that subversion feeds on repression.

(c) In furtherance of the objectives stated in subsection (a), United States policy with respect to Nicaragua should include the following:

(1) A commitment to preserve the security of the United States by preventing the Soviet Union and its allies from developing or deploying an offensive military capability in Central America that directly threatens the United States.

(2) A commitment to protect the security and territorial integrity of any nation of Central America in conformance with the Charter of the Organization of American States and the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance, which provide for collective action.

(3) Pursuit of a regional settlement through all diplomatic avenues, including—

(A) effective support for the Contadora process, which is addressing the questions of peace and security (including mechanisms for verification and enforcement) and internal reconciliation and political pluralism;

(B) giving priority to obtaining a ceasefire in Nicaragua;

(C) renewing bilateral talks with Nicaragua; and

(D) encouraging direct talks among the parties to the conflict in Nicaragua.

(4) The provision of incentives to Nicaragua if the Government of Nicaragua agrees to a ceasefire with its opponents, removes foreign military advisors, agrees not to provide material support for insurgencies and agrees to appropriate monitoring procedures under Contadora auspices to verify such agreement, respects human rights and the independence of the media, and makes progress toward national reconciliation and a pluralistic democratic system. Incentives should be structured to enable the United States to respond to positive steps by Nicaragua. These incentives could include—

(A) the suspension of United States military exercises in the region;

(B) the termination of the national emergency with respect to Nicaragua which the President declared in Executive order 12513 on May 1, 1985, and termination of the United States embargo against Nicaragua instituted pursuant to that Executive order;

(C) the resumption of normal trade, including the resumption of nondiscriminatory trade treatment (MFN status), the restoration of benefits under the Generalized System of Preferences, and the restoration of Nicaragua's sugar quota;

(D) the provision of bilateral and multilateral assistance for Nicaragua and the provision of technical assistance, help in agriculture and health, and volunteer services; and

(E) the creation of a Central American Development Organization (in accordance with section 464 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961) in which Nicaragua could participate.

(5) The imposition of further sanctions against Nicaragua should it intensify or expand activities hostile to United States interests and to peace and security within Central America. Such sanction could include obtaining the cooperation of our allies in Western Europe and Japan, now Nicaragua's largest trading partners, in—

(A) cutting trade with Nicaragua;

(B) stopping bilateral assistance and blocking multilateral assistance to Nicaragua;

(C) imposing comprehensive economic sanctions against Nicaragua;

(D) breaking diplomatic relations with Nicaragua; and

(E) working with our Latin American allies, especially those in Central America, to isolate Nicaragua in regional affairs.

Such sanctions can only be effective if taken together with our allies. Unilateral sanctions have not and will not be effective.

SUPPORT FOR THE CONTADORA PROCESS

SEC. 202. (a) The Congress reaffirms its support for the Contadora initiatives and processes, particularly the principles for peace outlined in the Document of Objectives of September 9, 1983, and the Carabalieda Declaration of January 12, 1986. These include termination of support for irregular forces in the region, termination of support for insurrectionist movements in the region, negotiated limits on arms acquisitions, negotiated limits on international military maneuvers, progressive reduction toward elimination of foreign military advisers, effective steps toward national reconciliation and observance of human rights, commitment by the Central American nations to avoid aggression, and promotion of regional integration and cooperation.

(b) In accordance with the Carabelleda Declaration of January 12, 1986 (which was signed by the foreign ministers of all four Contadora nations and all four Contadora Support Group nations), and the Guatemala Declaration of January 16, 1986 (which was signed by all five Central American nations), the Congress urges the President to resume without preconditions direct bilateral talks with Nicaragua, which were suspended by the United States in January 1985.

(c) The Congress calls upon the President, in order to show support for the Contadora process, to announce that when all five Central American nations have signed an agreement based on the Contadora Document of Objectives, the United States will respond by taking positive steps, which could include—

(1) supporting and observing that agreement;

(2) limiting the scope, duration, and locale of United States military exercises in Central America to those allowed by that agreement; and

(3) terminating the national emergency with respect to Nicaragua which the President declared in Executive order 12513 on May 1, 1985.

ASSISTANCE IN SUPPORT OF THE REGIONAL PEACE PROCESS

SEC. 203. (a) The Congress urges the President to support the regional peace process in Central America with diplomatic and financial assistance.

(b)(1) The President is authorized and encouraged to use up to $5,000,000—

(A) to provide assistance to the Contadora nations of Mexico, Panama, Venezuela, and Colombia, and the Contadora Support Group nations of Argentina, Peru, Uruguay, and Brazil, to assist those nations in reaching agreement among the nations of Central America based on the Contadora Document of Objectives, including assistance for peacekeeping, verification, and monitoring systems; and

(B) to help implement any joint border commission agreement between Nicaragua and Costa Rica, or between Nicaragua and Honduras, which those nations enter into in furtherance of the purposes of the Contadora Document of Objectives.

(2) In addition to funds transferred pursuant to section 205, the $2,000,000 appropriated under the heading "ASSISTANCE FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF A CONTADORA AGREEMENT" by the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1985, may be used to carry out paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(c) In addition, the Congress urges the President, at such time as an agreement based on the Contadora Document of Objectives is signed by all five Central American nations, to request such funds as may be necessary to assist in the implementation of that agreement.

ASSISTANCE FOR HUMANITARIAN NEEDS AND RESETTLEMENT

SEC. 204. Up to $27,000,000 of the funds authorized to be transferred by section 205 may be made available for use as follows:

(1) Except for amounts used pursuant to paragraph (2), these funds shall be used to provide food, medicine, or other assistance for the humanitarian needs of those who have been displaced by conflict in Nicaragua, regardless of whether they have been associated with the Nicaraguan opposition forces. Assistance under this paragraph may be provided only through the International Committee of the Red Cross or the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and only upon that organization's determination that such assistance is necessary to meet humanitarian needs.

(2) Up to $15,000,000 of these funds may be used for the resettlement of members of the Nicaraguan opposition forces (and their families) who have terminated their military activities.

TRANSFER OF DOD FUNDS

SEC. 205. The President may transfer up to $30,000,000 of the funds appropriated by the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986 (as contained in Public Law 99-1900), for use in carrying out section 203(b)(1) and section 204 of this Act. The funds transferred under this section may include funds that have been made available for obligation beyond September 30, 1986, as provided by law.

REPORTS ON USE OF FUNDS

SEC. 206. No less frequently than once every 3 months, the President shall submit to the Congress a written report containing an accounting of any funds used pursuant to section 203 or 204.

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON CONTADORA

SEC. 207. (a) There is hereby established the National Commission on Contadora (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Commission"). The Commission shall—

(1) monitor and review the efforts of the Contadora nations to achieve a political resolution to the conflicts in Central America; and

(2) make recommendations with a view to building a consensus on United States policy toward Nicaragua.

(b) The Commission shall consist of an even number of members, such number to be determined jointly by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Majority Leader of the Senate, who shall each appoint half of the members of the Commission. A vacancy in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

(c) Not later than January 31, 1987, the Commission shall submit a report to the President and to the Congress with respect to its findings and recommendations. This report shall include—

(1) a detailed review of the status of the Contadora negotiations and United States support for those negotiations;

(2) a determination by the Commission of whether the Government of Nicaragua and the Nicaraguan opposition are facilitating the Contadora process;

(3) a recommendation on policies toward Nicaragua which the Commission believes represent a consensus that is sustainable and is supportable by the American people; and

(4) a recommendation on policies which the Commission believes will enhance peace and security throughout Central America.

(d) Members of the Commission shall receive no compensation on account of their service on the Commission, but while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of their duties on the Commission, shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703 of title 5 of the United States Code.

(e)(1) The Commission may employ experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) Upon a request by the Commission, the head of any Federal agency may temporarily assign employees of that agency to the Commission to assist the Commission in carrying out this section.

(f) The Administrator of General Services shall provide to the Commission, on a reimbursable basis, such administrative support services as the Commission may request.

(g) Funds for the expenses incurred by the Commission in carrying out this section, including travel expenses, shall be provided by Secretary of State.

PRESIDENTIAL REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL AUTHORITY WITH RESPECT TO NICARAGUA

SEC. 208. (a) After considering the recomendations of the National Commission on Contadora contained in the report submitted pursuant to section 207(c), the President may submit to the Congress on or after January 31, 1987, a request for authority to take specified actions with respect to Nicaragua. The request must be accompanied by—

(1) the President's assurance that he has consulted with the Contadora nations and the Contadora Support Group nations concerning the proposed actions; and

(2) a description of the response of the Contadora nations and the Contadora Support Group nations to the proposed actions.

(b)(1) The provisions of this subsection apply, during the first session of the 100th Congress, to the Consideration in the House of Representatives of a joint resolution with respect to the request submitted by the President pursuant to subsection (a).

(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term "joint resolution" means only a joint resolution introduced within 3 legislative days after the Congress receives the request submitted by the President pursuant to subsection (a)—

(A) the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That the Congress hereby authorizes the President, notwithstanding any other provision of law, to take those actions with respect to Nicaragua which are specified in the request submitted to the Congress pursuant to title II of the Military Construction Appropriations Act, 1987.";

(B) which does not have a preamble; and

(C) the title of which is as follows: "Joint Resolution relating to Nicaragua pursuant to title II of the Military Construction Appropriations Act, 1987.".

(3) A joint resolution shall, upon introduction, be referred to the appropriate committee or committees of the House of Representatives.

(4) If all the committees of the House to which a joint resolution has been referred have not reported the same joint resolution by the end of 15 legislative days after the first joint resolution was introduced, any committee which has not reported the first joint resolution introduced shall be discharged from further consideration of that joint resolution and that joint resolution shall be placed on the appropriate calendar of the House.

(5)(A) At any time after the first joint resolution placed on the appropriate calendar has been on that calendar for a period of 5 legislative days, it is in order for any Member of the House (after consultation with the Speaker as to the most appropriate time for the consideration of that joint resolution) to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of that joint resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is in order even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to. All points of order against the joint resolution under clauses 2 and 6 of Rule XXI of the Rules of the House are waived. If the motion is agreed to, the resolution shall remain the unfinished business of the House until disposed of. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion is disagreed to shall not be in order.

(B) Debate on the joint resolution shall not exceed ten hours, which shall be divided equally between a Member favoring and a Member opposing the joint resolution. A motion to limit debate is in order at any time in the House or in the Committee of the Whole and is not debatable.

(C) An amendment to the joint resolution is not in order.

(D) At the conclusion of the debate on the joint resolution, the Committee of the Whole shall rise and report the joint resolution back to the House, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution to final passage without intervening motion.

(6) As used in this subsection, the term "legislative day" means a day on which the House is in session.

(7) This subsection is enacted—

(A) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the House of Representatives, and as such it is deemed a part of the Rules of the House, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in the House in the case of a joint resolution, and it supersedes other rules only to the extent that it is inconsistent with such rules; and

(B) with full recognition of the constitutional right of the House to change its rules at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of the House, and of the right of the Committee on Rules to report a resolution for the consideration of any measure.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

NICARAGUA

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, as we approach debate yet again on the issue of aid to the Contras, I feel it would be helpful to establish some factual and analytical predicates which Members can use in determining how to cast their votes. Many Members have made up their minds, but for those who have not, I offer the following. It is an update of a similar statement I inserted in the RECORD 1 year ago.

This statement represents—as did its predecessor—an attempt to answer some of the questions most commonly asked about Nicaragua—either those which have been raised by administration statements on particular issues or others which follow from an examination of the conflict in Nicaragua. The conclusions I state are my own, but they are derived from a review of a wide, and I believe, representative, sampling of available information. They cover not only the conduct of the Sandinista Government of Nicaragua but the Contra forces seeking to overthrow that government.

NICARAGUA MILITARY BUILDUP

Military equipment deliveries to Nicaragua from the Soviet bloc are estimated at $100 million during 1985. In 1980, this amount was $10 million; in 1981, $50 million; in 1982, $100 million; in 1983, $135 million; and $250 million in 1984.

One way to look at these figures is to see a substantial sustained reliance on the Soviet Union and Cuba for military supplies and to posit that deliveries made in 1 year must have been contracted for months before actual receipt. Another way to look at the influx of equipment is to note that the large amount of this assistance (for example, helicopters) did not begin in earnest until 1982, the year when the Contras began to operate with U.S. assistance. In any event, it is clear that the great majority of military deliveries occurs after 1982 and that in significant part, consists of systems related to the Sandinistas' counterinsurgency efforts.

Traditionally, Soviet bloc donors have provided military assistance to many of their clients but have been not so generous with economic aid. Yet, in 1985 the Soviet bloc provided some $450 million in economic assistance to Nicaragua. This was a significant jump from $155 million in economic assistance in 1982.

What type of military equipment has Nicaragua received from the Soviet Bloc? The chart that follows reflects approximate numbers of major weapons systems possessed by Nicaragua and compares them to those of Honduras, El Salvador, and Guatemala. (Costa Rica has no armed forces.)

	El Salvador	Guatemala	Honduras	Nicaragua
Tanks	0	15	0	140
APC's	50	50	100	200
Rocket launchers	140	0	0	25
Artillery pieces	60	70	25	90
Antiaircraft guns	50	10	30	170
Antitank weapons	40	250	40	125
Fighter aircraft	26	10	20	0
Trainer/attack aircraft	23	12	10	3
Transport/attack aircraft	2	0	0	0
Helicopter gunships	0	0	0	6
Transport/other helicopters	50	30	35	30
Patrol boats	15	20	20	20
Minesweepers	0	0	0	6

Are these weapons systems offensive or defensive in nature? Most of the equipment that the Nicaraguans have acquired have a counterinsurgency or defensive capability. In this category fall some major elements of Nicaragua's new (since 1979) military capabilities: air defense (radars and antiaircraft weapons), signals intelligence and communications, and antiarmor weapons. Some such as tanks, artillery, and attack helicopters, can be used both offensively and defensively but are generally considered offensive weapons. It should be noted that while the Nicaraguan tank inventory is both unusual and overwhelming vis-a-vis the inventories of its neighbors, tanks can be employed in the Central American context in only a limited fashion. Attacking north toward Honduras, for instance, there is only one rather narrow avenue which would accommodate tanks. This area, on the Pacific coast and called the Choluteca Gap, was the scene of the Big Pine III joint United States/Honduran military antiarmor exercise. Further, the Nicaraguan ability to use tanks in any invasion of its neighbors must be viewed in the context of its ability to supply these tanks with fuel. Nicaragua is chronically short of fuel to keep its economy running and totally dependent on tanker shipments for oil. It would need significant improvements in fuel supply, storage and transportation plus the ability to withstand a possible naval embargo to sustain and support an invasion force using its armor.

Much has been made of the Sandinistas' helicopter gunship—the MI-25 HIND—as a fearsome weapon against the Contras. The inventory of the MI-8/17 HIP transport helicopters has increased and has provided new mobility to Sandinista forces. It is also evident, however, that these new weapons have not yet provided the Sandinistas with a knock-out punch. What they have done, however, is helped limit Contras tactics to classic guerrilla warfare on the small unit level.

What is the size of the Nicaraguan armed forces? The Nicaraguans have 65,000 men on active duty and another 55,000 reserve and militia—for a total of 120,000. By contrast, El Salvador has an army of 52,000 and is building a civil defense force. (Currently, it stands at 7,000.) Honduras has an army of 22,000. Guatemala has an army of only 35,000 but a large civil defense establishment.

	Active duty military	Reserve/militia or civil defense
Nicaragua	65,000	55,000
El Salvador	52,000	+7,000
Honduras	22,000	.....
Guatemala	35,000	300,000

ESTABLISHMENT OF A MILITARY BASE

The President, in his address to the Nation on March 16, 1986, said: "Today, Warsaw Pact engineers are building a deepwater port on Nicaragua's Caribbean coast similar to the naval base in Cuba for Soviet-built submarines. They are also constructing, outside Managua, the largest military airfield in Central America similar to those in Cuba from which Russian BEAR bombers patrol the U.S. East coast from Maine to Florida."

PORT AT EL BLUFF

Construction at the Nicaraguan port of El Bluff is not being done by military engineers of the Warsaw Pact but funding and technical assistance for the project has been provided by a Bulgarian consulting firm. While the expansion of the port will facilitate both commercial and military purposes, at this point, it doesn't appear that the principal purpose is to develop the facility for military. Currently, ships which unload on the Atlantic coast must offload their cargoes to lighter vessels for transport to El Bluff. The port is now half complete and, when finished, will save the Nicaraguans as average of $27 per ton of cargo, as well as Panama Canal transit fees. The country's main port at Corinto, on the Pacific coast, is reportedly working at over 30 percent of its stated capacity. The Nicaraguans still require considerable funds to complete the project and they have been looking to East European nations for help. There is no evidence to suggest El Bluff is being built as a submarine base.

PUNTA HUETE AIRFIELD

The airfield the Sandinistas are still building at Punta Huete will have the capability to land any type of aircraft and eventually the airfield will be the headquarters for the Sandinista Air Force. Currently, the Nicaraguans only use the airfield for daylight operations. The transfer to make this an operational airfield does not appear likely in the near term due to the fact that there are no ground support facilities. It is estimated that this airfield could be fully operational by the end of the year.

While Russian BEAR bombers do land occasionally in Cuba on patrols that take them along the east coast of the United States, there is no evidence that the Sandinistas and/or the Soviets intend to undertake similar activities from Nicaragua.

NICARAGUAN INTENTIONS

What are the intentions of Nicaragua toward its neighbors? Are the military forces referred to above likely to be used to attack other Central American countries?

There is no evidence that Nicaragua has such an intention. It is clear that Nicaraguan forces have, from time to time, crossed its borders with Honduras and Costa Rica to attack Contras retreating to or concentrated in those countries. An attack of significant force took place in Honduras in March of this year. The intent in these attacks has been either retaliatory or hot pursuit—and not to take and hold territory or to invade a neighboring country. Some appear to have been intended to indicate Nicaraguan displeasure with the sanctuary afforded the Contras across Nicaraguan borders.

SUPPORT FOR INSURGENTS IN EL SALVADOR

On the other hand, the Nicaraguan Government appears to have committed itself to a policy of support for insurgencies in other Central American countries. The most important example of this policy is the assistance provided by Nicaragua to the Salvadoran guerrillas. It seems clear that the Nicaraguan commitment to the Salvadoran guerrillas stems from FMLM support to the Sandinistas during their efforts to overthrow Somoza and is a matter of revolutionary pride and solidarity.

The flow of arms from Nicaragua to the Salvadoran guerrillas continues, but at a greatly reduced rate. The network used for this purpose is run by Salvadorans with Nicaraguan support. The supplies provided by the network are thought to be mostly ammunition but also medicine and other supplies. It is also thought that until recently the Salvadoran guerrillas have enough arms but still rely, to some significant degree, on other types of assistance from Nicaragua. The flow of assistance from Nicaragua is sometimes erratic.

There have been no appreciable interdiction of arms shipments by the Salvadoran Armed Forces and none at the point of entry into El Salvador. The capture of supplies of arms in the past have been in Honduras while in transit or in safehouses.

The flow of assistance and supplies comes by water along the southeast coast of El Salvador, by land through Guatemala and Honduras, and possibly by air from Nicaragua. The inability of the Salvadoran or Honduran forces to interdict shipments by water routes alone is a factor of low priority for interdiction efforts, a lack of proficiency among the security forces, corruption, and of what is probably both an extremely effective guerrilla network handling a small volume of shipments.

Nicaragua also provides communications facilities, safe haven, training, and logistical support to the Salvadoran guerrillas. The system employed to provide all of these types of assistance is flexibile and, apparently, very well run.

The judgments made above concerning assistance to the Salvadoran guerrillas are in part inferential but are based on a growing body of information.

SUPPORT FOR INSURGENTS IN HONDURAS

Nicaragua on two occasions—1981 and 1983)—has trained and dispatched teams of Hondurans bent on initiating insurgent activity in Honduras. Nicaragua also provides Honduran leftists with training, funds, and equipment. The Nicaraguans did not provide this kind of assistance to Honduran groups prior to 1982 when U.S. assistance to the Contras began.

SUPPORT FOR INSURGENTS IN COSTA RICA

In Costa Rica, there is no insurgency. There have been clashes along the border between Nicaraguan forces and Costa Rican border officials. These have usually been in connection with the use by Contra forces of sanctuaries across the border. In addition, there is evidence that Nicaragua has provided funds and assistance to Costa Rican Communists and that some Costa Rican Communists have operated in units in Nicaragua against Contra forces along the Costa Rican/Nicaraguan border. Again, these events postdate the 1982 U.S. assistance to the Contras. There is no evidence that Costa Rican Communists have utilized Nicaragua as a base to conduct or export terrorism.

It is clear in both the case of Honduras and Costa Rica that each of these governments has not only tolerated but, particularly in the case of Honduras, provided safe harbor to Contra forces. It is also clear that the Nicaraguan Government has usually limited its cross border operations so as not to give either country good cause for requesting assistance from U.S. military forces.

SUPPORT FOR INSURGENTS IN GUATEMALA

Nicaraguan assistance to Guatemalan insurgents permits them to both propagandize and coordinate their operations in Guatemala. In addition, these groups have headquarters in Managua.

SUPPORT FOR INSURGENTS IN COLOMBIA

There is evidence that Nicaragua has provided weapons and training to the MI–19 insurgents in Colombia. This information surfaced as a result of the recapture of the Palace of Justice in Bogota by Colombian authorities after its seizure by the MI–19 in November 1985. There is also evidence that General Manuel Noriega, chief of the Panamanian Defense Forces, has aided the MI–19.

In addition to assistance to the insurgencies referred to above, some of these groups, in particular Salvadoran guerrilla groups, may assist Nicaraguan forces in combat against Contra forces. One way to view this phenomenon is to look at Nicaragua as a focal point for subversion in the Western Hemisphere. Another is to view the presence of these so-called internationalists as spontaneous support for the Sandinista revolution. The overthrow of Somoza, for instance, was achieved by the Sandinistas with the assistance of internationalists from other countries—as well as from governments such as those of Costa Rica, Panama, Venezuela and Cuba.

PLO

In addition to the presence of Central American insurgents, a number of other groups are reported to be present in Nicaragua. The PLO, which has had a relationship to the Sandinistas since before 1979, has a very small military and security presence in Nicaragua—less than 20—and is thought to provide assistance in the maintenance and piloting of some Nicaraguan aircraft. The PLO has also provided some antiaircraft guns and an airplane to Nicaragua. There is no evidence that the PLO has utilized Nicaragua as a base to conduct or export terrorism.

LIBYA

Libya also has had a relationship with Nicaragua since the overthrow of Somoza. The Libyans have a small military and security presence—approximately 25—in Nicaragua and their personnel appear to serve as pilots, mechanics, and air defense advisers. Libya has provided a few Polish MI–2 helicopters, light ground attack airplanes, antiaircraft missiles, multiple rocket launchers and small arms to Nicaragua. It has attempted to transfer additional light ground attack aircraft but these attempts have been frustrated to date. In addition to military assistance, Libya has provided economic assistance, both through cash and credits and in oil barter arrangements. There is no evidence that Libya has utilized Nicaragua as a base to conduct or export terrorism.

IRAN

There is no Iranian military or security presence in Nicaragua. While there have been rumors of Iranian agreements to provide arms to Nicaragua, none have been delivered.

What information there is concerning PLO, Libyan, or Iranian relationships to Nicaragua does not indicate joint terrorist operations or Nicaraguan complicity in terrorism by the PLO, Libya, or Iran. There is no evidence that Iran has utilized Nicaragua as a base to conduct or export terrorism.

RED BRIGADES

While there have been reports that the Italian Red Brigades have a presence in Nicaragua, there is little firm evidence to confirm these reports.

CUBA

The single largest foreign presence in Nicaragua is that provided by Cuba. The intelligence community believes there are approximately 3,000 military and security personnel assisting the Nicaraguans. Cuba military advisers are thought to be placed in all elements of the military and security forces at every level. It is believed that some Soviet-supplied helicopters are likely piloted by Cubans since the Nicaraguans do not have the capability of piloting all these aircraft.

There have been as many as an additional 2,000 Cuban construction workers in Nicaragua. This work force appears to have changed in character in the aftermath of the Grenada operation. Older men and women have been replaced by younger workers with military experience; 1,500 teachers who returned to Cuba in a previous regular annual rotation are not expected to return.

SOVIET UNION

There is a Soviet military and security presence in Nicaragua estimated to range from 40 to 50 personnel. They are most likely assigned as advisers in the military and intelligence services or assist in the assembly and maintenance of the Soviet military equipment provided to Nicaragua. Recently, a Soviet reconnaissance aircraft has been overflying northern Nicaragua. Soviet military and security advisers maintain a low profile. Yet, they represent the willingness of the Soviet Government to invest in supporting a Nicaraguan Government friendly to the Soviet Union.

The Soviets have made no commitment to the defense of Nicaragua in terms of troops or military deployments. It appears that they need not exert pressure on the Nicaraguan Government, which has consistently asked for more assistance and become more dependent on the Soviet Union both militarily and economically. Common Soviet-Nicaraguan views on many issues result in parallel policies more conducive to Soviet interests than total Nicaraguan dependence and subservience to the Soviet Union.

NORTH KOREA

There is a small North Korean military presence in Nicaragua training the Nicaraguans in the use of four North Korean-provided patrol boats.

EAST EUROPEANS

There are several hundred East European advisers in Nicaragua. Most are Bulgarians associated with the construction of a deepwater port in El Bluff. There are also over 60 East German military and security advisers placed in the intelligence, security and telecommunications agencies of the Nicaraguan Government.

OTHER GROUPS

There have also been allegations that other terrorist groups such as the Irish Republican Army and the Bader Meinhof Red Army faction have personnel in Nicaragua. There is no evidence of such presences.

HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES OF MISKITO INDIANS

The Nicaraguan Government has been accused of genocide of the Miskito Indians on the Atlantic coast of Nicaragua. This appears not to be true.

The treatment of the Miskito Indians by previous Nicaraguan governments under the Somoza family could best be characterized as benign neglect. After the revolution of 1979, the Sandinistas attempted to force the Miskitos into participating in the full range of the Nicaraguan Government's political and economic programs. The nature of many of these programs clashed with the Miskitos' independent traditions. The tactics employed by the Government caused a great deal of discontent in Miskito communities. That discontent manifested itself in opposition to the regime or support for an armed group (known as Musura) under the leadership of Steadman Fagoth.

Fagoth's group operated in the extreme northeastern part of the country along the Rio Coco River separating Honduras and Nicaragua. These operations led the Nicaraguan Government in early 1982 to resettle large numbers of Miskito Indians away from the border so as to deprive Fagoth's group of sanctuaries. In the course of this resettlement, the Nicaraguan Government razed Miskito villages in an area that had been the home of Miskito Indians for centuries. Those Miskitos who were resettled were removed to relatively secure surroundings and afforded the basic necessities but were uprooted from their traditional farming and fishing areas and required to shift to radically new ways of living.

In the course of the resettlement, a number of Miskito Indians were killed or have disappeared. The documentation concerning the resettlement is not good but the range of estimates for those killed or unaccounted for is from 50 to 100 individuals.

The Nicaraguan Government apparently realized the great unpopularity of its policy towards the Miskitos and has since taken a much ameliorated approach to Miskito concerns. In some cases, the government has permitted Miskitos to leave the resettlement camps and return to their ancestral villages. Fighting continues at low levels in Miskito and other Indian areas on the Atlantic coast of Nicaragua, but the abuses of which the Nicaraguan Government was originally, and justly, accused have largely disappeared.

HARASSMENT OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

The Nicaraguan Government has had very strained relations since 1979 with the hierarchy of the Catholic Church in Nicaragua. It has accused the bishops and, in particular, Cardinal Archbishop Obando y Bravo of engaging in partisan politics. The Government has prohibited the broadcast of masses on church holy days, has shut down the church's radio stations and publications, has sought to embarrass and deport clerics who have come into disfavor with the regime, and appears to have attempted to embarrass the Pope in his 1983 visit to Nicaragua. At various time, the Government has also attempted to exert more control over the church's schools and limit their enrollment.

One reason the church has become a target of the Government has been the outspoken nature of the bishops' pastoral messages to the faithful, particularly messages which have been critical of the sectarian nature of the Government or the economic failures of the Sandinista system, and those which have endorsed a dialog between the Government and the Contras.

While the Nicaraguan Government has harassed the archbishop and others its has considered opponents of the regime, it appears to have developed better relations with other religious figures, among them foreign priests, nuns, and various lay groups—both Catholic and otherwise—who live and work throughout Nicaragua. The experience of many who serve in parishes or religious communities outside Managua, as well as within the city, is that the regime has very actively engaged in supporting the kinds of social welfare activities, such as literacy, health, and education programs, in which these church groups assist.

Another factor in the Nicaraguan church-state relations equation is the division within the Catholic Church between the so-called popular church and traditional, orthodox Catholicism. Some of the religious figures who hold high Government positions in the Nicaraguan Government today are central figures in the popular church, whereas the bishops represent the orthodox and majority position in the church. The Government is thought to have tried to use the popular church as a way of distancing some Catholic congregations from the authority and teaching of the bishops.

PRESS CENSORSHIP

The Nicaraguan Government has consistently and pervasively censored all but clearly pro-government media in Nicaragua. This has included the radio stations and publications of the church but, particularly, the opposition newspaper, La Prensa. Censorship has ensured that information contrary to the regime's viewpoint is not published. The extent of censorship ranges from excising reports on Soviet actions in Afghanistan to stories that involve sports issues. The process by which La Prensa is censored is a cumbersome one and can be viewed, in part, as an attempt to limit the distribution of the newspaper. Without a variety of foreign financial contributions, including assistance provided by the National Endowment for Democracy and various friendly Western governments, La Prensa would have ceased publication years ago.

Censorship has been constant in Nicaraguan life since 1981 and has been justified by the Government of Nicaragua under a state of emergency declared in the spring of 1982 because of the attacks by Contra forces.

ELECTION PROCESS

The Nicaraguan elections in November 1984 have been referred to by some as Soviet style, sham elections. There are some similarities to Soviet bloc-style elections in that the military and security forces of the Government are identified completely with the ruling party, the media was controlled by the Government, and the conditions for the elections—including censorship and limits on opposition access to the media and political organizing—were regulated by a statute promulgated by the ruling party. All of these factors gave a great advantage to the Sandinistas in the 1984 election. At the same time, the conditions of the election were not so dissimilar from those taking place in many other countries throughout the Third World in which the U.S. Government fails to suggest that a sham has taken place.

With some notable exceptions of violence directed against opposition candidates, the actual conduct of the electioneering period was not marked by significant harassment of the opposition by the Nicaraguan Government. The election results probably reflect not only the advantages the ruling party had given itself but also its real popularity within the country. Even under more democratic conditions, the Sandinistas likely would have won a majority in the election.

The unknown factor in the election, besides the conditions under which they were held—conditions dictated by the Sandinista party—was the effect of the withdrawal of the major opposition (CDN) coalition from the election. There is speculation that the race could have been much closer had the CDN not withdrawn. There can be justifiable skepticism about the willingness of the Sandinista party to accept election results which gave it less than a clear majority but no evidence is available which suggests that the election tallies were altered by the Sandinistas.

1984 NICARAGUAN ELECTION

Party	Percent vote	Number deputies (seats)
Sandinista National Liberation Front, Daniel Ortega—Ruling party since July 1979 revolution	67.0	61
Democratic Conservative Party, Dr. Clements Guida—Pro-election splinter of traditional conservative party. Leadership took party into election against wishes of sizable pro-boycott faction	14.0	14
Independent Liberal Party, Virgilio Godoy—Liberal grouping kept on ballot against wishes of party convention and candidate Godoy. Some elected deputies have threatened not to take these seats in the assembly	9.6	9

WHO ARE THE CONTRAS

Those armed groups opposing the Nicaraguan Government by force of arms are called the Contras. The single largest Contra force is the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, estimated to have between 15,000 to 20,000 active fighters. In addition, there are Indian groups collectively known as Kisan that are active on the Atlantic coast of Nicaragua. In the north, this group is referred to as UNO-Kisan. In the south, they are associated with the Southern Opposition Bloc [BOS].

Both the FDN and UNO-Kisan operate from sancturaries in Honduras. The Kisan forces operate in northeast Nicaragua along the Rio Coco south of Puerto Cabezas; the FDN forces operate principally in mountainous areas in the north central and northwestern parts of the border region and as far south as Matagalpa.

In the south of Nicaragua, along the Costa Rican border and both inside Nicaragua and in Costa Rica, are groups of Contras who at one time all came under the titular command of Eden Pastora, the famous Comandante Zero of revolutionary fame, who left the Nicaraguan Government to head military operations of a number of Contras factions united under the banner of the Democratic Revolutionary Alliance, or ARDE.

Pastora is no longer waging a military campaign. He recently received asylum from Costa Rica and has said he will pursue a wholly political struggle. Pastora has always been strongly critical of the UNO/FDN organization as dominated by ex-Somoza National Guardsmen and of the United States for not providing him with sufficient military support. What remained of Pastora's forces recently joined with an organization—formerly the FARN and now known as UNO/South—headed by Fernando "El Negro" Chomorro.

ORIGINS

The armed struggle against the Sandinista regime began in earnest almost immediately after the overthrow of Somoza. A number of ex-Somoza naitonal guardsmen escaped and settled in El Salvador and Guatemala. A small number settled in Honduras and many civilians settled in Miami.

The core group, known as the 15th of September Legion (named after Nicaragua's liberation day) set up headquarters in Guatemala.

There were also small pockets of resistance operating along the Honduran border, perhaps three or four groups of 50 to 75 ex-guardsmen involved in petty thievery and cattle rustling.

The organization of a resistance that could have some impact in Nicaragua began in early 1981 with the support of sympathizers in El Salvador and Guatemala assisted by Argentina. Argentina had provided training to some Salvadoran conservative groups and was also connected with senior officials in the Honduran military.

Was this a homegrown resistance movement that sought out the assistance of Honduras and the other country and later the United States, or did it begin with the United States seeking out assistance of the Hondurans and this other country to develop a unified opposition to the Sandinistas?

What is known is that the Latin American country forged a merger of the ARDEN [Nicaraguan Democratic Revolutionary Alliance], the military arm of which was the 15 September Legion, with the Nicaraguan Democratic Union [UDN] in September 1981 in an organizational meeting in Guatemala City. This group became known as the Nicaraguan Democratic Armed Force [FADN], later shortened to the Nicaraguan Democratic Force [FDN].

The close relationship that key Honduran officials had with the Latin American government and the close ties that developed between these officials and the U.S. Government in moving the Contra support effort forward were the key relationships in the creation of the FDN.

By the end of 1982, the general staff of the FDN had received so much criticism because its major task force commanders and officers were filled with ex-national guardsmen, the U.S. Government suggested and helped facilitate changes in the political directorate of the FDN. The object of the changes was to create a structure with genuine political credentials, untainted by association with Somoza. Edgar Chomorro, one of the individuals brought in to the directorate, has explained how the U.S. Government secured his participation and how the directorate was actually run. While the directorate had seven members, Chomorro states that actual power was wielded only by two individuals—Adolfo Calero, who was later named president of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, and Enrique Bermudez, the commander for military operations.

When U.S. assistance first began, the plan set forth to the congressional intelligence committees was that there would be a military arm and a separate, political arm which would attempt to secure support from other nations. These two groups would not necessarily be part of the same movement. The greatest problem for the U.S. Government in managing assistance to the Contras was not the actual running of the war but developing a strong unified political movement that could attract support in Nicaragua.

In fact, there were few strong Contra political leaders and no effective political platform. In 1983, the new ARDE group, the Democratic Revolutionary Alliance, led by Alfonso Robelo and Eden Pastora, had no basic political platform whatsoever. Pastora was and is charismatic, but his political goals were ill defined.

Contra unity efforts began shortly after Pastora's forces first began fighting in Nicaragua in April 1983. All such unity efforts eventaully foundered on Pastora's reluctance to join with the FDN because of its ex-national guard leadership. On the other hand, although the U.S. Government provided Pastora with support, his claims about numbers of armed fighters and their military capabilities were thought by U.S. officials to be exaggerated.

The FDN, after some early reverses, became capable of conducting patrols in north and north central Nicaragua by early 1983. The FDN was never able to capture territory. Further, abuses against civilians and attacks against economic targets (which the congressional intelligence committees had been assured from the outset would not be undertaken) became commonplace. For some of the worst examples of such attacks, U.S. officials blamed the Latin American government advising the FDN. When this Latin American government pulled out of the operation in 1983 and only U.S. assistance and direction was provided, the FDN's record showed little change. As the FDN's numbers grew, so did attacks on economic targets or against civilians.

The FDN today still has as its political hierarchy the group that was selected by the U.S. Government in 1982 and still has an element of ex-national guard military leadership. FDN essential goals and objectives are no different today than they were at the outset—to overthrow the ruling Sandinista government of Nicaragua and install a new regime.

EXTENT OF NATIONAL GUARD INFLUENCE IN FDN

Many of the FDN's top military leadership consist of former national guard officers and noncommissioned officers. They permeate the general staff and field commander posts. As a percentage of the FDN membership the numbers of these individuals is small, but their influence in FDN military affairs is great.

U.S. ASSISTANCE

The United States has provided in excess of $100 million in aid—lethal and nonlethal—to the Contras from fiscal year 1981 through fiscal year 1986. This assistance has been provided almost exclusively in kind. Major categories of assistance have included weapons and ammunition, uniforms and other equipment, food, medicine, and transportation. With the exception of the $27 million in nonlethal assistance provided by the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1985, U.S. aid has been provided through intelligence channels.

During fiscal years 1982 and 1983, assistance to the Contras was constrained by the Boland amendment, which prohibited the expenditure of U.S. funds for the purpose of overthrowing the Government of Nicaragua. During fiscal year 1984, Congress limited the amount of aid for the Contras to $24 million. Beginning in fiscal year 1985, Congress cut off all support to the Contras, but in August 1985, in the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1985, $27 million in nonlethal assistance was appropriated for distribution by the Nicaraguan Humanitarian Assistance Office. In fiscal year 1986, Congress has appropriated funds for a limited amount of communications equipment and training for the Contras, as well as the provision of intelligence. The Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1986 provides that no intelligence funds may be used to augment this limited assistance except by reprogramming or the enactment of separate legislation.

UNO

The United Nicaraguan Opposition [UNO] was established at U.S. urging in June 1985 as a political and, to a lesser extent, military control group over the FDN and other Contra forces. Since that time the Indian group known as Kisan with approximately 1,000 fighters, has become associated with UNO. Most recently, forces under Fernando "El Negro" Chomorro operating in southern Nicaragua have come under the UNO umbrella and have been designated UNO/South. It is difficult to determine how many personnel are associated with UNO/South but it is probably under 500.

The three-man directorate of UNO (Adolfo Calero of the FDN, Arturo Cruz, a 1984 Presidential candidate, and Alfonso Robelo of ARDE) has had considerable ups and downs since its formation. Disputes have largely forcused on control of UNO's principal military force, the FDN, which now numbers some 17,000 personnel. Cruz and Robelo have allied themselves in an effort to obtain a greater say in military operations and, according to a Calero-Cruz-Robelo declaration in Miami on May 29, 1986, have reached such an accommodation.

UNO has stated that they support the Contadora process to find a political solution and that they are in agreement with the four democratic governments of Central America. UNO also indicates they have solved all of their internal difficulties and that all decisions will be by majority rule, with five exceptions. Those exceptions include: the expansion of the three-member directorate; decisions that concern the distribution of funds; a strategic change to the principles of the organization; the formation of new alliances with other groups; and the selection of a new military commander. Current military commanders, however, could be removed by majority, but the selection of a new commander would require consensus. If the directorate should become deadlocked, they can then turn to a five-man commission of distinguished Nicaraguans which has been established to resolve disputes. A civilian Secretary General and a civilian Military Coordinator have also been appointed to improve command and control.

With a change in direction at the top of the UNO leadership, the question remains whether they will, in fact, be able to change the FDN's military strategy. Currently, as they have for the last 5 years, the FDN attacks cooperative and state farms, vehicles on the roads and electrical towers and substations. Critics of the FDN believe these are economic targets while UNO spokesmen state that military and economic targets are inter-related and hard to distinguish. UNO indicates they are going to review the FDN's targeting strategy.

The thorny question is why the FDN can only attack economic targets when the El Salvadoran guerrillas with less than half as many fighters can attack Salvador and military units as they did last week when they attacked the Army barracks at San Miguel.

How effective the UNO directorate will be in gaining control over FDN forces and developing a political military program that will appeal to the Nicaraguan people remains to be seen.

CONTRA ATROCITIES

There has been a range of accusations of Contra atrocities. These allegations fall into two categories: Contra attacks and human rights abuses in Nicaragua, and so-called Contra death squads acting in Honduras.

A number of human rights groups have conducted studies, including interviewing alleged victims, to document Contra atrocities in Nicaragua. Almost exclusively, these consisted of attacks alleged to have been made by the FDN. In addition, many North American religious people who have lived in Nicaragua and who have either witnessed such attacks or have seen or spoken with the victims of such attacks have provided reports concerning Contra abuses. Some of the reports or interviews conducted by particular groups have been attacked as lacking objectivity or fairness.

Several things are apparent concerning these allegations. First, the administration basically relies on the statements of the FDN concerning these attacks. While this information is relevant, it is clearly biased. Second, what the FDN itself admits—for example, on its September 15th radio—and what eyewitnesses make clear, is that the FDN will attack, and has attacked, collective farms in Nicaragua. The FDN views these collectives as organs of the Sandinista Government. Undeniably, such attacks have led to the death of innocent agricultural workers. Some collectives have been defended. It seems clear that many have been defended because of previous Contra attacks.

The FDN also attacks any other so-called organs of the Sandinista Government. These include health clinics and schools. The FDN considers any government officials, however lowly, legitimate targets whether or not they are armed. Transportation of any kind on rural highways and roads in northern Nicaragua is subject to FDN attack. Many such vehicles are government vehicles, including buses operated by the State to transfer passengers from one point to another.

Other firsthand accounts detail executions, sometimes preceded by torture, of individuals in towns or villages which the Contras have temporarily occupied. The FDN denies that it tortures prisoners. However, Edgar Chomorro, the ex-FDN political directorate member, has stated that the FDN often makes a practice of not taking prisoners, particularly those who have fought fiercely against them in battle. The FDN also admits that its forces in the past have sometimes not been under its full control and will admit to abuses of particular commanders whom the FDN has later punished.

It is clear that sometimes the Nicaraguan Government invents abuses attributed to the Contras where none occurred or exaggerates the effect of Contra attacks. But, these efforts at propaganda and disinformation cannot hide what appear to be clear factual evidence of the widespread nature of Contra attacks, individual cases of executions and torture, as well as the continuing nature of such activities.

The provision of $27 million in humanitarian assistance funds last year required improved reporting on and action by UNO to improve its human rights record. Most of the disciplinary proceedings undertaken so far by UNO/FDN against their personnel have largely been for infractions committed against other UNO/FDN personnel. Reports persist of UNO/FDN troops kidnapping campesinos and attacking civilian settlements.

Facts concerning allegations of Contra abuses in Honduras are scarce. There is little or no evidence about allegations made concerning death squad-type activities by the FDN or some FDN members. What little information that is available comes from the Contras themselves.

At the same time, what is otherwise available in the press suggests, but in no concrete way supports, so-called Contra death squad operations. It appears possible that before 1982, some activities in Honduras were engaged in by individuals who became FDN officials that resulted in disappearances or deaths. Such activities could have taken place after 1982 as well. Whether such alleged activities represented a policy of the FDN cannot be established.

POPULAR SUPPORT

The numbers of armed Contras have grown to perhaps 17,000 today. This growth was directly related to provision of U.S. assistance to clothe and feed these fighters. It appears that many of the recruits to the FDN were campesinos from the northern provinces of Nicaragua. Another source of recruits was Sandinista militia or regular troops who either deserted or, when captured, decided to join the FDN. The political base of the FDN appears to be rural and to stem from those areas where the FDN actually operates. The FDN apparently has not developed a base of support in Nicaragua's cities.

One view of this situation is that many campesinos cooperate with the FDN rather than suffer reprisals. Another is that the FDN has developed true support among such people. What remains constant is that FDN supplies, ammunition, and other support must come from Honduras. Most such aid appears to come from the previously appropriated $27 million nonlethal U.S. aid and from contributions from some private U.S. sources. Previously, weapons and other funds were provided by the U.S. Government.

A somewhat different pattern of support has evolved among the Kisan and other Indian groups who have operated in the Atlantic coast region. There, fighters have all been indigenous to the region. These groups have at times claimed the allegiance of the great mass of the population. However, actual support appears to have waxed and waned and, in the period since U.S. military aid has effectively ceased, the number of Indian insurgent activities has greatly diminished.

POLITICAL MESSAGE

The Contras' political message is one of democracy, pluralism, a free economy, and fair, open elections. The link between this political platform and the activities of the armed Contras is less clear. The political directorate of the FDN, for instance, appears to have been more of an afterthought than the generating forces behind creation of the FDN. UNO appears to have been created more for U.S. policy purposes than because of any Contra-generated unity impetus.

The political education and attitudes of the rank and file within the FDN and other UNO forces are difficult to ascertain. They are poorly educated. Reports of their political message suggest it is as religious as it is political. In any event, this message appears not to have taken root in terms of any armed resistance outside the areas where the Contras have been able to operate; that is, in the rural mountain areas of the north and north central Nicaragua. Particularly in the cities, there have been no developments that would indicate that the Contras' proselytizing has been in any way effective. Indeed, the Contras have gained what political respectability they have inside Nicaragua by allying themselves with the unarmed political opposition inside of Nicaragua and by UNO's endorsement of the peace proposal of January 17, 1986, made by the six Nicaraguan political parties.

PROSPECTS FOR THE CONTRAS

The President has requested $100 million in assistance for the Contras during the remainder of fiscal year 1986 and for fiscal year 1987. With this assistance, the administration expects that the Contras can dramatically increase the numbers of armed Contra troops and exert significant military pressure on the Sandinistas. The administration does not predict victory by the Contras but says that without Contra military pressure, the Sandinistas are unlikely to agree to democratic changes within Nicaragua or to moderate Sandinista behavior toward its neighbors.

While UNO pays lip service to Contadora, the Basic Agreement signed in Miami on May 29, 1986, stresses reaching "the goals of liberating and pacifying the fatherland" and that "after the liberation of Nicaragua, the new National Army will be made of combatants from all fronts . . ." The Contras believe that $100 million would set conditions for: First, the massive defection of Sandinista forces; second, the revolt of regional commands inside of Nicaragua; third, the addition of new recruits to the Contra cause; and fourth, widespread insurrection inside the country. They hold out the hope that with all this going on that conditions would be ripe in Nicaragua for a coup in the Sandinista leadership.

The problem with this thinking is that it does not tell us what Contra military pressure will produce. Since the beginning of U.S. assistance, the Contras' principle military tactic has been the ambush. Their troops have been forced to remain constantly on the move. The Contras brief experiments with conventional military tactics have resulted in little success and greatly strained their fragile logistics chain. Increased U.S. assistance, including logistics, seems unlikely to remove this basic restraint on Contra operations. The United States would have to equip the Contras with new equipment—including aircraft, surface-to-air missiles, heavy artillery and large numbers of transport vehicles—before they could seek to engage the Sandinistas on an equal footing inside Nicaragua. This kind of assistance would be costly, would require sustained high levels of aid and significant American involvement in transportation, logistics, maintenance, training, and advice. Moreover, it would significantly raise the stakes for the United States in Nicaragua and make the use of U.S. military forces more likely if the Contras could not beat the Sandinistas unaided.

The view of many professional military officers and political leaders, both United States and Central American, is that the Contras cannot achieve a military victory against Sandinistas and that the eventual resolution of the conflict will require the intervention of the United States.

The conclusion that I draw is that the Contras cannot achieve either military victory or seriously threaten the Sandinistas with the $100 million the President has requested. Either goal will remain unattainable unless the United States takes an increased direct role in aiding the Contras. Even then, the key factor will not be Contra military success but whether or not they can generate and sustain political support among the Nicaraguan populace. Despite the unpopular and repressive actions of the Nicaraguan Government, there is no evidence, after 5 years of guerrilla warfare, of measurable Contra political appeal within Nicaragua. This is most telling within the large population centers where the Sandinistas received their greatest support in the revolution of 1979.

A TRIBUTE TO DR. SPENCER FLO

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the outstanding efforts of Dr. Spencer Flo of Greenfield, MA, who this year marks his 55th anniversary as a practicing physician and surgeon. Dr. Flo's contribution to his community extends far beyond medicine and on July 13, 1986, Dr. Flo's years of commitment will be honored at a testimonial dinner.

After graduating from the University of Michigan Medical School in 1931, Dr. Flo completed his resident surgical service at Boston City Hospital in 1935 and finished his house physician residency at Boston Lying Inn Hospital in 1938. Dr. Flo joined the U.S. Army Air Force in January 1942 and served until November 1945. Also in 1942, he became a member of the American Board of Surgery and the American College of Surgeons, and in 1946 became a member of the New England Surgical Society.

Dr. Flo's service to his community, however, extended beyond medicine. He served as a member of the Greenfield School Committee form 1952–55 and as a Greenfield Selectman from 1955–58. He later served 6 years on the town library's board of trustees and served years in the Greenfield Taxpayers' Association.

It is rare to see such selfless devotion to others, and Dr. Flo's tireless efforts are truly an inspiration to us all. This man's compassion, understanding, and healing skills have touched many lives and will continue to provide a valuable contribution in years to come.

I congratulate Dr. Flo on 55 years of distinguished and dedicated service. The residents of his community are truly fortunate to have benefited from such commitment.

I am proud to have such a capable and dedicated physician practing in my First Congressional District of Massachusetts.

"NEW LEFT" FOUNDER SUPPORTS CONTRA AID

HON. GEORGE C. WORTLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of debate over United States support to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance. While divisions remain on the means of bringing democracy to Nicaragua, there is, in Congress, a consensus that the Sandinista regime is oppressive and has failed to fulfill its leaders' 1979 promises to the Organization of American States to establish a pluralistic, democratic, nonaligned Nicaragua. Similar promises have been subverted before, in Cuba, Vietnam, Kampuchea, and Angola.

The issue of aid to the Nicaragua resistance was recently addressed by David Horowitz, a founder of the "New Left" and the movement against U.S. involvement in Vietnam. In "Nicaragua: A Speech to My Former Comrades on the Left" (Commentary, June 1986), Mr. Horowitz argues that "support for the Contras is a first line of defense." And, more importantly, "For Nicaraguans, a Contras victory would mean the restoration of democratic leadership from whom the Sandinistas stole the revolution in the first place * * *"

Mr. Horowitz, a man of the political left, offers us a warning if we fail to support the Nicaraguan resistance. I commend the following abridged version of Mr. Horowitz's article to my colleagues:

[From Commentary, June 1986]

NICARAGUA: A SPEECH TO MY FORMER COMRADES ON THE LEFT

(By David Horowitz)

Twenty-five years ago I was one of the founders of the New Left. I was one of the organizers of the first political demonstrations on the Berkeley campus—and indeed on any campus—to protest our government's anti-Communist policies in Cuba and Vietnam. Tonight I come before you as the kind of man I used to tell myself I would never be: a supporter of President Reagan, a committed opponent of Communist rule in Nicaragua.

I offer no apologies for my present position. It was what I thought was the humanity of the Marxist idea that made me what I was then: It is the inhumanity of what I have seen to be the Marxist reality that has made me what I am now. If my former comrades who support the Sandinistas were to pause for a moment and then plunge their busy political minds into the human legacies of their activist pasts, they would instantly drown in an ocean of blood.

The issue before us is not whether it is morally right for the United States to arm the contras, or whether there are unpleasant men among them. Nor is it whether the United States should defer to the wisdom of the Contadora powers—more than thirty years ago the United States tried to overthrow Somoza, and it was the Contadora powers of the time who bailed him out.

The issue before us and before all people who cherish freedom is how to oppose a Soviet imperialism so vicious and so vast as to dwarf any previously known. An "ocean of blood" is no metaphor. As we speak here tonight, this empire—whose axis runs through Havana and now Managua—is killing hundreds of thousands of Ethiopians to consolidate a dictatorship whose policies against its black citizens make the South African government look civilized and humane.

To expand its territorial core—which apologists still refer to as a "defensive perimeter"—Moscow has already slaughtered a million peasants in Afghanistan, an atrocity warmly endorsed by the Sandinista government.

Minister of Defense Humberto Ortega describes the army of the conquerors—whose scorched-earth policy has driven half the Afghan population from its homes—as the "pillar of peace" in the world today. To any self-respecting socialist, praise for such barbarism would be an inconceivable outrage—as it was to the former Sandinista, now Contra, Edén Pastora. But praise for the barbarians is sincere tribute coming from the Sandinista rulers, because they see themselves as an integral part of the Soviet empire itself.

To the Left I grew up in, along with the Sandinista founders, Stalin's Russia was a socialist paradise, the model of the liberated future. Literacy to the uneducated, power to the weak, justice to the forgotten—we praised the Soviet Union then, just as the Left praises the Sandinistas now.

And just as they ignore warnings like the one that has come from Violetta Chamorro, the publisher of La Prensa, the paper which led the fight against Somoza, and a member of the original Sandinista junta—"With all my heart, I tell you it is worse here now than it was in the times of the Somoza dictatorship"—so we dismissed the anti-Soviet "lies" about Stalinist repression.

In the society we hailed as a new human dawn, 100 million people were put in slave-labor camps, in conditions rivaling Auschwitz and Buchenwald. Between 30 and 40 million people were killed—in peacetime, in the daily routine of socialist rule. While leftists applauded their progressive policies and guarded their frontiers, Soviet Marxists killed more peasants, more workers, and even more Communists than all the capitalist governments together since the beginning of time.

In 1957, Carlos Fonseca, the founding father of the Sandinista Front, visited the Soviet Union with its newly efficient totalitarian state. To Fonseca, as to Borge and his other comrades, the Soviet monstrosity was their revolutionary dream come true. In his pamphlet, "A Nicaraguan in Moscow," Fonseca proclaimed Soviet Communism his model for Lating America's revolutionary future.

This vision of a Soviet America is now being realized in Nicaragua. The comandante directorate, the army, and the secret police are already mirrors of the Soviet state—not only structurally but in their personnel, trained and often manned by agents of the Soviet axis.

But the most important figure in this transformation is not a Nicaraguan at all. For twenty years, from the time the Sandinistas first arrived in Havana, they were disciples of Fidel Castro. With his blessings they went on to Moscow, where Stalin's henchman completed their revolutionary course. Fidel is the image in which the Sandinista leadership has created itself and the author of its strategy. Its politburo, the comandante directorate, was personally created by Fidel in Havana on the eve of the final struggle, sealed with a pledge of millions in military aid. It was Fidel who supplied the arms with which the Sandinistas waged their battles, just as he suppplied the Cuban general—Zenen Casals—who directed their victorious campaign (just as the Soviets supplied the general who directed Fidel's own victory at the Bay of Pigs). Without Castro's intervention, Arturo Cruz and the other anti-Somoza and pro-democratic contras would be the government of Nicaragua today.

And it was Fidel who showed the Sandinistas how to steal the revolution after the victory, and how to secure their theft by manipulating their most important allies: the American Left and its liberal sympathizers.

Twenty-five years ago Fidel was also a revolutionary hero to us on the New Left. Like today's campus radicals, we became "coffee-pickers" and passengers on the revolutionary tour, and we hailed the literacy campaigns, health clinics, and other wonders of the people's state.

When Fidel spoke, his words were revolutionary music to our ears: "Freedom with bread. Bread without terror." "A revolution neigher red nor black, but Cuban olive-green." And so in Managua today: "Not [Soviet] Communist but Nicaraguan Sandinismo" is the formula Fidel's imitators proclaim.

Fidel's political poems put radicals all over the world under his spell. Jean-Paul Sartre wrote one of the first and most influential books of praise: "If this man asked me for the moon," he said, "I would give it to him. Because he would have a need for it."

When I listen to the enthusiasts for the Sandinista redeemers, the fate of a hero of the Cuban revolution comes to my mind. For in the year that Jean-Paul Sartre came to Havana and fell in love with the humanitarian Fidel, Huber Matos embarked on a long windowless night of the soul.

The fate of Huber Matos begins with the second revolution that Fidel launched.

All the fine gestures and words with which Fidel seduced us and won our support—the open Marxism, the socialist humanism, the independent path—turned out to be calculated lies. Even as he proclaimed his color to be olive-green, he was planning to make his revolution Moscow red.

So cynical was Fidel's strategy that at the time it was difficult for many to comprehend. One by one Fidel began removing his own comrades from the revolutionary regime and replacing them with Cuban Communists.

Cuban's Communists were then a party in disgrace. They had opposed the revolution; they had even served in the cabinet of the tyrant Batista while the revolution was taking place!

But this was all incidental to Fidel. Fidel knew how to use people. And Fidel was planning a new revolution he could trust the Communists to support: he had decided to turn Cuba into a Soviet state. And Fidel also knew that he could no longer trust his own comrades, because they had made a revolution they thought was going to be Cuban olive-green.

Although Fidel removed socialists and the Sandinistas removed democrats, the pattern of betrayal been the same.

To gain power the Sandinistas concealed their true intention (a Soviet state) behind a revolutionary lie (a pluralist democracy). To consolidate power they fashioned a second lie (democracy, but only within the revolution), and those who believed in the first lie were removed. At the end of the process there will be no democracy in Nicaragua at all, which is exactly what Fonseca and the Sandinistas intended when they began.

When Huber Matos saw Fidel's strategy unfolding in Cuba, he got on the telephone with other Fidelistas to discuss what they should do. This was a mistake. In the first year of Cuba's liberation, the phones of revolutionary legends like Huber Matos were already tapped by Fidel's secret police. Huber Matos was arrested.

In the bad old days of Batista oppression, Fidel had been arrested himself. His crime was not words on a telephone, but leading an attack on a military barracks to overthrow the Batista regime. Twelve people were killed. For this Fidel spent a total of eighteen months in the tyrant's jail before being released.

Huber Matos was not so lucky. Fidel was no Batista, and the revolution that had overthrown Batista was no two-bit dictatorship. For his phone call, Huber Matos was tried in such secrecy that not even members of the government were privy to the proceeding. When it was over, he was sentenced to solitary confinement, in a cell without sunlight, for twenty-two years. And even as Fidel buried his former friend and comrade alive, he went on singing his songs of revolutionary humanism and justice.

To believe in the revolutionary dream is the tragedy of its supporters; to exploit the dream is the talent of its dictators. Revolutionary cynicism, the source of this talent, is Fidel's most important teaching to his Sandinista disciples. This is the faculty that allows the comandantes to emulate Fidel himself: to be poets and hangmen at the same time. To promise democracy and organize repression, to attack imperialism and join an empire, to talk peace and plan war, to champion justice and deliver Nicaragua to a fraternity of inhumane, repressive, militarized, and economically crippled states.

The failure of Marxist economies to satisfy basic needs, let alone compete with the productive capitalisms of the West, has produced the military-industrial police states which call themselves socialist today. Nicaragua, with its Sandinista-created economic crisis and its massive military build-up, is but the latest example of this pattern.

Twenty-five years ago we on the Left applauded when Fidel denounced Cuba's one-crop economy and claimed that U.S. imperialism was the cause of the nation's economic plight. It seemed so self-evident. Cuba was a fertile island with a favorable climate, but U.S. sugar plantations had monopolized its arable land, and the sugar produced was a product for export, not a food for Cubans. The poor of Cuba had been sacrificed on the altar of imperialist profit. Whenever we were confronted by the political costs Castro's revolution might entail, we were confident that this gain alone—Cuba's freedom to grow food for Cubans—would make any sacrifice worthwhile. The same illusion—that the revolution will mean better lives for Nicaragua's poor—underlies every defense of the Sandinistas today.

It is nearly three decades since Cuba's liberation, and Cuba is still a one-crop economy. But the primary market for its sugar is now the Soviet Union instead of the United States. Along with this have come other economic differences as well. Cuba's external debt is now 200 times what it was when Fidel took power. And it would be far greater if the Communist caudillo had not mortgaged his country to his Soviet patron. So bankrupt is the economy Castro has created that it requires a Soviet subsidy of over $4 billion a year, one-quarter of the entire national income, to keep it afloat. Before the revolution, Cubans enjoyed the highest per-capita income in Latin America. Now they are economic prisoners of permanent rationing and chronic shortages in even the most basic necessities. The allotted rations tell a story in themselves: two pounds of meat per citizen per month; 20 percent less clothing than the allotment a decade earlier; and in rice, a basic staple of Cuba's poor, half the yearly consumption under the old Batista regime.

The idea that Marxist revolution will mean economic benefit for the poor has proved to be the most deadly illusion of all. It is because Marxist economies cannot satisfy economic needs—not even at the levels of the miserably corrupt capitalisms of Batista and Somoza—that Marxist states require permanent repression to stifle unrest and permanent enemies to saddle with the blame.

This is also why Castro has found a new national product to supply to the Soviet market (a product his Sandinista disciples are in the process of developing in their turn). The product is the Cuban nation itself, as a military base for Soviet expansion.

And in the Sandinista revolution Fidel's colonial plantation has produced its most profitable return: an opportunity for Moscow to expand its investment to the American land mass itself.

Nicaragua is now in the grip of utterly cynical and utterly ruthless men, exceeding even their sponsors in aggressive hostility to the United States. The Soviets may be the covert patrons of the world's terrorist plague, but not even they have had the temerity to embrace publicly the assassin Qaddafi as a "brother" the way the Sandinistas have. The aim of the Sandinista revolution is to crush its society from top to bottom, to institute totalitarian rule, and to use the country as a base to spread Communist terror and Communist regimes throughout the hemisphere.

Support for the contras is a first line of defense. For Nicaraguans, a contra victory would mean the restoration of the democratic leadership from whom the Sandinistas stole the revolution in the first place, the government that Nicaragua would have had if Cuba had not intervened. For the countries of the Americas, it would mean a halt in the Communist march that threatens their freedoms and their peace.

In conclusion, I would like to say this on the Left: you are self-righteous and blind in your belief that you are part of a movement to advance human progress and liberate mankind. You are in fact in league with the darkest and most reactionary forces of the modern world, whose legacies—as the record attests—are atrocities and oppressions on a scale unknown in the human past. It is no accident that radicals in power have slaughtered so many of their own people. Hatred of self, and by extention one's country, is the root of the radical cause.

As American radicals, the most egregious sin you commit is to betray the privileges and freedoms ordinary people from all over the world have created in this country—privileges and freedoms that ordinary people all over the world would feel blessed to have themselves. But the worst of it is this: you betray all this tangible good that you can see around you for a socialist pie-in-the-sky that has meant horrible deaths and miserable lives for the hundreds of millions who have so far fallen under its away.

UNCLE DAVE MACON DAYS

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to your attention the myriad of cultural jewels that the Sixth Congressional District of Tennessee has to offer.

The banjo is as dear to Tennessee tradition as the Stradivarius is to grand Vienna. Without exception buckdancing and clogging can be likened to the art of ballet in the hearts and minds of Tennesseans.

Each year in July, my hometown of Murfreesboro, in Rutherford County, plays host to a major event measuring the skill and execution of these early American art forms. Uncle Dave Macon Days, celebrated this year on July 11 to 13, is a unique event which promotes old-time music, crafts, art, and the folklore of the middle Tennessee region.

Uncle Dave Macon Days usually attracts more than 30,000 people and often exceeds the population of some of the surrounding towns. An interesting part of the festival is that it distinguishes between buckdancing and clogging as well as between bluegrass banjo and old-time banjo, as only the trained eye and ear of the middle Tennessee art enthusiast can do.

The event is named for Uncle Dave Macon, one of the first banjo superstars of the Grand Ole Opry in the 1920's. He is considered by Tennessee historians to be the individual who made the transition from rural folk music to modern country music. Born in 1870, he is said to have learned the early styles of "claw hammer" and "frayling" banjo picking from listening to former slaves and Civil War soldiers in the early days of the postwar era. He is credited as bringing old time music to the 20th century. Uncle Dave Macon Days was established in 1976 to promote old time music and to honor Macon and other individuals who perpetuate and encourage these early Tennessee art forms.

The dance competition requires that the original flat rhythm type buckdancing steps be performed for event qualification. It is this dance step which distinguishes buckdancing from clogging. No other festival is known to have such a requirement and further supports the event's desire to foster the original art form and attract the true experts.

During Uncle Dave Macon Days, competitions will be held to establish the grand champion at the skills performed. It is with this in mind that I, BART GORDON, as a Member of the U.S. Congress, proclaim these the National Old-Time Banjo, National Old-Time Buckdancing, and National Old-Time Clogging Championships to allow these established American art forms to receive the recognition they are due.

THE PRESIDENT'S COMPELLING ARGUMENTS FOR WHY WE MUST AID THE CONTRAS

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, on the eve of another important debate on the question of aiding the Contras, I want to share with you what is undoubtedly the President's most convincing speech to date as to why our country must assist those freedom fighters.

Have we failed to learn from the past? I clearly remember the dismay of many Members of Congress when Fidel Castro publicly admitted that he was a Communist. I also remember how shocked many Congressmen were when the Soviet Union slowly, but surely, built Cuba into a base for Soviet expansionism in this hemisphere. Is history repeating itself?

Although the Contras are imperfect, they are the only hope for restoring democracy in Nicaragua. Unless we act soon, the Sandinistas will crush the democratic resistance in that country.

Do the Soviets question the importance of a Communist Nicaragua? Do they argue over the value of exporting Marxism-Leninism from that country to adjoining states? Do they debate at length about the advantage of helping the Sandinistas, a group which shares their philosophy of communism? Do they doubt for one moment the practicality of having a Nicaragua with seaports to service their submarines and ships and airfields where their spy aircraft are can be based? We all know the answers to these questions.

Like it or not, our planet has become very small. Nicaragua is very close to our borders. Soviet influence there can be projected throughout this hemisphere to the Rio Grande River with little effort. The time to act is now.

With these concerns in mind, I commend the President's excellent speech to my colleagues.

TEXT OF REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT IN AN ADDRESS TO THE NATION

My fellow citizens. The matter that brings me before you today is a grave one and concerns my most solemn duty as President. It is the cause of freedom in Central America and the national security of the United States. Tomorrow the House of Representatives will debate and vote on this issue. I had hoped to speak directly and at this very hour to Members of the House of Representatives on this subject, but was unable to do so. Because I feel so strongly about what I have to say, I have asked for this time to share with you—and Members of the House—the message I would have otherwise given.

Nearly forty years ago a Democratic President, Harry Truman, went before the Congress to warn of another danger to democracy, a civil war in a faraway country in which many Americans could perceive no national security interest. Some of you can remember the world then: Europe lay devastated.

One by one, the nations of Eastern Europe had fallen into Stalin's grip. The democratic government of Czechoslovakia would soon be overthrown. Turkey was threatened, and in Greece, the home of democracy, communist guerrillas, backed by the Soviet Union, battled democratic forces to decide the Nation's fate.

Most Americans did not perceive this distant danger. So the opinion polls reflected little of the concern that brought Harry Truman to the well of the House that day. But go he did. And it is worth a moment to reflect on what he said.

In a hushed chamber, Mr. Truman said that we had come to a time in history when every nation would have to choose between two opposing ways of life. One way was based on the will of the majority—on free institutions and human rights.

"The second way of life," he said, "is based upon the will of a minority forcibly imposed upon the majority. It relies upon terror and oppression, a controlled press and radio, fixed elections and the suppression of personal freedoms."

"I believe," President Truman said, "that it must be the policy of the United States to support free peoples who are resisting attempted subjugation by armed minorities or by outside pressures."

When Harry Truman spoke, Congress was controlled by the Republican Party. But that Congress put America's interest first, and supported Truman's request for military aid to Greece and Turkey—just as 4 years ago Congress put America's interest first by supporting my request for military aid to defend democracy in El Salvador.

I speak today in that same spirit of bipartisanship. My fellow Americans—and Members of the House—I need your help.

I ask first for your help in remembering—remembering our history in Central America so we can learn from the mistakes of the past.

Too often in the past, the United States failed to identify with the aspirations of the people of Central America for freedom and a better life. Too often our government appeared indifferent when democratic values were at risk. So, we took the path of least resistance—and did nothing.

Today, however, with American support, the tide is turning in Central America. In El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica—and now in Guatemala—freely-elected governments offer their people the chance for a better future—a future the United States must support.

But there is one tragic, glaring exception to that democratic tide—the Communist Sandinista government in Nicaragua. It is tragic because the United States extended a generous hand of friendship to the new revolutionary government when it came to power in 1979.

Congress voted $75 million in economic aid. The United States helped re-negotiate Nicaragua's foreign debt. America offered teachers, doctors, and Peace Corps volunteers to help rebuild the country. But the Sandinistas had a different agenda.

From the very first day, a small clique of Communists worked steadily to consolidate power and squeeze out their democratic allies.

The democratic trade unionists—who had fought Somoza's National Guard in the streets—were now told by the Sandinistas that the right to strike was illegal and that their "revoluntionary" duty was to produce more for the state.

The newspaper—La Prensa—whose courage and determination had inspired so much of the Nicaraguan revolution—found its pages censored and suppressed. Violeta Chamorro—widow of the assassinated editor—soon quit the revolutionary government to take up the struggle for democracy again—in the pages of her newspaper.

The leader of the Catholic Church in Nicaragua, Archbishop—now Cardinal—Obando y Bravo, who had negotiated the release of the Sandinista leaders from prison during the revolution, was now vilified as a traitor by the very men he helped to free.

Soviet arms and Bloc personnel began arriving in Nicaragua. With Cuban, East German, and Bulgarian advisers at their side, the Sandinistas began to build the largest standing army in Central American history and to erect all the odious apparatus of the modern police state.

Under the Somoza dictatorship, a single facility held all political prisoners. Today there are eleven. Eleven prisons in place of one.

The Sandinistas claim to defend Nicaraguan independence. But you and I know the truth. The proud people of Nicaragua did not rise up against Somoza—and struggle, fight, and die—to have Cubans, Russians, Bulgarians, East Germans, and North Koreans running their prisons, organizing their army, censoring their newspapers, and suppressing their religious faith. One Nicaraguan nationalist, who fought in the revolution, says: "We are an occupied country today."

I could go on, but I know that even the Administration's harshest critics in Congress hold no brief for Sandinista repression. Indeed, the final verdict has already been written by Cardinal Obando himself in the Washington Post. Listen carefully to the Cardinal's words.

He says: The idea that the Sandinista regime "is a democratic government, legitimately constituted, which . . . seeks the welfare and peace of the people and enjoys the support of the overwhelming majority is not true."

To accept this as true, the Cardinal says, "is to ignore the mass exodus of the Miskito Indians . . . the departure of tens of thousands of Nicaraguan men and women of every age, profession, economic status and political persuasion . . . it is to ignore . . . the most terrible violation of freedom of the press and of speech in the history of our country . . . the expulsion of priests and the mass exodus of young people eligible for military service." As for the Catholic Church in Nicaragua, we have been "gagged and bound," the Cardinal says.

Many brave Nicaraguans have stayed in their country despite mounting repression—defying the security police, defying the Sandinista mobs that attack and deface their homes. Thousands—peasants, Indians, devout Christians, draftees from the Sandinista army—have concluded that they must take up arms again to fight for the freedom they thought they had won in 1979.

The young men and women of the democratic resistance fight inside Nicaragua today in grueling mountain and jungle warfare. They confront a Soviet-equipped army, trained and led by Cuban officers. They face murderous helicopter gunships without any means of defense. And still they volunteer. And still their numbers grow.

Who among us would tell these brave young men and women—your dream is dead; your democratic revolution is over; you will never live in the free Nicaragua you fought so hard to build?

The Sandinistas call these freedom fighters contras—for counter-revolutionaries. But the real counter-revolutionaries are the Sandinista commandantes, who betrayed the hopes of the Nicaraguan Revolution, and sold out their country to the Soviet Empire.

The commandantes even betrayed the memory of the Nicaraguan rebel leader Sandino, whose legacy they falsely claim. For the real Sandino—because he was a genuine nationalist—was opposed to communism. In fact, Sandino broke with the Salvadoran communist leader, Farbundo Marti, over this very issue.

The true Nicaraguan nationalists are the leaders of the United Nicaraguan Opposition: Arturo Cruz—jailed by Somoza, a former member of the Sandinista government; Adolfo Calero—who helped organize a strike of businessmen to bring Somoza down; and Alfonso Robelo—a social democrat, and once a leader of the revolutionary government.

These good men refused to make any accommodation with the Somoza dictatorship. Who among us can doubt their commitment to bring democracy to Nicaragua?

So, the Nicaraguan people have chosen to fight for their freedom. Now we Americans must also choose.

For you and I and every American has a stake in this struggle. Central America is vital to our own national security—and the Soviet Union knows it. The Soviets take the long view but their strategy is clear—to dominate the strategic sea lanes and vital chokepoints around the world.

Half of America's imports and exports, including oil, travels through the area today. In a crisis, over half of NATO's supplies would pass through this region. And Nicaragua, just 277 miles from the Panama Canal, offers the Soviet Union ports in both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

The Soviet Union already uses Cuba as an air and submarine base in the Carribbean. It hopes to turn Nicaragua into the first Soviet base on the mainland of North America.

If you doubt it, ask yourself: why have the last four Soviet leaders—with a mounting economic crisis at home—already invested over a billion dollars and dispatched thousands of Soviet bloc advisers into a tiny country in Central America?

I know that no one in Congress wants to see Nicaragua become a Soviet military base. My friends, I must tell you in all seriousness: Nicaragua is becoming a Soviet base every day that we debate and debate and debate—and do nothing.

In the 3 months since I last asked the House to aid the democratic resistance, four military cargo ships have arrived at Nicaraguan ports, this time directly from the Soviet Union. Recently we have learned that Russian pilots are flying a Soviet A.N.-thirty reconnaissance plane for the Sandinistas.

The Sandinistas claim this is just for making civilian maps. Our intelligence services believe this could be the first time Soviet personnel have taken a direct role in support of military operations on the mainland of North America.

Think again how Cuba became a Soviet air and naval base. You will see what Nicaragua will look like if we continue to do nothing. Cuba became a Soviet base gradually over many years. There was no single dramatic event—once the missile crisis passed—that captured the nation's attention. And so it will be with Nicaragua.

71-059 O-87-18 (Pt. 11)

The Sandinistas will widen and deepen another port while we debate: is it for commercial vessels or Soviet submarines? The Sandinistas will complete another air strip while we argue: is it for 707's or Backfire Bombers? A Soviet training brigade will come to Nicaragua. Half will leave and half will stay. And we will debate: Are they soldiers or engineers?

Eventually, we Americans will have to stop arguing among ourselves. We will have to confront the reality of a Soviet military beachhead inside our defense perimeters—about 500 miles from Mexico. A future President and Congress will then face nothing but bad choices, followed by worse choices.

My friends in the House, for over 200 years the security of the United States has depended on the safety of unthreatened borders north and south. Do we want to be the first elected leaders in U.S. history to put our borders at risk?

Some of you may say: this is fear-mongering. Such a danger to our security will never come to pass. Perhaps it won't. But in making your decision on my request for aid tomorrow, consider this: what are the consequences for our country if you are wrong?

I know some Members of Congress who share my concern about Nicaragua have honest questions about my request for aid to the democratic resistance. Let me try to address them. Do the freedom fighters have the support of the Nicaraguan people? I urge Members of the House to ask their colleague, the Chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, who recently visited a town in Nicaragua that was a Sandinista stronghold during the revolution. He heard peasants, trade unionists, farmers, workers, students, and shop keepers all call on the United States to aid the armed resistance.

Or listen to the report from Time Magazine of Central American scholar, Robert Leiken, who once had hopes for the Sandinista revolution. He says: "I have gone to a number of towns in Nicaragua where I have found that they the youth are simply not there. I ask their parents where they've gone, and they say, they've off to join the contras." In Managua, Leiken reports, 250 Nicaraguans stood on a breadline for 3 hours. "Who is responsible?" he asked. "The Sandinistas are responsible," the people said. "The Sandinistas," Leiken conclued, "have not only lost support. I think they are detested by the population."

Can the democratic forces win? Consider: There are 20 times as many Nicaraguans fighting the Sandinista dictatorship today as there were Sandinista fighters a year before Somoza fell. This is the largest peasant army raised in Latin America in more than 50 years. And thousands more are waiting to volunteer, if American support comes through.

Some members of Congress—and I know some of you—fear that military aid to the democratic resistance will be only the first step down the slippery slope toward another Vietnam. I know those fears are honest. But think where we heard them before.

Just a few years ago, some argued in Congress that U.S. military aid to El Salvador would lead inevitably to the involvement of U.S. combat troops. But the opposite turned out to be true.

Had the United States failed to provide aid then, we might well be facing the final Communist takeover of El Salvador, and mounting pressures to intervene—Instead—with our aid—the government of El Salvador is winning the war—and there is no prospect whatever of American military involvement.

El Salvador still faces serious problems that require our attention. But democracy there is stonger. And both the communist guerrillas and the right-wing death squads are weaker. And Congress shares credit for that accomplishment.

American aid and training is helping the Salvadoran army become a professional fighting force, more respectful of human rights. With our aid, we can help the Nicaraguan resistance accomplish the same goal.

I stress this point because I know many Members of Congress and many Americans are deeply troubled by allegations of abuses by elements of the armed resistance. I share your concerns. Even though some of those charges are Sandinista propaganda, I believe such abuses have occurred in the past. And they are intolerable.

As President, I repeat to you the commitments I made to Senator Sam Nunn. As a condition of our aid, I will insist on civilian control over all military forces; that no human rights abuses be tolerated; that any financial corruption be rooted out; that American aid go only to those committed to democratic principles. The United States will not permit this democratic revolution to be betrayed nor allow a return to the hated repression of the Somoza dictatorship.

The leadership of the United Nicaraguan opposition shares these commitments and I welcome the appointment of a bipartisan congressional commission to help us see that they are carried out.

Some ask: what are the goals of our policy toward Nicaragua? They are the goals the Nicaraguan people set for themselves in 1979: democracy, a free economy, and national self-determination.

Clearly the best way to achieve these goals is through a negotiated settlement. No humane person wants to see suffering and war.

The leaders of the internal opposition and the Catholic Church have asked for dialogue with the Sandinistas. The leaders of the armed resistance have called for a ceasefire and negotiations at any time, in any place. We urge the Sandinistas to heed the pleas of the Nicaraguan people—for a peaceful settlement.

The United States will support any negotiated settlement or Contadora Treaty that will bring real democracy to Nicaragua. What we will not support is a paper agreement that sells out the Nicaraguan people's right to be free.

That kind of agreement would be unworthy of us as a people. And it would be a false bargain. For internal freedom in Nicaragua and the security of Central America are indivisible. A free and democratic Nicaragua will pose no threat to its neighbors, or to the United States. A communist Nicaragua, allied with the Soviet Union, is a permanent threat to us all.

President Azcona of Honduras emphasized this point in a recent nationwide address. "As long as there is a totalitarian regime [in Central America] that has expansionist ambitions and is supported by an enormous military apparatus . . . the neighboring contries sharing common borders with the country that is the source of the problem, will be under constant threat." If you doubt his warning, consider this. The Sandinistas have already sent two groups of communist guerrillas into Honduras. Costa Rican revolutionaries are already fighting alongside Sandinista troops.

My friends in the Congress: With democracy still a fragile root in Central America—with Mexico undergoing an economic crisis—can we responsibly ignore the long-term danger to American interests posed by a communist Nicaragua, backed by the Soviet Union, and dedicated—in the words of its own leaders—to a "revolution without borders"?

My friends, the only way to bring true peace and security to Central America is to bring democracy to Nicaragua. And the only way to get the Sandinistas to negotiate seriously about democracy is to give them no other alternative. Seven years of broken pledges, betrayals, and lies have taught us that.

That is why the measure the House will consider tomorrow—offered I know in good faith—which prohibits military aid for at least another 3 months—and perhaps forever—would be a tragic mistake. It would not bring the Sandinistas to the bargaining table. Just the opposite.

The bill, unless amended, would give the Sandinistas and the Soviet Union what they seek most—time. Time to crush the democratic resistance. Time to consolidate power. And it would send a demoralizing message to the democratic resistance: that the United States is too divided and paralyzed to come to their aid in time.

Recently, I read the words of a leader of the internal democratic opposition. What he said made me feel ashamed.

This man has been jailed, his property confiscated, and his life threatened by the security police. Still he continues to fight. He said: "You Americans have the strength, the opportunity, but not the will. We want to struggle, but it is dangerous to have friends like you . . . to be left stranded on the landing beaches of the Bay of Pigs. Either help us or leave us alone."

My friends in the House of Representatives: I urge you to send a message tomorrow to this brave Nicaraguan—and thousands like him. Tell them it is not dangerous to have friends like us, Tell them: America stands with those who stand in defense of freedom.

When the Senate voted earlier this year for military aid, Republicans were joined by many Democratic leaders: Bill Bradley of New Jersey, Sam Nunn of Georgia, David Boren of Oklahoma, Howell Heflin of Alabama, Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, Bennett Johnston and Russell Long of Louisiana, Fritz Hollings of South Carolina, John Stennis of Mississippi, and Alan Dixon of Illinois. Tonight I ask the House for that kind of bipartisan support for the amendment to be offered tomorrow by Democrats Ike Skelton of Missouri and Richard Ray of Georgia, and Republicans Mickey Edwards of Oklahoma and Rod Chandler of Washington. This bipartisan amendment will provide the freedom fighters with what they need—now.

With that amendment, you also send another message to Central America. For democracy there faces many enemies: poverty, illiteracy, hunger, and despair. And the United States must also stand with the people of Central America against these enemies of democracy.

That is why—just as Harry Truman followed his request for military aid to Greece and Turkey with the Marshall Plan—I urge Congress to support $300 million in new economic aid to the Central American democracies.

The question before the House is not only about the freedom of Nicaragua and the security of the United States, but who we are as a people.

President Kennedy wrote on the day of his death that history had called this generation of Americans to be "watchmen on the walls of world freedom." A Republican President, Abraham Lincoln, said much the same thing on the way to his Inauguration in 1861.

Stopping in Philadelphia, Lincoln spoke in Independence Hall, where our Declaration of Independence was signed. He said far more had been achieved in that hall than just American independence from Britain. Something permanent . . . something unalterable . . . had happened. He called it: "hope to the world for all future time."

Hope to the world for all future time. In some way, every man, woman, and child in our world is tied to those events in Independence Hall, to the universal claim to dignity, to the belief that all human beings are created equal, that all people have a right to be free.

We Americans have not forgotten our revolutionary heritage. But sometimes it takes others to remind us of what we ourselves believe.

Recently, I read the words of a Nicaraguan Bishop, Pablo Vega, who visited Washington a few weeks ago. Somoza called Pablo Vega the "communist bishop." Now the Sandinistas revile him as the "contra bishop." But Pablo Vega is really a humble man of God.

"I am saddened," the good Bishop said, "that so many North Americans have a vision of democracy that . . . has only to do with materialism . . ." The Sandinistas "speak of human rights as if they were talking of the rights of a child—the right to receive from the bountifulness of the state . . . but even the humblest campesino knows what it means to have the right to act." "We are defending," Pablo Vega said, "the right of man to be."

Well Reverend Father, we hear you. For we Americans believe with you that even the humblest campesino has the right to be free. My fellow citizens, Members of the House: let us not take the path of least resistance in Central America again. Let us keep faith with these brave people struggling for their freedom. Give them, give me, your support; and together, let us send this message to the world: that America is still a beacon of hope, still a light unto the nations. A light that casts its glow across the land and our continent and even back across the centuries——keeping faith with a dream of long ago.

TRIBUTE TO DR. DAN COLLINS

HON. SALA BURTON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Speaker, on June 7, 1986, about 700 San Franciscans gathered at the Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco to pay special tribute to an old and dear friend of mine, Dr. Dan Collins.

I want to extend my warm congratulations to Dan and to share with my colleagues some things about this very special man on the occasion of his 70th birthday.

Dan has distinguished himself as a spokesperson for social justice and civil rights on local as well as State and National levels. In addition to being vice president and trustee of the National Urban League, Dan is a founder and board member of the San Francisco Bay Area Urban League.

Dr. Collins is a member of the board of trustees of four institutions of higher education, one of them, his undergraduate alma mater, Paine College. As an authority on education, Dan has held consulting positions on national educational boards and he was the first black on the State board of education in California. Dan served on corporate boards and is a member of many, many foundations.

Dr. Dan Collins: Husband, father, grandfather, dentist, educator, businessman, and author, we salute you; for a lifetime of unselfish dedication to the improvement of mankind and for all your achievements in your personal and professional life, we salute you.

Dan Collins is truly the renaissance man—he is indeed a man for all seasons. I join San Franciscans in saluting Dan Collins for his many years of dedication and commitment to his fellow human beings.

KIRK ON LaROUCHE

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, soon we will be celebrating our National Day of Independence and the values of freedom and democracy that have made this country great for over 200 years. Political extremism is a direct threat to these values, and we must be constantly on the alert for the emergence of political fanatics. The recent events in Illinois, where candidates supporting Lyndon LaRouche defeated traditional candidates for the Democratic nominations for lieutenant governor and secretary of state, have raised our consciousness regarding the dangers of political extremism. A recent speech by Paul G. Kirk, Jr., chairman of the Democratic National Committee, describes these dangers in clear detail, and places them into the context of our own struggle to preserve our hard-won freedoms:

ADDRESS BY DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CHAIRMAN PAUL G. KIRK, JR.

Within two weeks, all Americans will join the Empire State in the celebration of Liberty Weekend. The beauty of the Statue of Liberty—the symbol of America's basic principle—has been restored. We all look forward to a national celebration of our independence, our freedom, and our liberty. We will pledge our allegiance to these values. They are values we share despite our diversity. And we will pledge our fidelity to the responsibilities we share despite our individuality. We will pledge our allegiance and our fidelity to one another as Americans.

Whenever we have lost sight of that common bond as a people, we have foundered as a nation. When some of us refused to admit that human beings were not created to own other human beings, the nation divided in Civil War. When some were too greedy to believe that unbridled wealth could not be amassed at the expense of working America, the nation was crushed by economic Depression. When some were too proud to concede that no American, not even the President, is above the law, the nation was strained by the scandal of Watergate.

Today, the American tradition and the American condition call out for a renewed commitment to common purpose and to individual opportunity. We do no honor to the birth of this nation if we stand idle while Americans divide under a new social Darwinism, a blind non-policy which permits poverty as a price of one's birthright and wealth as the reward for one's greed and elitism.

When the politics of common sense and common purpose are overtaken by a politics of selfishness, threats to American liberty are inevitable. When people feel abandoned or ignored, and are left without hope in the daily struggle of their own lives, they search in desperation for easier answers. They are living in a vacuum crying out to be filled. They are vulnerable to cynical sloganeering, to simplistic solutions, and to extreme appeals to their baser instincts.

And when average Americans are not informed and their education as voters taken for granted, they, too, may be deceived by fanatical candidates or extremist cults whose purpose is to distort the value of true meaning and to pervert the meaning of true values.

Lyndon LaRouche is an extremist fanatic who distorted the value of true meaning and perverted the meaning of true values by naming his cult the National Democratic Policy Committee. Three months ago, two of his disciples won nominations of the Democratic Party for statewide office in Illinois.

And they won with the votes of too many decent, common sense citizens who, when asked why they had supported these candidates, said: "I didn't know who they were or what they represented."

No one can undo history, but the Democratic Party must not permit that kind of history to repeat itself. For those of us in leadership positions in the Democratic Party—at the national, state, and local levels—the Illinois primary results were a rude—but valuable—reminder of two basic truths of political life in America:

(1) Responding to the needs, the aspirations, the education of the American people must never be ignored or taken for granted;

(2) Political extremism of any form must never be ignored or taken for granted.

In the days following the Illinois primary, a close examination of Lyndon LaRouche and his extremist cult—by the Democratic Party and the media—revealed the classic hallmarks of fraud and fascism.

In a pattern not unlike that of a Mussolini or a Hitler, the LaRouchites has exercised political expediency by moving from the extreme left to the extreme right, indulging in Anti-Semitism and religious and racial bigotry, never acknowledging or accepting the fundamental principles of democracy—respect for the rights of others, respect for majority rule, and respect for civil—and truthful—public debate.

They specialize in hatemongering and hysteria, bilking the innocent and the elderly, blaming the world's problems on LaRouche's conspiratorial villains which range from your former Governor Harriman to the family of your former Governor Rockefeller, from the Jews to the Jesuits, from former Vice President Mondale to the Queen of England.

Just as other totalitarians have sought to destroy other democratic systems from within, the LaRouchites are participating in American politics under clouds of fraud and false pretenses. The allegations are legion: —Fraud in the raising of funds; fraud in the recruitment of candidates; fraud in qualifying for a place on the ballot; fraud in calling themselves a U.S. Labor Party; fraud in gaining political access at home and abroad; and fraud in calling themselves National Democrats.

As I think of what the centennial celebration will mean to me, I will think first of my grandfather—of how he must have felt, at age 14, just a little boy all alone, when he saw for the first time the "Mother of Exiles" welcoming him from the shores of Ireland.

Then I will think of his son, my own father, one of 14 children and the father of 5 himself, and how he must have felt, upon his return from World War II, when he saw Lady Liberty standing gracefully and proud in New York harbor, of what it meant to him to be home and to have had to leave behind—beneath endless rows of crosses and Stars of David—sons, husbands, and fathers of every creed and color who had given their lives for liberty and for a campaign to combat and conquer fascism.

Our battle is another kind of battle, but our defense must be no less vigilant.

In every campaign since Illinois, the Democratic Party has sought to ensure that, before each primary election, no voter would be able to say: "Nobody told me who the LaRouche candidates were or what they stood for."

We have monitored filings in every state in which LaRouche candidates have sought the Democratic nominations. Even in districts where Democrats have done poorly in the past, we have fielded candidates to oppose them—not to debate them and give them political legitimacy, but to defeat them by telling voters of their political lunacy.

To date, our strategy has succeeded. Since Illinois, I have devoted the Democratic National Committee's efforts to political action, and the LaRouche candidates have not won a single contested nomination for federal, state, or local office. They have been defeated by the true Democratic Party in 85 out of 85 election contests. The Liberty we love and will soon celebate is one which permits extremists like LaRouche, however freakish, however fascist, however fanatic, —to exercise free speech in America's political process.

This decisive record of rejection of the LaRouchites by the Democrats at the polls may be the most effective statement that a political party can make to protect that process as a matter of political action. But, as Chairman of the Democratic Party and its National Committee—the keeper of the party's name, its integrity, its ideals and its traditions—I tell you, as a matter of political principle, that the LaRouche sect, masquerading as the National Democratic Policy Committee, represents all that is alien to the spirit and character of the true Democratic Party.

They practice the politics of intimidation and harassment; the politics of prejudice and the politics of paranoia; the politics of extremism and exclusion; the politics of fraud and the politics of fear. The Democratic Party of the United States rejects their tactics, their policies and their politics and calls on the voters of New York State to do the same.

It may have been only a fluke of history that so bizarre and extremist a movement has heightened the vigilance of the world's oldest political party. And, it is reassuring that the Democratic Party has been successful in repelling these fanatical forces during the past three months. But, it is critical that we remember and remain vigilant—not only against the LaRouche movement but against other extremist movements as well.

Political extremism in America did not begin with LaRouche victories in Illinois in March of 1986, and it may not end with the election results in September or November of 1986. The LaRouche movement is only a recent example of extremist cults that have capitalized on discontent, exploited fear, promoted hatred, distorted politics, and defiled the true meaning of liberty and democracy.

A century-and-a-half ago, the Know Nothings exploited the tensions which resulted when the "Mother of Exiles" first welcomed her newly adopted children. The Know Nothings whipped up bigotry against Catholic immigrants. For more than a decade, they brought hate to American politics.

In the aftermath of the Civil War, the Ku Klux Klan continued to terrorize blacks and succeeded in denying them rights they felt had just been won. In the 1920's, the 1960's, and even in the '80's—the Klan re-emerged to attack blacks, Catholics, Jews, and other racial and religious Americans whose very presence has strengthened the diversity and, thus, the character of this nation.

The McCarthyites of the 1950's, the John Birchers of the 1960's and the LaRouchites of the 1980's may not have agreed on every issue. But they have shared a common view of the world—a belief in evil and all-powerful conspiracies; a disdain for the decent and nobler instincts of people; an impatience with compromise, majority rule, and with free and open debate. They have shared an intolerance for pluralism, diversity, and inclusion—the traditional practices and principles of American democracy, and the traditional values of the Democratic Party.

No Kahane and no Farrakhan, no extremists, no racists, no separatists, no demagogues who are not democrats with a small "d," will have any place in a party which is proud to be called Democratic with a capital "D." We reserve instead a place for those who sing "Sweet Land of Liberty" with the black preacher who dreamed of the day and died for the "day with all of God's children, black men and white men, Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics, will be able to join hands" as freedom rings.

During the next several days, the Democratic Party and most Americans will reflect upon and remember the true meaning of freedom and liberty and the true meaning of traditional American values—the abhorrence of prejudice, the tolerance of ideas and beliefs, the character and strength of America that is the very product of her diversity and pluralism, the freedom and fairness that is inherent in the politics of representation and inclusion.

Since its birth, this republic has been the safest haven for those in search of political and religious freedom. The Founding Fathers came together from different ethnic and religious backgrounds. Though they built colonies with different needs, resources and economies, they shaped a government committed to the belief that we are one nation. Though they recognized that a foundation of religious and moral values would be essential to the survival of the new government, they built respect for diversity into its Constitution. They proscribed in its Preamble that its purposes and theirs was to ". . . secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity . . ."

One of the blessings of liberty bestowed by this country and to be secured by us is the right and opportunity of any individual or group to participate in the American political process. But the right to participate in politics in America brings with it a responsibility to practice politics in the tradition of America.

In that context, and in anticipation of the nation's birthday, let me mention one other matter relating to the politics of our time. A new wave of activists—many organized by or affiliated with spiritual or religious leaders—is becoming increasingly vocal and active in the American political process. These Americans are involved in a good faith attempt to make their views heard. But the religious and lay leaders of their organizations could be truer to the very concepts their names represent.

Those who profess to hold dear the traditional values of America and call themselves the American Coalition of Traditional values would be truer to their name if their leader refrained from corrupting the traditional value of religious tolerance by declaring that Catholicism is a "false religion" and that Jews have brought their own suffering upon themselves.

Those who profess to honor the fundamental tenet of freedom and call themselves the Freedom Council could be truer to their name by refraining from moral absolutism and deeming less worthy those whose religious values or beliefs may differ from their own.

The issue of tolerance is at the essence of freedom, of liberty and of those values which are uniquely American. Our differences, our contradictions, our separate beliefs as Americans cannot be resolved by absolutism nor by denying their existence.

Democrats believe in separation of church and state which will allow any religion to flourish, to contribute to the public dialogue, to participate in public life without dictating public policy. We believe in religious tolerance not merely as the token toleration of another's faith, but as a precious asset of the American character.

If we are to truly celebrate liberty and freedom in America, we will all celebrate the right to believe freely and strongly in one thing while protecting the right of others to believe just as freely and strongly in the opposite. No American liberty is safe unless that American liberty is protected. It is our American political system that protects those liberties, and it is our political duty to protect that system.

The party of Jefferson remains true to the American and Democratic values of liberty and freedom, of racial brotherhood and religious tolerance.

From Thomas Jefferson, who wrote religious freedom into the laws of his state and nation . . . to Franklin D. Roosevelt, who saved working America and helped it enter the middle class and achieve economic security . . . to John Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson, and Jimmy Carter, who fought for civil rights and equal rights . . . the Democratic Party has stood for a vision of America as one nation, one people, with respect and caring for one another.

And today, that vision is no different. The Democratic Party is the party of common sense and the only party with a national sense of common purpose. It is the only political party that believes all Americans are in this adventure together, with equal and individual rights and opportunities, but with shared responsibilities.

The Democratic Party is, as it has always been, the political vessel for the hopes and aspirations of the average American. Democrats believe that individual opportunity and upward mobility, political, economic and otherwise, are reserved not just to the wealthy and the few, but are open to all, no matter one's roots, religion or region, no matter the color of one's collar or the color of one's skin.

It is no accident that the first Catholic nominee for the Presidency of the United States, a son of New York State, was a Democrat.

It is no accident that the first woman Vice Presidential nominee, a Catholic, a daughter of Italian heritage—and a daughter of New York State, was a Democrat.

It is no accident that the first Catholic to be elected President of the United States, a son of Massachusetts—and a son of Irish heritage, was a Democrat.

It is no accident that the first born-again Christian to be elected President of the United States, a son of Georgia, was a Democrat.

It is no accident that the two black presidential contenders, one a daughter of New York State, the other a son of South Carolina, have been Democrats.

At any time in our history, the surest political answer to extremism—the surest way to celebrate and renew the true meaning of liberty—is to fulfill the real mission of the Democratic Party.

To afford all Americans an equal opportunity to bring their voices and their values into the political process so long as they, in turn, respect that process by allowing others to do the same without fraud, or fear, or prejudice.

To build a future where every man, woman and child is given an equal opportunity to share in the promise of American life.

To do this, we only need to remember what I learned growing up in Boston: that the best politics is combining the toughness to govern with the compassion to care deeply enough to listen to the people, to respect their concerns, and to address their needs.

The politics of caring, of inclusion, and of values is the best strategy for victory; the proven model for principled, practical, common sense government; the proudest tradition of the Democratic Party; and the essence of the American political heritage of liberty and freedom.

As we celebrate Liberty Weekend together and as we take up the Democratic Party's battle today and in the days ahead, recall and take heart from the words of a noted journalist who said of other days and other struggles:

"The lesson of the days through which we are passing is that men and women cannot live upon the achievements of their forefathers, but must themselves renew them, . . . we cannot escape . . . the elementary facts of life—that for a people there is nothing for nothing, that what they have they must themselves make, that what they cherish they must themselves achieve, what they wish to keep they must themselves defend."

PANAMA DAILY INTERVIEWS CARDINAL OBANDO Y BRAVO

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, in a 1-minute speech today, I quoted Nicaraguan Cardinal Obando Y Bravo on life in Nicaragua and the ongoing war between the Contras and the Sandinistas. I urge my colleagues to read the entire text of the interview which follows:

According to the German internationalists, that is a "contra" strategy to move with greater ease through the northern mountains and "launch terrorist operations" against the civilian peasant population. "A good outcome in the case of the hostages is becoming increasingly difficult," the Europeans' communique noted.

In their document, the internationalists asked the government of Helmut Kohl and the Reagan administration to "end the kidnapping of their brother volunteer workers." The internationalists also maintain that the release of the hostages must be made "unconditionally." The Germans hold the governments of Bonn and Washington responsible for whatever may happen to the volunteer workers who have been held for 24 days by the FDN.

In view of the possibility that they may not be released through negotiation, the Europeans fear that only a "military solution" remains, which would mean a great risk to the lives of the workers. The Germans, in an attempt to draw world attention to the case, occupied the German Embassy in Managua on 10 May and have staged protests in front of the U.S. Embassy. Both the Germans and the Sandinista government blame the U.S. Government for the kidnapping of the volunteer workers.

PANAMA DAILY INTERVIEWS CARDINAL OBANDO Y BRAVO

(Interview with Archbishop Cardinal Oscar Obando Y Bravo by Mario Castro)

[Castro] Msgr, what is the Nicaraguan people's reality?

[Obando y Bravo] There is no doubt that our previous regime was unjust; now we have a leftist regime. If we are going to examine the situation from an economic viewpoint we must admit that the situation is very bad because we make our purchases with cards. In Nicaragua no one can buy what he wants, only what the state wants to sell.

In the war aspect there is a struggle against the groups that have turned against the government. The Sandinists say that all the insurgents are former Somozist guards, which is not true. Among them are peasants and former members of the FSLN. We have the cases of Engineer Robelo and Arturo Cruz, former members of the government, and there is also the case of Zero, Eden Pastora, former deputy minister of the interior. The truth is that the situation is tense, and international policy has a lot to do with it.

[Obando y Bravo] We must take into account that in Nicaragua there is a law that has suspended the Nicaraguans' rights and guarantees since 15 October 1985. For example, if I want to officiate a mass on the battleground, I must request permission to do so.

The Nicaraguan church has suffered a great deal. On 15 October precisely, a bulletin called "Iglesia" ["Church"] was issued. By 0800 the police had seized the bulletins, before any decrees had been issued. Later on they occupied our press and social support office, and recently we received a note informing us that the press as well as the social support office will be taken over by the government.

Our radio station was closed on 1 January because it joined the network carrying the president's speech late, etc. Now we have no way of reaching the people with our Sunday programs. Before this, I used to write a homily for the press every week, and now its publication has been prohibited. That means that freedom of expression has been totally restricted.

[Castro] What about the workers' freedom of expression?

[Obando y Bravo] There are unions that are independent and others that are aligned with the government. The independent unions celebrated 1 May with a mass that I officiated, but it was very difficult to advertise because the government prohibited any ads carrying my name. The other unions simply obey the government.

[Castro] What is the Catholic Church's role in Nicaragua?

[Obando y Bravo] To evangelize, spreading the good news of the dead and resurrected Christ. We are preparing a Eucharistic Congress scheduled for October on Christ the King Day, which will do a lot for the Lord's people.

Meanwhile, the church evangelizes and at times sheds light on some problems though a pastoral letter. The last pastoral letter referred to the people's church. We offer guidance, but it must be understood that when speaking of the church we also refer to the laymen, to the believers, who are the ones called upon to resolve temporary issues, things related to the government.

[Castro] Do you consider yourself a political leader in your country?

[Obando y Bravo] I look at the word "politics" from two points of view. One viewpoint is broad, the other strict. In the broad sense I understand it to be the search for common well-being; in that sense all of us are politicians. However, if we speak of party politics, of trying to achieve power, I believe the Catholic hierarchy should not participate in politics, because while it is true that there is a relative incompatibility when clergymen are members of a political party, there is also the risk of increasingly dividing the church. For priests, the only party should be Christ's.

[Castro] We spoke about liberation theology in Nicaragua.

[Obando y Bravo] There is a group of priests who have identified with the government. I would say they are part of the structure itself, and they believe that Marxism is the solution for the Latin American countries. They do not have a large number of people at the base levels, but they do enjoy a great deal of governmental publicity, especially abroad.

[Castro] In your opinion, can they belong to the church?

[Obando y Bravo] I believe that the church is always generous and merciful. Even if it applies a sanction, an excommunication, or an a divinis suspension, it is always a preventive-type of sanction that calls for reflection and a return to the right path.

In Nicaragua there are many priests who hold Cabinet posts, and the Holy See has handled this as a special problem. Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto and Culture Minister Ernesto Cardenal have been suspended a divinis by the Holy See; Education Minister Fernando Cardenal has left the Jesuit order through a decision of the order's highest authorities.

Personally, I believe that priests should not occupy public posts. That is laymen's work, and I have always felt that in Nicaragua there are laymen who are capable of holding those positions and perhaps of doing a better job than a priest.

[Castro] What can you tell us about Miguel D'Escoto's behavior, the accusations he has made, and his description of you as sacrilegious?

[Obando y Bravo] Along with the Nicaraguan people I have prayed that he will reflect and reconsider; we have prayed a great deal for his conversion. As a bishop and a Christian I do not feel any hostility toward him, and I know that I must pray for those who pursue and slander us.

[Castro] How are the Nicaraguan church's relations with those in the rest of Central America?

[Obando y Bravo] We keep in touch. We have received the constant support of all the bodies of the church, not only in Central America but in many other countries in the world who, aware of the situation of their Nicaraguan brothers, have expressed their spiritual support. This shows that when the church is united and one of its members suffers, the rest join to ask the Lord for help.

[Castro] What can you tell us about the contras?

[Obando y Bravo] The truth is that I have not kept in touch with them. I only know what the media reports. They are people who have risen up in arms, and although it is true that some of them were members of Somoza's government, the majority of them are students and young peasants who were 6 or 7 years old when the Sandinist revolution attained victory. Also among them are former members of the FSLN, who are struggling because they want another type of government.

[Castro] Are they supported by the majority of Nicaraguans?

[Obando y Bravo] That is very difficult to determine, because it is impossible to carry out a survey at this time. The FSLN does not favor surveys, and there are sectors of the population that support the government.

[Castro] And the church?

[Obando y Bravo] The church is the mother of all. We pray for the Sandinists and those who have risen up in arms, because as pastors we see them as two brothers struggling to destroy each other. This is why we have insisted so much on conversion and reconciliation. That is the role of the church hierarchy.

[Castro] Do you believe your country's government will fulfill its offer to withdraw foreign troops from Nicaraguan territory if the United States does the same in Honduras?

[Obando y Bravo] That is what the Sandinists have said. Nevertheless, I believe that would also depend on how that resolution is supported. We know that human beings can make promises and not fulfill them, just as the Roman saying goes: "It is common among the wise to have a change of mind." It depends on how that proposal is supported.

[Castro] Does Contadora have a future?

[Obando y Bravo] I believe that those of us who are involved should be grateful to the Contadora countries for their goodwill. Success . . . that is something else.

[Castro] What is your opinion of the friction that exists between Presidents Reagan and Ortega?

[Obando y Bravo] I believe we should take into account that there is tension and when this happens there can be no peace or reconciliation because even the language used is laden with violence. That is why I always insist that it is necessary to seek the path of conversion, because there will be no prompt solution of those conflicts.

[Castro] To conclude, where is Nicaragua headed?

[Obando y Bravo] Nicaragua has a leftist regime, and it is on a socialist path.

[Castro] Do you see any possibility of change?

[Obando y Bravo] I will only repeat what many leaders have said: "The revolution has its objectives, and it will not change them." To mention what one of them said some months ago, I believe the revolution is making history on a one-eyed horse. Because of this it will be difficult for it to change its objective even if it must face many obstacles and difficulties. It will not change.

BOS, MISURASATA REJECT UNO AS MAIN CONTRA GROUP

[Excerpt] The Southern Democratic and Nationalist Forces [Fuerzas Democraticas y Nacionalistas del Sur] have announced that they reject the committee made up of Alfonso Robelo, Arturo Cruz, and Adolfo Calero as the main political organization of the opposition against the Managua regime, thus provoking a rift with the Nicaraguan Opposition Unity [UNO].

The Southern Opposition Bloc [BOS] celebrated yesterday an important assembly at the Coribici Hotel—inviting dissident militia members from Eden Pastora's military command and the national news media—to reveal various important points which define the military and political situation prevailing among the various sectors fighting the Nicaraguan regime.

The assembly was presided over by Bayardo Lopez, Alfredo Cesar, Brooklyn Rivera, Leon Nunez, and Dr Leonel Blandon.

Dr Blandon acted as master of ceremonies and presented Dr Alvaro Taboada, who read a BOS communique concerning the events expected in the coming weeks and which will considerably affect Nicaragua's destiny.

IN HONOR OF RUBELL HELGESON

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of Rubell Helgeson, a well known community activist, who will be honored on July 2 as the Pacific Palisades Citizen of the Year. Mrs. Helgeson was selected as the one community member who truly exemplifies civic service and community dedication for the year of 1985.

She has been described as "a virtual 'knight in shining armor' in her tireless devotion to the welfare of the Palisades. Her indefatigability is exceeded only by her incredible store of knowledge concerning the intricacies and machinations of city and State government."

As a member of the Citizen's Advisory Committee for the Brentwood-Palisades Plan, Rubell worked with the city council office to create a suitable plan for this sensitive region. Her work culminated in 1985 with the adoption of the village specific plan, governing the commercial district, and the creations of a local design review board, of which she is a member. The board now meets regularly to approve or deny new construction.

Rubell's community involvement began about 15 years ago, when she left a journalism career for a short stint to work on local community issues. That short stint turned into several years, and she became a board member and then president of the Pacific Palisades Property Owners Association.

Mrs. Helgeson, who hails from Minnesota, is married to Wayne Helgeson, who is an engineer, and they have two children, David and Kirsten. Recently, she has gone back to school at UCLA to study urban planning.

It is a pleasure to share the accomplishments of Mrs. Helgeson with my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives. I ask that they join me in extending Ms. Helgeson congratulations and best wishes for continued success in all of her future endeavors.

IN TRIBUTE TO JANE DOE INC.

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 24, 1986

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues a tribute to women business owners written by the woman I nominated as delegate to the upcoming White House Small Business Conference. Dr. Killian wrote an inspiring overview of why these women became business owners and what they face each day.

[From Network, June 1986]

CONGRATULATIONS JANE DOE INC.: A CELEBRATION FOR WOMEN BUSINESS OWNERS

(By Patricia Killian)

Put on your party hat, Jane Doe, Inc., you and your entrepreneur colleagues are part of the first economic celebration for women. In 1986 you are recognized as the fastest growing segment of the business world; 35 percent of all new businesses are started by women.

You are innovators, franchisers, retailers, high technology, service and product suppliers. Your businesses account for 20 percent of the U.S. gross national product. Why is that a reason for a party?

As recently as 10 years ago, it was believed that women-owned businesses accounted for essentially nothing (0.3 percent of the gross national product). "Believed" because no one kept track of women in business then. "Believed" that, although women might sew booties in their spare room or throw pots in their basement, they couldn't have been in real business.

Now it is known that you are business smart and becoming richer with average receipts of $400,000 per year, and you number in the millions. Definitely time for a celebration! So who are some of you who are celebrating in Colorado?

Barbara Griffin of Whale Scientific with 19,000 square feet of manufacturing space in Commerce City who says, "I hold several patents on products our firm makes, and I market internationally."

Gizella Penn, president of Flexoveyor Conveyor Company, who has been manufacturing large equipment for over 20 years and just moved into another business upturn. Kass Rosenberger who founded Creative Home Health Care, and Adele Emerson who caters fine cuisine through her staff at Nutcracker Sweet.

Sandy Feldman who provides specialty nurses nationwide through her Critical Care, Inc. Barbara Gorgan with Western Industrial Contractors who installs huge pieces of machinery throughout the Rocky Mountain region, and Margaret Hainey whose Gemm Demolition blows up and tears down buildings by contract.

Ann Padilla whose SunnySide, Inc., Employment has just expanded to include temporaries after 11 years. Rosemary LaPorta who owns and operates one of the mountain region's finest art galleries. Diana Carroll, DRC Construction, who takes TV cameras to underground pipelines. Nora Mulholland of Office Furniture Broker who says, "We have 2,000 square feet of showroom and 8,000 square feet of warehouse." It is indeed a lively party, but. . .

Not everyone believes a party is called for, Jane Doe, Inc. The State of Small Business: A Report of the President May 1985 states that there are 54,800 of you in Colorado and your average receipts are only $7,589! So, what's to celebrate about poverty?

"Oh, everyone knows that the report is not about women like me," says Jane Doe, Inc. "For example, the 11 celebrants just mentioned and I are not included because we own corporations, and the report talks only about women with sole proprietorships who filed Schedule C tax forms for either part-time or full-time self-employment in 1982.

"To compare the people described in the report with women who are full-time business owners is like comparing the dollars earned by part-time self-employed men with the dollar receipts of Martin Marietta, Adolph Coors, Gates and Hewlett-Packard. We aren't comparable.

"Would you like to hear how we got into business ownership?" asks Jane, sipping something cool. "Go ahead and ask."

Nora: "I was canned."

Ann: "I knew I could do as well as who I was working for and I could do it my way."

Barb: "My husband died and I had to provide for the children and myself, and the business was our only asset."

Pat: "I was laid off and it was the best thing that ever happened to me."

And are all the celebrants pleased to be in business? "Sure, says Jane Doe, Inc. "I'm pleased. Sometimes it's a hassle, but the rewards are worth all the effort. I'm doing something important and meaningful; I'm creating something that no one else can—my business done my way. And I'm not alone."

The Small Business Administration says women own 27.9 percent of all Colorado businesses. But that's probably a low estimate, Jane says, since only sole proprietorships are considered. "They keep forgetting that women incorporate businesses and form partnerships."

The National Association of Women Business Owners surveyed its members in 1983 and found that 60 percent of women-owned businesses are corporations. Those 54,800 Colorado women proprietors noted in the report probably represent about one-third of the women in business in Colorado, which means there are some 173,968 women business owners in our state.

"And that means," Jane says, "that women generate billions of dollars each year in Colorado. Could this be? This party is certainly getting crowded."

Over at the punch bowl, some party goers are comparing notes. "When I have to pay the bills, I sometimes go nuts. My cash flow gets real hairy during my offseasons!" says Diana.

"I know what you mean," says Stephanie. "I have to use my lines of credit until the receivables come in. And sometimes the interest rates I pay for short-term notes are way more than four points above prime."

"But it's the payroll expenses that hurt me," moans Arlis. "Workmen's compensation, social security, Colorado and federal withholding all really mount up, and I dare not be late paying those. Even when people are late paying me."

"If you think that you have it bad, just try keeping track in a retail store. We're constantly making sales tax payments and they vary depending on what city and county we're in," complains Carolyn.

"Well, I hired a great accountant and she helped my bookkeeper set up some useful record-keeping systems," brags Lavona.

And the party goers are off comparing experiences with their lawyers, their accountants, their business management and public relations and employee hiring and benefits consultants. Jane Doe, Inc., and friends come to the conclusion that their successes are due in part to their astuteness in recognizing when they need expert assistance. And knowing that they must pay for it.

Over at the hors d'oeuvres table some of the retailers are conversing while munching. "Did you know that 45.6 percent of all wholesale and retail outlets are owned by women?"

"Are you sure about that?"

"It's in The Report." There is a moment of silence as everyone considers what it will be like when almost half of all types of business are women-owned, not just sales outlets.

Wilma Arnold of Faison Office Products, Judith Boyd of Les Chapeaux Ltd., Rose Edith Dwyer of Huymer Enterprises and Carolyn Fineran of Scandia Down Shops begin discussing market strategies. Lavona Marlow of Meggi's Dress Shop, Jane Martin of Potoflex Oven Sales and Judy Ruckstuhl of Color Profiles talk about marketing to upscale customers, while Carolyn Scholten of Best Book Buys and Marti Shotwell of World of Computers compare notes on the value of public relations, in addition to advertising.

From the center of the room comes a rumble of discontent. "I'm having the devil of a time getting financing," says Jane Doe, Inc. "I make and market all types of audio and video tape, but I'm a young business and therefore, I'm told, not a good loan risk."

You at least have inventory and equipment, but I have it even harder because I'm told I need to have collateral. My assets are my time and experience, and maybe some office equipment," says Laura who has a psychology office.

More than one-third of all service businesses are owned by women like Laura who have few business assets to pledge for business loans. "The last business loan I got I had to put a second mortgage on my house," explains Rose. "Would you believe that an established woman business owner back east had to have her 17-year-old son co-sign before she could get a loan? It's the truth. It was so outlandish that it was put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD!"

The celebration ceases and all is silent until Barb reminds them that when they want a business loan, they increase their chances of getting one with reasonable and appropriate terms if they provide a business plan, balance sheet, and profit and loss statement, along with the loan application form. And that the assistance of a good accountant helps too.

As the revelry slowly resumes, success stories are shared. Karen Boringer of Colorado Communication Resources, Sylvia Bellomy who owns The Maids, Mary Calhoun-Howe of Raemar Associates and Connie Maslow of Consultants for Business Meetings explains how they plan their business growth.

Nancy Peterson of the Penrose Executive Club and Dorothy Schluter of Dot Leasing describe how they change their business plans to meet changes in the marketplace. Martha Illige-Saucier, M.D., and Kae Marley who makes designer fashion explain why and how they provide personal care and service, and all the trainers, consultants and seminar producers talk about why they think Colorado women eagerly seek out their educational services.

The party becomes a network session where everyone learns a little about each other's business, and lots of business cards are passed around that will end up on business rolodexes for future references.

Then just before the dancing begins, Mary McCurry, president of the National Association of Women Business Owners and a Colorado CPA with a growing company, is presented with a dozen long-stemmed roses. The roses are in appreciation for her efforts on behalf of women business owners and for her urging them to share the value and vision of who they are.

The formal part of the celebration closes with Sandra Phillips, real estate broker, and Marlene Ospina of Ospina Investment Group leading the celebrants in cheers for the 20 percent of the gross national product. The celebrants agree to continue to support each other and to continue to do as Congresswoman Patricia Schroeder asks, "to walk together with energetic commitment and connectedness" toward the year 2000 and 50 percent of the gross national product.

SENATE—Wednesday, June 25, 1986

Legislative day of Monday, June 23, 1986

The Senate met at 10 a.m., in executive session, on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Not like the brazen giant of Greek fame,
With conquering limbs astride from land to land
Here at our sea-washed, sunset gates shall stand
A mighty woman with a torch, whose flame
Is the imprisoned lightning, and her name
Mother of Exiles. From her beacon-hand
Glows worldwide welcome; her mild eyes command
The air-bridged harbor that twin cities frame.
Keep ancient lands, your storied pomp! cries she
With silent lips. "Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,
The wretched refuse of your teeming shore,
Send these, the homeless, tempest-tost to me,
I lift my lamp beside the golden door!"

God of our fathers, as the Statue of Liberty is rededicated, we recall these significant words inscribed in the pedestal. May her torch of freedom continue to burn brightly. We praise You for our beautiful diversity and harmony—that to be American is to be black or red or brown or white. Thank You for a nation which is a refuge for all peoples, a haven for the oppressed.

We thank You, Lord, for leaders who seek the greatest good for the largest number in tax legislation, and for the profound sense of unity and harmony which prevailed in the Senate yesterday. Guide the conference that this integrity may be secure. In the love of God. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able and distinguished majority leader, Senator ROBERT DOLE, is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer, the President pro tempore, Senator THURMOND.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Under the standing order, the leaders have 10 minutes each. I will reserve the time for the distinguished minority leader and any time I may not use I will reserve. That will be followed by special orders in favor of Senators HAWKINS, PROXMIRE, CHAFEE, LEAHY, STEVENS, BOREN, MELCHER, and HART for not to exceed 5 minutes.

VITIATION OF SPECIAL ORDER

I ask unanimous consent that the special order in favor of Senator STEVENS for today be vitiated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Then, the Senate will have routine morning business up until 11 o'clock with Members permitted to speak for not more than 5 minutes each.

At 11 o'clock, there are three possibilities. The most likely is S. 2129, the risk retention bill. We understand that can be done quite quickly, maybe in an hour's time. If not, the diplomatic security bill, which is a very important piece of legislation may be brought up.

I understand there are some who believe this bill would be a good place to put a nonbinding resolution dealing with the SALT agreement. I hope that would not happen on this important legislation. There is every reason to believe that people who serve in our Embassies around the world are at some times in great or mortal danger. This is very important legislation. I hope that those who have troublesome amendments would save them for another day.

And then another possibility is the housing bill, S. 2507. If we can complete action on that in half a day, we might do that. Later today we will do the conference report on the supplemental appropriations bill. It passed the House on a voice vote. I hope we could resolve any differences we may have rather quickly on the supplemental. Again, I know that in my State a number of farmers are being denied advance payments under various farm programs because there is no money appropriated. So that legislation is very important, and there are other very important provisions in that bill.

TV IN THE SENATE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, under the resolution whereby we approved television in the Senate, there was to be a test period where we sort of "pulled the plug" for a period of time from July 15 to July 29. I am suggesting that may not be necessary. It seems to me that there is no reason for the so-called cooling-off period scheduled to run from July 15 to July 29. I believe we have had fair success with TV in the Senate. I have not detected any abuses. There are certainly some things we should change as far as bringing products on to the floor from our home States, and things of that kind. Perhaps we have to tighten up the rules on things like the size of charts that I see popping up on both sides in our debates.

But overall, I cannot honestly recall a single instance where I felt that Senators on either side were abusing their rights just because we had television. Some said, "Well, the tax bill took a lot longer." We went back and checked into that. It really did not take a lot longer. It is a bigger tax bill in many respects than the one we did in 1981. It took about the same number of days—13 days. It took less time I think than the tax bill in 1964. It took 20 days to pass that one without TV in the Senate. There are a lot of comparisons being made, but in my view, on balance, we can continue TV coverage and still make adjustments in some of the regulations.

We have heard from experts, consultants, colleagues, reporters, staff members, and the people. We have a lot of input. We think we can make some changes. I know the distinguished minority leader has a monitoring group. They have made some good suggestions. We have a similar group on this side. So it would seem to me that if we just drop out of sight for a couple weeks, it might be a bit confusing. Although some would say it is more confusing that we are in sight. But we will leave that to the viewers.

Keeping the cameras rolling is at least something we should consider and, hopefully, we will not be going off the air.

NOMINATION OF DANIEL A. MANION TO BE U.S. CIRCUIT JUDGE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, last night we began debating the nomination of Daniel A. Manion to be a U.S. circuit judge for the seventh circuit. I support Mr. Manion's nomination. And I do so for several reasons.

First, he has survived the most searching inquiries by the Judiciary Committee, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. He was found qualified after an indepth review of his peers from the legal profession in the American Bar Association.

Second, I support Mr. Manion because there is a longstanding vacancy in the Federal judiciary that needs to be filled. In the midst of the partisanship that is swirling around this nominee, it is easy to overlook the needs of the judiciary. The position to be filled has been vacant since July 1984. The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals is a busy court. It seems to me it is irresponsible for the Senate to delay further this nomination under such circumstances.

Third, I support this nomination because he is the President's choice.

Some might discount that as a valid reason. But the fact is, that President Reagan was elected, and reelected, by overwhelming majorities in 1980 and 1984. During both campaigns he repeatedly stressed the need to restore balance in the Federal judiciary. After all, Mr. Carter, in his single term, was responsible for the appointment of 256 judges, or more than 40 percent of the entire active Federal judiciary at that time.

A survey of the Judicature magazine, determined that even though these judges were to be selected by "merit," 95 percent called themselves moderate of liberal Democrats, and another 2 percent identified as Independents. It has taken President Reagan more than 6 years to balance out the Carter appointees.

Mr. President, on June 24 the Wall Street Journal ran an editorial, "More About Manion" that outlines the so-called allegations made against Mr. Manion, and very effectively shows how baseless these allegations are. The editorial concludes that, if the advise and consent role of the Senate becomes increasingly politicized, "it becomes less, not more, likely that important offices will be filled by men and women of quality."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the complete editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MORE ABOUT MANION

The Senate is about to vote on the nomination of Daniel Manion to be a Seventh Circuit judge in Chicago. Senators have heard plenty of arguments against Mr. Manion, thanks to a quarter-million-dollar ad campaign by the People for the American Way. They are summarized in Anthony T. Podesta's letter on the page opposite. But as with so many polemics in our contentious political life, they leave out a few key points.

Let's take them one by one:

Allegation: Mr. Manion says political opponents should be "penned up." Basis: In 1971, after his return from fighting in Vietnam, Mr. Manion appeared on the "Manion Forum," a radio show hosted by his father, Clarence. His role was to ask leading questions, such as why weren't antiwar protesters who broke the law jailed more often. Free speech guarantees expression within the law, but no jurist we know thinks violence gets First Amendment protection.

Allegation: Mr. Manion sympathizes with the John Birch Society. Basis: Clarence Manion was a member after serving as dean of the Notre Dame Law School. When he died, his son sent a letter to the society in thanks for its condolences. Daniel Manion never joined. He was a conservative deputy attorney general and state senator in Indiana. Michael Kendall, a liberal Democratic leader in Hoosier politics, sent a letter to Sen. Ted Kennedy saying few nominees were as "honest, truthful, unassuming, dedicated or judicious in their temperament."

Allegation: Mr. Manion doesn't believe in the Constitution. Basis: Sen. Howard Metzenbaum grilled Mr. Manion on a bill that would allow Indiana public schools to post copies of the Ten Commandments. Sen. Metzenbaum claimed that an identical Kentucky bill had been found unconstitutional. The Kentucky bill, however, required posting and public expenditure for the copies. The bill Mr. Manion supported gave schools the option of posting the commandments, but only if copies were privately donated. Anyway, legislators don't think voting for a bill in a gray area of constitutionality violates the oath of office. If Gramm-Rudman is unconstitutional, should Congress resign en masse?

As for the doctrine of incorporation, few scholars believe the Bill of Rights was intended to apply to the states. But Mr. Manion, like similarly skeptical jurists, says he is bound by the courts' acceptance of the principle.

Allegation: Mr. Manion doesn't have enough experience to be a judge. Rebuttal: Mr. Manion works in a small office in South Bend, Ind., and the briefs he submitted were on cases of condemnation, personal injury, tax, civil rights and securities law. How many judges had such a wide-ranging practice? Former Supreme Court Justice Robert H. Jackson was proud to have been a "country lawyer." Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes noted that the law would have more common sense if more judges had dealt with real-world issues and clients.

We could go on, but these allegations were never intended to rest on their own logic. They are a smokescreen for liberals who want to deny President Reagan his right of choice in judicial appointments. Sen. Paul Simon (D., Ill.) agrees, in effect, saying ideology is a reasonable consideration." Politics, not Mr. Manion's qualifications to be a judge, is the real concern. Sen. Simon gets an A for candor, but fails civics.

President Reagan gave the bottom line in his Saturday radio address. "Let's be honest," he said. "The real objection to Dan Manion is that he doesn't conform to the liberal ideology of some senators." Norman Lear and PAW are spending a lot of money to goad the Senate into politicizing its advise-and-consent role in presidential appointments. But the farther we travel down this road, it becomes less, not more, likely that important offices will be filled by men and women of quality.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I would hate to see us head down that road—a road that invites endless partisan wrangling over each and every judicial nominee—a road, I might add, that leads nowhere.

A "willful minority" might have blocked President Roosevelt from appointing eight Supreme Court Justices in 6 years. It would have been easy to go on a sitdown strike during the last 2 years of the Carter administration, instead of allowing the bulk of the Carter appointments to be confirmed.

But we did not do that. We operated under the principle that a President has the right to appoint the judges of his choice. And only when there is overriding evidence that the appointee is unqualified, should we demure. I would hope that we could set aside the urge to stage a partisan coup in the name of justice, and relocate our traditional spirit of comity.

Very honestly, it seems to me we ought to be able to bring this matter up and vote on it up or down. But now we are going to have to, if we can, obtain cloture so that we can then proceed to the nomination.

Now, I can understand if it were some matter of great national importance that you might want to go the cloture route. But here we are talking about one individual, one American, who has been nominated to be a U.S. circuit court judge. In my view, whether we agree or disagree with Mr. Manion; whether we intend to vote for or against Mr. Manion; we ought to be voting on the merits and not going through this procedural exercise. So I urge my colleagues on both sides to give the man an up or down vote. He is a very good person. I know he has been made the target by those on the left; These contend that somehow he is not qualified; somehow he does not understand the Constitution; that he comes from a small town and by inference, therefore, does not reflect modern views.

Mr. President, there is a longstanding vacancy, and it needs to be filled. This candidate was found qualified after an indepth review by his peers in the legal profession. He does have support from Republican and Democrats on the outside. I hope and believe he has the support of many Democrats in the Senate.

I hope we will also understand that he is the President's choice. The President, in a lengthy letter to me last week and a letter to the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator THURMOND, expressed his views. The President also expressed his views in his weekly radio address on Saturday.

I hope we can set aside the cloture motion and agree to, say, 8 hours of debate tomorrow. We could have the debate, vote up or down on the nomination, and see what happens.

So far as President Reagan is concerned, he has been elected and reelected by overwhelming majorities. During both campaigns, he repeatedly stressed the need to restore balance in the Federal judiciary.

President Carter, in one 4-year term, was responsible for the appointment of 256 judges, or more than 40 percent of the entire active Federal judiciary. Ninety-five percent call themselves moderate or liberal Democrats; another 2 percent identify themselves as Independents.

I guess the biggest fault with Mr. Manion is that he is viewed as a conservative. I did not know that was a disqualification in this country. Whether you are running for office, or you want to be a judge, or whatever job you may aspire to, being a liberal or conservative should not be a disqualification.

Mr. President, the President has a right to appoint the judges of his choice. And at least, we should give the President an up or down vote. We owe it, first of all, not to the President, but to Daniel Manion. Mr. Manion is a person of integrity, who has a good record, who may not satisfy the views of some—but who does? None of us does. We find that out everytime we are running for reelection. We may not satisfy all Republicans or Democrats or Independents.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, the majority leader would like to proceed with a vote on Mr. Manion, and the situation is that there is a filibuster or delaying of the vote.

I cannot understand the rationale of that. Let us get on with Mr. Manion, vote up or down. Those who oppose him would vote "No"; those for him would vote "Yes." What is to be gained by delaying, postponing, or filibustering it?

I think we want to proceed with the business of the Senate. I commend the majority leader for his statement; and I hope that those who are delaying this—and I take it there is a suggestion of a filibuster or delay in connection with this nomination—would let us get on with it. If his nomination is confirmed, fine; if it is not, at least the vote has been had. But let us get on with the voting. Nothing is gained by delaying the people's business, the business of the Senate, by filibustering this nomination.

Mr. DOLE. There is not much precedent for it. We checked back to 1973, and no judge has been rejected by cloture back to that date. If we are going to defeat the judge—judges have been defeated, Republican and Democrat—let us bring it out and vote. Let us not use some parliamentary maneuver to deny this man, a vote. It may be a very close vote. He may not have the votes. But let us find out.

I do not want to indicate that a number on the other side are not trying to put together a time agreement, because they are. If we cannot do that, I hope everybody will vote for cloture tomorrow, and then we would go on to the debate on the nomination.

There are some questions to be raised on every nominee. All of us are subject to questions, whether we are in or out of public life. When someone comes before this body to be a judge, or to serve in other public service, there are going to be some disagreements.

I thank the distinguished Senator very much.

Mr. CHAFEE. I hope we will not have to go through a cloture vote and all that business. I wish we could get a time agreement, whatever it is, and vote.

Mr. DOLE. We are working on it.

Mr. CHAFEE. I hope we can.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the standing order, the Chair recognizes the acting Democratic leader, the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute of the leader's time to the Senator from Illinois, and then I will ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the leader's time be reserved for his use later in the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Illinois.

NATIONAL SPINA BIFIDA MONTH

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, for the last 2 years, I have introduced joint resolutions which have designated October as "National Spina Bifida Month." Today, I introduce a joint resolution to designate October 1986 as "National Spina Bifida Month."

Spina bifida is a birth defect which results when one or more bones in the vertebra fail to close completely during prenatal development. It is the most common crippler of newborns, occurring in one of every 1,000 births. Spina bifida occurs more frequently than muscular dystrophy, multiple sclerosis, polio, and cystic fibrosis combined.

Although the cause is not known, spina bifida appears to be the result of multiple environmental and genetic factors. Studies have shown a high occurrence of spina bifida in urban areas and births during certain months of the year.

I am again introducing a joint resolution on spina bifida because the need still exists to heighten public awareness of this crippling birth defect.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and I urge its prompt approval.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 368

Whereas spina bifida is a birth defect in the spinal column which occurs in one of every one thousand births in the United States;

Whereas spina bifida is the most common crippler of newborns, resulting when one or more bones in the back (vertebrae) fail to close completely during prenatal development;

Whereas while the cause of spina bifida is not known, it appears to be the result of multiple environmental and genetic factors;

Whereas although most of the March of Dimes and Easter Seal poster children have spina bifida, many people have not heard of the defect;

Whereas only a few cities in the United States have proper care centers and specialized professionals that can provide the most effective, aggressive treatment for children and adults with spina bifida; and

Whereas an increase in the national awareness of the problem of spina bifida may stimulate the interest and concern of the American people, which may lead, in turn, to increased research and eventually to the discovery of a cure for spina bifida: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the month of October 1986, is designated "National Spina Bifida Month" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

(The following occurred later:)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Maryland if he would not mind, I have just a few minutes left in my leader's time. I would like to make an observation at this point.

I will yield the floor, Mr. President, if whoever gets recognition would allow me to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished minority leader without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Senator from Maryland.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my statement appear at another place in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PREPARING FOR A SUMMIT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the new Soviet Ambassador, Mr. Yuri Dubinin, met with me and several of my colleagues earlier today around coffee. He submitted a proposal by resolution of the Foreign Affairs Committees of the Soviet Union and the Soviet nationalities of U.S.S.R., the Supreme Soviet. Those committees have met and have proposed that there be discussions on arms control matters with the Foreign Affairs and Foreign Relations Committees of the Congress.

In that meeting were Senators PELL, the ranking member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations; Mr. MOYNIHAN, who is an esteemed member of the Intelligence Committee and, of course, has supercredentials in various posts within our Government and within several administrations, posts dealing with foreign policy and domestic policy, having been former Ambassador to India and former Ambassador to the United Nations; Senator NUNN, the ranking member of the Armed Services Committee, and Senator CRANSTON, the Democratic whip.

We discussed the proposal that had been submitted by these committees of the Supreme Soviet. We emphasized that the important thing in our viewpoint was for Mr. Gorbachev to promptly state to our President his, Mr. Gorbachev's, intentions with respect to a summit.

We emphasized the importance that there be a summit; that Mr. Reagan is desirous of a summit; that if there is going to be a summit, there should be adequate preparations made, well in advance, with respect to the agenda; that the President had proposed a meeting between Mr. Shultz and Mr. Shevardnadze for the purpose of preparing the agenda, just as was done prior to the previous summit.

We stressed the fact that it was important from the standpoint of peace, that there be discussions regarding a mutual, verifiable arms control treaty, but not only with respect to the talks that are going on in Geneva and not only with respect to nuclear weapons and the strategic arsenals, but also with respect to conventional weapons.

We indicated to the Ambassador that if such meetings were to go forward, we felt that the membership on both sides should be small in number, that better discussions and a better dialog could be had with a small group rather than a large one.

Reference was made to the Senate observers group, which has the stamp of approval of the Senate thereon, and the fact that the observer group has been active in attending the negotiations in Geneva and has had continuing discussions with the negotiators there on both sides, and has been in a position to inform the Senate as to what they, the observers, have heard and seen.

We also stated that if there is to be such a dialog between such groups, the dialog should only begin after a summit date has been agreed upon. We made it very clear that we would not see this as a substitute for a summit by any stretch of the imagination and that if we are going to have meetings and continuing dialogs, no meeting should occur before a summit date has been agreed upon, but that the first meeting, if we decide on both sides—it would have to be bipartisan of course—to go forward, such a meeting should be held before the summit but only after a summit date has been agreed upon between Mr. Gorbachev and the President.

Of course, we perceive this as only a mechanism whereby there can be a continuing dialog in which no agreements can be entered into. The group would have no authority to enter into any agreements, but it could be beneficial, I should think, from the standpoint of a dialog and in helping to prepare for the summit.

We indicated to the Soviet Ambassador that we would discuss it further among ourselves. We did not say yea or nay to the proposal. We did suggest that if such a dialog between such groups does go forward, Mr. Dobrynin, the former Soviet Ambassador to the United States, be included as a part of the Soviet group. We also suggested that Mr. Ligachev, the No. 2 man in the Politburo, be included in such a group. That would give the Soviet group considerable stature from our standpoint.

We also made it clear, of course, that the organizational structure and jurisdiction and powers of committees in Congress are very, very different from the very inflexible structure of the Soviet parliamentary bodies and that those parliamentary bodies of the Soviet Union speak with one voice whereas, in the case of our own parliamentary bodies, there are many diversities and there is considerable difference in the stature and standing and influence as between the two.

I have told Mr. DOLE about what went on in our meeting and the fact that we emphasized the need for Mr. Gorbachev to get on with agreeing to a submit and agreeing to a date therefor.

I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Chair recognizes the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS], to be followed by the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator from Rhode Island, and the Senator from Vermont, for not to exceed 5 minutes each.

THE COCAINE APOLOGISTS

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, cocaine killed Lenny Bias, that brilliant basketball star from Maryland with a life bright with promise. It's now official from the Maryland State medical examiner. Even the network news is now telling us that casual, first time cocaine use can be lethal.

I would hate to think that it took the tragic death of Len Bias to make believers of Dan Rather, Tom Brokaw and company, in what was clear to many of us all along. But old myths die hard, harder than strong young men like Lenny Bias. And the myth of the harmlessness of those so-called recreational drugs like cocaine still has many believers in the mass media, the entertainment industry, our universities, and even the health profession.

We will continue to hear from the old predictable allies of the drug culture, like Dr. Lester Grinspoon of Harvard. Grinspoon was very quick to tell the world, after Len Bias' death, that his heart damage was unlikely to be caused by cocaine use. What is really discouraging is the ease with which drug use apologists like Grinspoon, who should have long ago been discredited, get their propaganda published in our national press.

It is heartening to see the Washington Post, now after Len Bias' death, full of dire warnings about cocaine. Will this new editorial policy survive the funeral? It was not always so at the Post.

If Lenny Bias looked at the front page of his morning newspaper when he was a senior in high school in Lanham, MD, he would read on page 1 of the Washington Post, on February 25, 1982, a story headlined "Cocaine Behavior—'Recreational' Sniffing Found No Riskier Than Alcohol or Tobacco: Heavy Use 'Enslaving'." Here it is: The editors put that message on page 1, in the headline of the article, just so casual readers like Lenny would not miss it, I guess.

This article goes on the quote Drs. Craig Van Dyke and Robert Byck of Yale who tell us in their wisdom that "the pattern of—cocaine use—behavior is comparable to that experienced by many people with peanuts or potato chips," and further "recreational use of the drug through the nose is neither addictive nor harmful."

To what editor of the Post does the community owe its appreciation, for deciding to run this fairy tale at all, let alone put it on page 1 with the message in headlines?

As chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Alcohol and Drug Abuse, I have held many hearings on the subject and taken testimony from our best experts on the dangers of drugs like cocaine. Unfortunately, I have found the media by and large not at all interested in such testimony; so the public, people like Lenny Bias, never got the message. Sadly they read the Post instead.

□ 1020

As a Senate subcommittee chairman, elected representative of the people of my State of Florida, I often watched powerlessly and in frustration as the media gave voice instead to the drug culture lobby. Organizations like NORML—National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws—and others would get first rate coverage from the Post and others for their press conferences, new releases, editorial page offerings, or their congressional testimony. Freedom of the press, they call it.

Just last week, the Post gave that great guru of the drug culture, Timothy Leary, a huge, very favorable promotional piece, the feature article on page 5 of the style section. Any good PR man could probably quote you a price in six figures for the value of that promotion from the Post for Leary. Meanwhile, Timothy Leary continues to travel through our Nation's campuses, extolling the virtues of drugs and the psychedelic lifestyle to our impressionable young college students. Just another community service from the Post.

Wouldn't it be terrific if we had a news media that would run valuable promotional pieces like that for those wonderful private citizens fighting a stubborn and courageous war against the drug culture, rather than for it. They are fighting for that great unstylish majority of our society who have no use for drugs but no voice either. I could suggest a few names if the Post were interested, people like Joyce Nalepka, president of the National Federation of Parents for Drug Free Youth, Otto and Connie Moulton, founders of Committees of Correspondence of Danvers, MA, or Sue Rusche from Pride, of Atlanta, GA.

I won't hold by breath. But I'm not forgetting either. For those interested in a striking example of irresponsible journalism, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the Washington Post article by Thomas O'Toole of February 25, 1982, entitled "Cocaine Behavior—'Recreational' Sniffing Found no Riskier Than Alcohol or Tobacco: Heavy Use Enslaving."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 25, 1982]

COCAINE BEHAVIOR—"RECREATIONAL" SNIFFING FOUND NO RISKIER THAN ALCOHOL OR TOBACCO; HEAVY USE "ENSLAVING"

(By Thomas O'Toole)

Two medical researchers who have worked for six years with animals and humans at the Yale University School of Medicine claim that "recreational" sniffing of the illegal drug cocaine is no more habit-forming or threatening to health than are small doses of alcohol or tobacco.

"The pattern of [cocaine use] behavior is comparable to that experienced by many people with peanuts or potato chips," Drs. Craig Van Dyke and Robert Byck write in the March issue of Scientific American magazine. "It may interfere with other activities of the individual, but it may be a source of enjoyment as well."

On the other hand, Van Dyke and Byck say, heavy use of cocaine by smoking or injection can be so harmful that the drug becomes "enslaving," forcing the user to prefer the drug over anything else in life.

"When a drug like this is overused, it can be intensely destructive in the sense that a user's entire life structure may change," Byck said in a telephone interview. "When cocaine is taken regularly, it can cause sleeplessness, loss of appetite, hallucinations and paranoia. Injected cocaine or smoked cocaine can make users so enslaved it can destroy lives."

In experiments with 30 cocaine users and at least as many monkeys over a six-year period, the two researchers found that "recreational" users of cocaine who "snort" the drug through the nose feel effects that differ dramatically from those experienced by users who frequently inject it into their veins or smoke it in its pure powder form in what is called "free base."

So fleeting and so mild are cocaine's effects, Van Dyke and Byck report, that most recreational users cannot tell the difference between cocaine and other drugs such as lidocaine (Xylocaine), procaine (Novocaine) and even some placebos such as sugar and talc that in their powdered form resemble cocaine.

"Our subjects, all experienced cocaine users, could not distinguish a single dose of cocaine taken intranasally from the same quantity of the synthetic local anesthetic lidocaine," they write. "Such results are the first steps toward distinguishing the almost overwhelming mythology that surrounds cocaine from reliable information about its effects."

The two doctors said cocaine users may be paying $100 a gram for a drug that ranges from zero to 50 percent cocaine. Much of the cocaine being sold to users may be like bottles of cheap wine sold as vintage wine to those who cannot tell the difference, they said.

"It's clear to us that the cocaine on the street has been cut tremendously, espceially with local anesthetics, like procaine," Van Dyke said. "The only way users can test the stuff they're getting is by tasting it, and procaine will momentarily deaden the tongue and lips just like cocaine. There's no way people can tell the difference."

Despite the devastation caused when cocaine is smoked or injected, Van Dyke and Byck concluded that recreational use of the drug through the nose is neither addictive nor harmful.

"Cocaine users can take the same dose every day and get the same effect," meanning they do not gain a tolerance to the drug as do users of opiates, barbiturates and even alcohol, they write.

"There are withdrawal signs . . . but they are quite undramatic when compared with the withdrawal syndromes associated with opiates, barbiturates or alcohol," they write.

They conclude overall that "a considerable bureaucratic constituency depends for its existence on the public belief that cocaine is unequivocally pernicious. It is not clear whether the potential for the abuse of cocaine justifies the intensity of such efforts.

"The main threat from cocaine is the waste of human potential that could result from widespread consumption. Cocaine policy and regulations take little account of these conclusions."

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Wisconsin.

IS SALT II WORTH FIGHTING FOR?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on May 27 President Reagan said that this country may not continue to abide by the second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty [SALT II]. He charged that the Soviet Union has violated the treaty. He said that unless he sees evidence that the Soviet Union has stopped its violations, our country would proceed to increase our nuclear forces "according to our needs". The President's statement coincided with his announcement that we would comply with the treaty for now by dismantling two Poseidon submarines.

Secretary of Defense Weinberger on the following day, May 28 declared the United States would definitely ignore the treaty in August or September when it will arm B-52 bombers with cruise missiles in direct and deliberate defiance of the specific provisions of the treaty. Mr. President, is it in the national security interest of this country to kill the one and only treaty that restrains the offensive nuclear arms race between the United States and the Soviet Union? Note, Mr. President that I ask: "Is our deliberate violation of SALT II in the national security, I repeat—the national security—and strictly the national security interest of the United States?"

Obviously this action will fire a fatal shot into the heart of arms control. Certainly those who believe that arms control provides the only realistic alternative to a suicidal arms race with the Soviet Union will recognize this decision for the tragic mistake it is. But even those who have little or no faith in arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union will have serious reservations about what the end of SALT II will do to the strictly military position of the United States vis-a-vis the Soviet Union.

Mr. President, the only analysis this Senator has seen of what the termination of SALT II would do to the relative military strength of the Soviet Union and the United States has indicated that with the death of SALT II the U.S.S.R. will quickly and surely increase its military strength far more than the United States. This has been the consistent position of the generals and admirals who have the responsibility for our Armed Forces. It has been the position of our outstanding military experts in the Senate, the leaders on whose expertise many of us have relied. Certainly a decision to repudiate this crucial treaty should require a specific and detailed bill of particulars on four counts. The Congress deserves to know precisely where and when and how the Soviets have in fact violated SALT II. We should have that allegation in details. We don't have it now. Is SS-25 a new missile and, therefore, in violation of the treaty?

Is the Soviet Union violating the SALT Treaty by encrypting their telemetry? Almost every Senator who has spoken on this issue, including critics of the administration's SALT decision, assume the Soviets have in fact violated the SALT Treaty. They may—I repeat "may"—all be wrong, the fact is that the wording of the SALT II Treaty is tragically ambiguous. We should go to the mat with U.S.S.R. to clarify it.

Second, we need to know the precise military significance of those violations. What kind of a military advantage do these violations—if they are substantiated—give the U.S.S.R.?

Third, we should know exactly what this administration has done with respect to those particular violations to protest them, to secure full explanations of them from the Soviets and to persuade the Soviets to discontinue the violations. We have a Standing Consultative Commission or [SCC]. What was the purpose of the SCC? It was established to secure compliance with arms control agreement—between the superpowers. Previous administrations have wisely and effectively used that commission to explore and rectify violations. We should know what this administration has done through the SCC with respect to the alleged Soviet violations of SALT II.

Fourth the Congress should know exactly what military advantages in detail, the United States will secure by over-riding SALT II. To date we in the Congress and the American people have none of this specific bill of particulars. We have nothing but flag waving generalities. Certainly when the President of the United States complains about Soviet violations all of us as loyal Americans will give the President the benefit of the doubt. But why doesn't the President make his case and make it specifically in detail?

Finally, the assault by the administration on SALT II has to be put in the context of the Reagan administration's record on arms control. The President has opposed each and every arms control treaty entered into by the United States and the Soviet Union for the past 25 years. He is the first President since the dawn of the nuclear age who has made no progress in negotiating arms control treaties. He has repudiated the treaty ratified promise of this country to negotiate a mutual verifiable end to nuclear weapons treaty. His star wars missile defense would carry the arms race into space and directly repudiate the ABM Treaty ratified by the Senate by an 89 to 2 vote. And now the President would drive the last silver spike into the heart of arms control by renouncing SALT II. In this dangerous nuclear age this is a sorry, and tragic record.

(Mrs. HAWKINS assumed the chair.)

THE MYTH OF THE DAY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Madam President, the myth of the day is that the Federal Reserve Board—the Fed—can reduce interest rates and juice up the economy. On Monday, the majority leader recommended that the Fed follow precisely this course. Because the economy is sputtering, the Fed will face increasing pressure to print more money and bring down interest rates.

I always hesitate before differing with the distinguished majority leader, but this is one case where the leader is making a mistake. Reduced interest rates would help the economy but the Fed may lack the power to get us from here to there, at least without a big assist from the Congress and the administration. The huge deficits we have incurred—both trade and fiscal—limit the ability of the Fed to act.

Suppose it does try to reduce interest rates. Right off the bat, that means that foreign investors are going to be less likely to help us finance our fiscal deficit by buying our bonds. Such foreign investment is one of the major reasons why these deficits have not driven up interest rates. If that source of money dries up, and the effort to lower interest rates will do just that, then the Fed may find its best efforts thwarted.

An even more important hobble, however, is that the Fed is already printing money at an alarming rate. If economics has one law that has yet to be repealed it is that inflation is caused by too much money chasing too few goods. Last year, the money supply jumped by over 12 percent while our output of goods and services limped along at a 2.2-percent growth rate, after adjusting for inflation. Other, broader measures of the money supply grew less rapidly, but their growth was still well above that of real economic growth.

How much more money growth can we tolerate without reigniting inflation? This Senator does not know the answer to this question but even the most steadfast optimist would have to start worrying after examining these figures.

Madam President, we—the Congress and the administration—would give the Fed a lot more elbow room if we were to act decisively to reduce the deficit. We should cut spending including military spending. We should, if we cannot cut spending enough, raise taxes. We must cut the deficit. So far, we have talked a good game, but have done little to followthrough. That, unfortunately, is not myth.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR CHAFEE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

THE COMMUNITY AND FAMILY LIVING AMENDMENTS OF 1985

Mr. CHAFEE. Madam President, I believe most of my colleagues in the Senate would agree that people should live in homes not in institutions. Children should live with their natural parents, or when necessary, adoptive families or foster families. When this is not possible, they should live in small, homelike environments. Similarly, adults should live in the community—sometimes with friends, sometimes with their parents, but always in the community, if possible, and always with the support they need to achieve their full potential.

These ideas are taken for granted by many of us. But, Madam President, many Federal policies actually discourage their implementation.

There are individuals in our society today who do not have the opportunity to live in their own homes. There are families who have not had the opportunity to keep their children with them.

(Mr. WARNER assumed the chair.)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, why is this so?

I am talking about individuals who have mental or physical impairments.

Mr. President, people with disabilities have the right and the need to live in the community, regardless of the severity of their disability. We have the technical skill and the professional expertise to make this right a reality. This is an approach proven in community after community throughout this country—in my own State of Rhode Island, in Michigan, in New Hampshire, in Utah, and in many other States.

I have introduced legislation—the Community and Family Living Amendments of 1985, S. 873—which would encourage States to develop community-based services for those with mental or physical impairments. This would be accomplished by phasing down Federal Medicaid support for large institutions and transferring that support to the community. S. 873, the legislation I am introducing, proposes a complete restructuring of the Medicaid Program as it relates to those with severe disabilities.

The enactment of S. 873 would mean that individuals now living in the community will never have to face the traumatic experience of being placed in an institution simply because there is no other place to go. It would mean that families would never be faced with a situation in which they can no longer care for their children at home and the only other option is institutionalization.

In order for a disabled individual to move back or remain in the community much careful planning is needed. In other words, the transfer from an institution to a community-based living facility requires planning.

Under the plan that I have proposed, every institutionalized person with a physical or mental impairment would have a right to have an individually tailored program that best meets their needs for supervision, support, health services, and education. My bill requires written program plans, developed at team meetings, with parent participation. I have stressed the word "program" for a reason. It seems to me we need to stop equating buildings with programs. Our society can and must offer a continuum of services, but we do not need large buildings to accomplish this. The notion that big buildings equal better programs has been shown to be false.

Some States are not yet ready to support some of their most challenging citizens in community settings. That is why the bill I have introduced provides a length of time, a period of 15 years in all, for this transition. Now, 15 years is a long time. It goes to the end of this century. And, by the end of that time, we certainly ought to be able to have worked out a transfer of most people out of institutions into small community-based facilities.

However, in the legislation, I have provided that 15 percent of the Medicaid funds currently going to the States can be used for institutionalization.

My bill gives parents the right to review and appeal any program dealing with their children. If a child is to be moved out before the parent thinks it is right—that is, moved out of the institution—then the parent has the right of appeal.

My legislation stands for many of the ideals held dear by all of us. Those ideals should apply to all Americans, but today they do not. Severely disabled people have been second-class citizens for too long, locked up in institutions. What we are trying to do is get them out of institutions. This has proven tremendously successful in my State and in other States, as well.

When the person is out of the institution in a smaller setting, community-based setting, that person realizes his or her full potential and learns to do things he or she was never called upon to do in a large institution.

So I ask my colleagues to join me and eight other cosponsors of S. 873 in developing a system where each person, no matter how disabled, is cared for, supported, and served in the community where we all belong—together.

S. 2596—THE PLASTIC WASTE REDUCTION ACT OF 1986

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today a bill to address the adverse effects of plastic waste materials on the environment, including their effects on fish and wildlife. Joining me as cosponsors of this measure are Senators STAFFORD, PELL, BAUCUS, and SIMON.

Over the last decade, there has been growing concern among conservationists and scientists over discarded plastic in our Nation's waters and on land. Entrapment in plastic debris such as six-pack holders, packing bands, wrapping materials, and ingestion of plastic materials is known to kill thousands of birds, seals, turtles, sea lions, and fish each year.

After World War II, plastic materials displayed a hundredfold growth in the marketplace. Products previously made from metal, glass, paper, and cloth have been rapidly replaced by plastic products. Just last year, about 50 billion pounds of plastic was used to make a myriad of products. Of the total plastic usage, over 10 billion pounds was used in packaging applications. Given the existing data, a substantial portion may be improperly disposed of in the Nation's environment.

The wider use of plastic materials has led to a number of disposal problems with serious consequences. Lightweight plastic products discarded in the water neither sink nor disintegrate. This debris is virtually invisible to many types of marine life, and can float for years, causing entrapment and killing marine animals before eventually washing ashore.

In addition to entrapment of marine life, plastic debris is recognized to pose a hazard to fish and wildlife through ingestion. Raw plastic particles, from which plastic products are manufactured, enter the waters from manufacturing plants. These particles are also lost from ships, particularly from loading and unloading cargo. Fish and wildlife eat such raw plastic particles and plastic bags because of their resemblance to natural food. Ingestion can be fatal.

Plastic pollution in the ocean is of global magnitude. A survey of the South Atlantic found a density of 1,000 to 2,000 raw plastic pellets per square kilometer. On one beach in New Zealand, over 100,000 plastic particles have been found per linear yard of beach. It is estimated that at least 640 miles of a Japanese salmon driftnet are left to float in the North Pacific each year. Since plastic nets are not biodegradable, they will float until washing ashore or sinking with the weight of seaweed, algae, and barnacles. Marine mammals, seabirds, and fish become entrapped and die in the lost nets.

Another obvious effect of plastic pollution is the esthetic one. We cannot walk to our Nation's beaches and parks without encountering plastic litter. A recent beach cleanup effort in some coastal States, including Rhode Island, resulted in the collection of thousands of discarded plastic products. Among the most prevalent items were six-pack holders, packing bands, pieces of fishing nets, and containers. In an Oregon cleanup, 1,500 six-pack holders, over 2,000 strapping bands, about 18,000 pieces of styrofoam, and 1,000 pieces of plastic fishing gear were recovered.

It is also reported that marine debris poses hazards to seagoing vessels. Propellers, shafts, and intakes of marine vessels have been fouled by floating nets and other plastic debris. Sunken abandoned nets can be an obstacle to submersible craft. Plastic debris also poses a threat to divers.

Thus, far, there has not been a comprehensive study evaluating the impact of plastic debris on the environment including fish and wildlife. However, as the use of plastics continues to grow, we can't ignore the adverse environmental impacts of these materials. Congress needs to carefully examine the environmental pollution of discarded plastics on land and in waters and take appropriate steps to correct the problem.

My bill will establish a two-step approach.

First, the bill provides for a ban of nondegradable plastic six-pack holders and other plastic beverage connecting devices. EPA is required to issue the regulation 18 months after the date of enactment of this act. Following the regulation, manufacturers will have 6 months to comply and to use up their inventory of nondegradable materials. My bill will provide for uniform regulation of these products for all the States.

Mr. President, I'd like to add that 10 States, including Connecticut, Delaware, Maine, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Oregon, Vermont, California, and Alaska have banned the sale of nondegradable six-pack holders and other plastic beverage connecting devices. Italy has recognized the problems of discarded plastics on the environment. In 1984, the Italian Minister of Industry issued a requirement that, by January 1, 1991, all bags and plastic wrappings must be made of biodegradable materials.

Second, the bill requires the Administrator of EPA to assess the adverse impacts of discarded plastics on the environment including its effects on fish and wildlife. The bill also requires that within 18 months of enactment, the Administrator must make recommendations to Congress on actions which might be taken to alleviate the problem. In making the recommendations, EPA will consider the environmental, public health, and economic impacts of such actions.

In undertaking this study, the Administrator will consult with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, other Government departments or agencies doing research in this area, as well as the affected industries.

I hope my colleagues in the Senate will join me in this effort to reduce the plastic pollution of our land and waters.

The problems posed by discarded plastic materials have been highlighted recently in articles in both the New York Times and Time magazine. I ask unanimous consent that copies of these articles, along with the text of the bill, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEADLY TIDE OF PLASTIC WASTE THREATENS WORLD'S OCEANS AND AQUATIC LIFE

(By Bayard Webster)

The world's seas and oceans, already polluted with spilled oil, toxic chemicals and radioactive waste, are now being fouled by a new and insidious form of pollution—plastic waste.

This plastic pollution is killing millions of birds, fish, whales, seals and sea turtles, marine scientists report. Their research has shown that the animals die after becoming entangled with discarded or broken plastic fish nets, straps, trawls, seines and snares, and also die after eating pieces or tiny spherules of plastic that are being dumped into all of the world's marine waters.

The problem has become so serious that 150 marine wildlife researchers from 10 countries met recently at the University of Hawaii in Honolulu for the first international conference on the issue. The meeting focused on the impact that nonbiodegradable plastic wastes and sections of untended nets have on animals that live in or depend on the ocean.

"It's a worldwide problem and one that's increasing," Warren King, chairman of the United States section of the International Council for Bird Preservation in Cambridge, England, said in an interview. Mr. King said the number of deaths of birds and marine mammals "boggles the mind."

Although ocean bathers and coastal walkers have noticed an increasing amount of plastic litter on the shores, little was known until recently about the nature of such wastes, how they enter the oceans and just how great the problem is.

The National Academy of Sciences estimates that each year commercial fishing fleets dump more than 52 million pounds of plastic packaging material into the sea and lose more than 298 million pounds of plastic fishing gear, including nets, lines and buoys.

The Entanglement Network, a Washington-based consortium of 14 environmental and marine wildlife conservation groups, presented data at the conference showing that one million to two million sea birds such as albatrosses, puffins, gulls, terns, murres and petrels die each year from becoming entangled in plastic nets or from eating bits of floating, discarded plastic. And more than 100,000 sea mammals, including whales, dolphins, seals and manatees, met similar deaths, the group said.

In a recent report to the World Wildlife Fund, Michael Donoghue, a New Zealand marine biologist, said the problem has become critical largely because of the development of a multitude of plastic products, particularly fishing nets.

Dr. Donoghue said plastic nets, most of which are made in Japan, are cheaper to produce and far less visible than the traditional multifilament nets made of twine or other biodegradable materials. They are also more difficult for the fish to detect acoustically. Sea mammals, for instance, rely on echolocation to navigate, and often become entangled in the nets and drown.

Moreover, large pieces of the plastic nets often break off, becoming "ghost nets" that present a continuous floating threat. Robert H. Day, an ornithologist at the University of Alaska, said sea birds often become entangled when they dive for the already-trapped fish.

Some animals drown, unable to return to the surface. Others, forced to drag the net along as they swim, die from exhaustion or from wounds as they are cut by the netting. Still others cannot capture their natural prey and starve. Young seals may have plastic netting around their necks that choke them as they grow.

Felicia Coleman and Dr. Duff H. S. Wehle, faculty members of the Shoals Marine Laboratory of Cornell University in Ithaca, say plastics in the oceans are being found in two forms, manufactured compounds, including nets and other fishing products, and raw particles in the form of pellets.

Detergent bottle caps, chips from Styrofoam containers and toy soldiers, cars and animals have been found in the stomachs of some 50 species of sea birds and many species of fish, turtles and mammals, the two researchers reported. Many whales, manatees, dolphins and sea turtles that feed on jellyfish often mistake plastic sheeting or bags for their prey and eat them. Once in the stomach, the plastic prevents the animals from assimilating real food and causing starvation.

Frank Corbin, director of communications for the Society of the Plastics Industry Inc., based in New York, said a major problem in developing biodegradable marine products, say, netting, was in determining how long the net should be useful, and then developing a plastic that would disintegrate soon after, but not before, that time. Other problems, he said, included offshore dumping of wastes and educating people to be more careful in disposing of their plastic litter.

Edward J. Carpenter, a biological oceanographer at the Marine Science Research Center at Stony Brook, L.I., who has studied the effects of plastic pollution on animals in the North Atlantic, the Sargasso Sea and the Mediterranean, said he had found that 30 percent of all fish had plastic spherules in their stomachs. "In small fish larvae that ingest the spherules, it's like a large animal having a bowling ball in his stomach," Dr. Carpenter said.

Conservation groups are pushing for Federal and local legislation to restrict the outpouring of plastic debris into the oceans. Other proposals include requiring that fishing nets be made of biodegradable materials.

THE PERILS OF PLASTIC POLLUTION

Biologist Stewart Fefer and three colleagues from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service had eagerly anticipated their assignment: a trip to Laysan, a 960-acre island about 1000 miles northwest of Honolulu. They were to study some of the 14 million seabirds that nest there, and they looked forward to their stay on what they assumed would be an island paradise with pristine beaches. What they discovered came as a shock. The sands of Laysan were strewed with an unbelievable variety of plastic trash. While doing his birdwatching chores, Fefer cataloged thousands of pellets as well as toy soldiers, disposable lighters and one toy Godzilla—all made of plastic. "This is one of the most remote islands in the world," he says. "I expected it to be just idyllic."

The debris that despoiled Laysan's beaches had been washed ashore by the waters of the Pacific, which like other oceans is becoming increasingly fouled by plastic flotsam. But while the floating and beached plastic is unquestionably an eyesore, the problem goes far beyond aesthetics. At the Sixth International Ocean Disposal Symposium in Pacific Grove, Calif., last month, scientists reported the plastic trash is causing injury and death to countless marine animals that feast on it or become ensnared in it. Says Ecologist David Laist, of the Marine Mammal Commission: "Plastics may be as great a source of mortality among marine mammals as oil spills, heavy metals or other toxic materials."

Prime contributors to the growing tide of plastic pollution are the world's merchant ships, which, according to a study by the National Academy of Sciences, dump at least 6.6 million tons of trash overboard every year. Some 639,000 plastic containers and bags are tossed into the oceans every day. Commercial fishermen are also major offenders. Estimates of the plastic fishing gear lost or discarded at sea every year range as high as 150,000 tons. Boaters and beachgoers add to the marine litter with six-pack yokes, picnic utensils, sandwich bags and Styrofoam cups. Cities and industries discharging waste directly into the water or dumping it at sea are also to blame. On some East Coast beaches near sewage outlets, so many plastic tampon inserters have washed ashore that residents refer to them as "beach whistles."

Perhaps the most ubiquitous form of plastic trash is the tiny polyethylene pellets used in the manufacture of plastic items. In one survey, researchers calculated that, on average, a square mile of the Sargasso Sea, southeast of Florida, contained between 8,000 and 10,000 bobbing pellets. Says Al Pruter. a fishery biologist and partner in a Seattle-based natural-resources consulting firm: "Almost without exception, surveys show plastic to account for over one-half the man-made products on the ocean surface."

The plastic is taking a heavy toll on marine life, particularly on seals, sea lions, turtles and seabirds. By one estimate, as many as 50,000 northern fur seals in the Pribilof Islands die each year after becoming enshrouded in netting. "Young seals get their heads or flippers caught in it," says Laist. "Then they either become exhausted from toting it or their ability to catch food is restricted."

Smaller plastic items are frequently mistaken for prey by turtles and birds, often with fatal results. Leatherback turtles, which feast on jellyfish, are particularly attracted to plastic bags. Says University of Florida Zoologist Archie Carr, an authority on sea turtles: "Any kind of film or semi-translucent material appears to look like jellyfish to them." Trouble is, the bags—or other plastic items like golf tees—can form a lethal plug in the turtle's digestive tract.

At least 42 species of seabirds are known to snack on plastic. Of 50 albatrosses found ill or dead on the Midway Islands, 45 had eaten some form of the substance. In several, the plastic had either obstructed the digestive tract or caused ulcers. Says James Coe, program manager for the Marine Entanglement Research Program at the National Marine Fisheries Service in Seattle: "We have found everything from toy soldiers to pens, fishing bobbers and poker chips in the birds' stomachs." A study of wedge-tailed shearwaters, which breed on central Pacific islands, showed that 60% of the adults surveyed had ingested plastic. Even sea gulls, which are able to disgorge disagreeable food, are not immune to the plastic threat. They have been strangled by six-pack yokes.

Efforts to reduce the amount of plastic jettisoned into the oceans have been largely unsuccessful. Although the U.S. and 59 other nations agreed in 1972 to outlaw the dumping of durable plastics, among other substances, into the oceans, the treaty failed to address the discharge of ordinary garbage, which contains large quantities of plastic items. Ten states are trying to do their part; they have passed legislation requiring that six-pack yokes be made of treated plastic that degrades rapidly in sunlight. Nonetheless, concludes Zoologist Carr: "This junk is growing in abundance year by year. It is just getting outrageous."—By Jamie Murphy. Reported by Andrea Dorfman/New York and Jon D. S. 2596

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. (a) This Act may be cited as the "Plastic Waste Reduction Act of 1986".

(b) The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) when plastic rings and devices, which are increasingly being used to store, carry, and transport a variety of containers, are disposed in the environment, they persist for extended periods of time and have serious adverse impacts on fish and wildlife species and the environment; and

(2) although certain States, which require such rings and devices to break down upon exposure to natural elements, have been largely successful in reducing those impacts, other States have not enacted or enforced such laws.

TITLE I—STUDY OF PLASTIC POLLUTION

SEC. 101. (a) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency (hereinafter referred to in this title as the "Administrator") shall undertake a study for the purpose of determining the adverse effects that the discarding and dumping of millions of pounds of plastics each year have on the environment, including fish and wildlife, within the United States and the oceans, and to enable the Administrator to make recommendations to the Congress as to what actions might be taken to eliminate or lessen such adverse effects.

(b) Such study shall be carried out with a view to determining the impact on the environment, including fish and wildlife, as a result of the discarding or dumping of such plastic, including—

(1) plastic debris discarded or dumped on and in all water bodies, including streams, rivers, lakes, bays, estuaries, and oceans;

(2) the discarding or dumping of raw plastic pellets on land and in all water bodies, including streams, rivers, lakes, bays, estuaries, and oceans; and

(3) the discarding or dumping of plastic finished products, including, but not limited to, plastic holders for multi-package beverages, plastic packing bands, fishing nets, or fishing gear, on land and in all water bodies, including streams, rivers, lakes, bays, estuaries, and oceans.

(c) In carrying out the study required by this title, the Administrator shall—

(1) consult with the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, the National Marine Fisheries Service, and all other departments and agencies of the United States engaged in research, investigation, or studies, involving, directly or indirectly, the impact of such plastics debris on the environment, including fish and wildlife, and such departments and agencies shall fully cooperate with the Administrator; and

(2) solicit and consider views and recommendations from representative members of the fishing industry, the beverage industry, the plastic industry, consumer interest groups, and other interested and affected individuals and businesses.

(d)(1) In making such recommendations as to actions which might be taken to eliminate or lessen the impact of the discarding or dumping of such plastics on the environment, including fish and wildlife (including recommendations to require the use of biodegradable or photodegradable plastics, or recycling), the Administrator shall consider and include in the report a statement as to the environmental, public health, and economic impacts of each such action so recommended.

SEC. 102. On or before the expiration of the eighteen-month period following the date of the enactment of this title, the Administrator shall report to the Congress the results of the study conducted pursuant to this title, together with recommendations in connection therewith. The Administrator shall identify those recommendations as to which the Administrator believes there is existing authority to implement, and those recommendations which will require legislative action by the Congress if they are to be implemented.

SEC. 103. There is authorized to be appropriated such sum as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

TITLE II—REGULATION TO CONTROL PLASTIC POLLUTION

SEC. 201. As used in this title, the term—

(1) "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency;

(2) "regulated item" means any device which is made, used, or designed for the purpose of packaging, transporting, or carrying multi-packaged cans, bottles, or other containers, and which is of a size, shape, design, or type capable, when discarded, of becoming entangled with fish or wildlife; and

(3) "naturally degradable material" means a material which, when discarded, will be reduced to environmentally benign subunits under the action of normal environmental forces, such as, among others, biological decomposition, photodegradation, and hydrolysis.

SEC. 202. Within eighteen months after the date of the enactment of this title, the Administrator shall require, by regulation, any regulated item to be made of a naturally degradable material which decomposes within a period established by such regulation. The period within which decomposition must occur shall be the shortest period of time consistent with the physical integrity of the item for its intended use.

SEC. 203. Nothing in this Act shall preclude or deny any right of any State or political subdivision thereof to adopt or enforce any regulation, requirement, or standard of performance respecting a regulated item that is more stringent than regulations promulgated pursuant to this Act.

SEC. 204. (a) Any regulation promulgated by the Administrator pursuant to this title shall contain provisions sufficient to assure that adequate recordkeeping and testing requirements for implementing and enforcing such regulation will be carried out.

(b) Any violation of a regulation promulgated by the Administrator pursuant to this title shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $25,000, or imprisonment for not more than 12 months, or both.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] in introducing the Plastic Waste Reduction Act of 1986, a bill to ban the use of nondegradable plastic six-pack beverage holders. This bill addresses an issue of increasing national concern—the fouling of our ocean waters with nondegradable plastic material.

At a time when we are working to curb the effects of dumping raw sewage and other contaminants into the oceans, the problem of plastic pollution has gone largely ignored. Since plastics were first introduced into the mass market, their use has grown dramatically. Yet, we have never adequately dealt with the environmental hazards created by these materials. For years, we treated the ocean like a giant garbage can. But now we are seeing the effects of this action. Our beaches are littered with debris which washes up from coastal waters. Marine animals are disfigured and dying. The problem can no longer be ignored. This legislation takes the first step in ridding our oceans of the problem of plastic pollution.

The devastating impacts of plastic trash on marine animals was brought to light in 1972, when staffers at the Marine Mammal Standing Center of New Jersey, located in Brigantine, NJ, found a sea turtle which had ingested a plastic bag. Since that time, increasing attention has been focused on the issue, and with this attention has come an increased awareness of the serious extent of the problem. Sea turtles, birds, and even the great whales have become victims of plastics carelessly discarded into the ocean. Virtually every marine species is susceptible to the dangers posed by plastic debris.

Under this bill, the Environmental Protection Agency is directed to issue regulations banning nondegradable plastic beverage holders. Following promulgation of these regulations, manufacturers would have 6 months to switch to alternative packaging. The EPA would also, in conjunction with the Fish and Wildlife Service and other Federal agencies, conduct a broad study of plastic pollution. Based on that study, the EPA would report to the Congress on its findings, and on the need to develop additional legislation to adequately address the problem. Ten States currently impose bans on nondegradable plastic six-pack holders. This legislation will establish a uniform national policy on the control of plastic pollution.

Mr. President, nondegradable plastics don't go away. Without action, neither will the problem of plastic pollution. This legislation takes an important first step in assessing and controlling the problem. I hope that in the future the Senate will not limit itself to the problem of plastic six-pack holders, because the problem is much broader. With the completion of the EPA report required under this bill, we will have a better understanding of the problem of plastic pollution, and can take the appropriate steps to correct this situation. I look forward to working with my colleagues on the Environment and Public Works Committee on this bill, and in future efforts to control plastic pollution.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR HARKIN

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

WHEAT REFERENDUM

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I want to bring to the attention of the Senate that today marks the beginning of a historic opportunity to save our family farm system of agriculture in America. Today the U.S. Department of Agriculture is sending out referendum ballots to every wheat farmer in the Nation. These ballots offer the farmers a choice: To continue with the current policies that are driving thousands and thousands of farmers off their land and bankrupting our National Treasury; or, an alternative, to establish a new direction that will restore profitability to agriculture.

It is a historic opportunity for wheat farmers to join together, to bring supply in line with demand, and to raise prices so that farmers can earn their income from the marketplace—and not from a Government paycheck.

So the vote on the wheat referendum should be a vote "yes;" a vote "yes" by the farmers to get their profit from the marketplace, not from a Government handout; a vote "yes" by the farmers to save the family farm system of agriculture and to half the move toward larger and larger corporation farms.

Finally this ought to be a vote "yes" by the wheat farmers of America for an agriculture policy that makes sense, not nonsense like the present policy.

This poll, Mr. President, is a nonbinding poll, but it will set an important precedent, and it will send a very important message to Washington. Now there is a reason that Secretary of Agriculture Lyng and the administration are lobbying heavily against this supply-management program. Because every vote cast by a farmer in favor of this referendum is a vote against the disastrous policy that this administration wants to continue for our family farmers.

The administration's export-based policy, in theory, ought to be a great success. It is just missing one thing: more exports. Since 1981, wheat exports in this country have dropped by 50 percent in volume and 58 percent in value. So the administration keeps lowering the prices, and exports keep dropping. What kind of farm policy is this?

Our wheat surpluses have reached record levels. What industry that hopes to stay in business continues to produce more and more when their warehouses are already full and no new markets exist for their products? But that is exactly what this administration is urging our farmers to do. By the end of this wheat harvest, I am told we will have enough wheat in storage in this country to make 27 loaves of bread for every man, woman, and child on the face of the Earth. What kind of farm policy is this?

And if it were not for deficiency payments to wheat farmers, even more of them would be going broke. But let me send a warning: he who giveth can also taketh away. And as the cost of the 3-year farm program escalates from $50 to $70 billion, I can guarantee every farmer in this country that the White House, under Gramm-Rudman, is going to cut back on our farm programs next year, taking money directly out of farmers' pockets. What kind of farm policy is this?

Well, I say it is not a farm policy at all. It is only a sure-fire formula to drive more farmers out of business. But there is an alternative. It is an alternative wheat farmers can help make a reality by voting "yes" on their referendum ballots.

This is a farm policy that makes sense, it is one that works, and it addresses the basic problems our family farmers are facing. What we are facing are just too much supply and not enough demand.

Yet this administration is telling farmers, "produce more, produce more, produce more." And yet the farmers are getting less and less and being driven off their land. Our small towns are dying, our small businesses in rural America are going bankrupt.

Just yesterday, a headline in an Iowa newspaper said that 17 more banks in the State of Iowa are being sold because of financial difficulties.

So I am urging wheat farmers to vote "yes" on the referendum, to vote "yes" to restore stability and profitability to American agriculture. Really, the bottom line of the referendum that is going to happen in the next couple of weeks is that farmers have a unique ability to send a message. It is nonbinding. I cannot guarantee, if the farmers vote "yes" on the referendum, that Congress will take action and change this disastrous farm program by this winter. But I can guarantee, if farmers vote "no" on the referendum, this Congress will do nothing and we will sit with the present disastrous program we have. But if farmers vote "yes" on the wheat referendum, then that will send a message to Washington that farmers do not like the present system and they want a change in agricultural policy.

So what I am asking the wheat farmers of American to do is to send a message—vote "yes" on the wheat referendum and let us change the policy that we are now on, this disastrous policy that we are now on, and return profitability to our family farmers.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR BOREN

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BOREN. I thank the Chair.

CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I rise today to again discuss the desperate need to reform the way that we finance congressional elections in the United States.

The public is becoming increasingly aware of the massive growth of special interest influence in our Congress and how it often results in legislative stalemate. We are a country that very often properly expresses interest in elections held in other countries. We want to make sure that those elections are open, that they are impartial, and that they are fair.

How can we, then, stand silent when we see the massive erosion of the basic concept of grassroots democracy in our own election process here at home in the United States?

The enormous growth and financial influence of political action committees, PAC's, has created an imbalance in the way that we finance our congressional elections.

While it is frightening that PAC contributions have grown from $12.5 million to over $100 million in less than 10 years, it is even more alarming that, according to recent reports, at the same time, contributions from small individual contributors at the grassroots have been cut in half.

□ 1040

While I have accepted no PAC contributions in the past, I have not branded all PAC's as inherently evil. But the system is now so completely out of balance that PAC's themselves are now even becoming victims of the process. There have been some instances in which candidates have sent pointed, threatening letters, even messengers seeking campaign contributions from political action committee managers in order to solicit funds through a tactic of pitting one PAC against another that has an opposing interest.

Mr. President, as my colleagues will recall, I announced in October of last year my intention to bring before the full Senate legislation dealing with campaign finance reform.

During the subsequent several weeks, that legislation was broadened, refined, and attracted a wide base of support here in the Senate. Cosponsors of S. 1806 now include Senators GOLDWATER, HART, KASSEBAUM, LEVIN, RUDMAN, STENNIS, DECONCINI, CHILES, BINGAMAN, BYRD, LEAHY, and BIDEN.

Through helpful and good-faith negotiations with the majority leader at that time, the Senate by unanimous consent agreed to allow this legislation to be considered as a second-degree amendment to S. 655, the low-level radioactive waste compact. The legislation was debated for 2 days in early December on the Senate floor, and in the one vote that was allowed to be taken on the amendment the Senate voted not to table the amendment, to keep it alive by a vote of 84 to 7.

This certainly is an overwhelming statement on the part of the Senate that campaign finance reform belongs on the national agenda. We all realize that we have a scandal waiting to happen, that we have a building crisis at the heart of our own political system. At the time of that vote which in many ways allowed some of our colleagues to sidestep the basic issue, I made a promise to my colleagues in the Senate that I would be vigilent in seeking action on this legislation before the passing of another election cycle.

Mr. President, every year there are those who say let us wait until after the next election to deal with this serious problem. We are always within two years of an election. We cannot afford to wait any longer to take action against something that is eating away at the very core of the democratic process, the control of the citizens themselves at the grass roots in their own States and in their own communities of the process for which their own officials are elected to serve them and represent them here in the Congress.

Mr. President, that day of reckoning is growing closer at hand. I have been engaged recently in good-faith negotiations with the distinguished majority leader in finding a time late next month when the Senate can again consider this legislation. I greatly appreciate his understanding and willingness to keep the commitment which he made late last year to call up S. 655, and to allow the amendment on campaign finance reform to be considered by the full Senate. It has been on the calendar now for some 6 months. We will soon have that timeframe.

So the issue can again be squarely placed on the national agenda.

I urge my colleagues to seriously reflect on this pending issue which will come before the Senate in the next several weeks. Former Solicitor General Archibald Cox said we must decide whether we want to have Government of the people, for the people, and by the people, or Government for the PAC's, by the PAC's, and of the special interests.

Mr. President, we cannot expect Members of Congress to act in the national interest when our campaigns and the election cycles are being financed more and more by special interests.

As I said, the day of reckoning is at hand. I urge my colleagues to seriously consider a matter of great importance to the political process itself.

TELEVISION IN THE SENATE

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I heard the earlier discussion between the distinguished majority leader and the distinguished minority leader about the waiting period before the final decision is made on television in the Senate.

I am encouraged by their remarks. I was the author of the amendment which established the 2-week waiting period because I wanted to make sure on a matter of such fundamental importance and change in this institution that we have an adequate opportunity to reflect upon it. I think the experiment in which we have been engaged in the last several days of televising the Senate's session has given all of us now a basic experience from which to make a final decision.

As the author of that particular amendment requiring the waiting period, Mr. President, I want to encourage the majority leader and the minority leader to move ahead with the idea of taking a vote on televising the Senate sooner. Having come through this experience, I do not think we now need to have a full 2-week waiting period for us to be able to make an intelligent decision.

I make that comment having heard the two distinguished leaders discuss the issue this morning as the author of the particular provision for a 2-week waiting period in order to encourage them to move ahead, to make a final decision on that issue so that we can bring other pressing legislative matters on to the Senate floor and move ahead with the legislative schedule.

Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will withhold the request, the Senate under the standing order, as in legislative session, will now proceed to morning business. The Senators will be recognized for a period not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE FOUR HORSEMEN

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, while we have a few moments, while driving our colleagues to ever greater heights—wherever they are—and they are working on some issues that can be brought before the body later in the day—for that is the way the Senate works. I know that is puzzling to many people, but it is a very essential part of our activities, to assure that the committees function and they do that in the morning hour; and that the meetings go on and they go in the majority leader's office and in the Democratic leader's office. That is the way the Senate works. It may appear to be rather ponderous, but in essence it works.

Yesterday was a classic example of that. I did not get to remark on that then. I shall very briefly do so today.

That was a superb exercise by the U.S. Senate, the true essence of bipartisanship, the way it should work, the way it is supposed to work, the way the Founding Fathers thought it could work.

It certainly would be most difficult to pay tribute to all who were involved, but it is not difficult to pay tribute to four persons who were deeply involved. Those are the majority leader, ROBERT DOLE; the chairman of the Finance Committee, BOB PACKWOOD; the ranking member of the Finance Committee, RUSSELL LONG; and the most extraordinary work of BILL BRADLEY. I want to refer, too, to the core group, that group who said that they would "hold tough", that coalesced in support of a tax bill, in committee and here on the floor; a bipartisan group that recognized the significance of the legislation that transcended all party lines. Certainly, that is what we saw yesterday in a vote of 97 to 3.

It had been rather dramatic, as they spoke of it, exciting and dramatic. It leads one to great prose and phraseology, but I thought of the four of them as a kind of "Four Horsemen."

We all remember the great and timeless sports reporting of Grantland Rice, how he described the Notre Dame backfield as the Four Horsemen. As I recall, it was something to the effect that "On a cold gray October day, the Four Horsemen rode again." Then he described them in mythology, and then in reality on that day.

Yesterday, these Four Horsemen that I have just described rode out on a very bright, fresh June day in Washington, which is about as rare as a vote of 97 to 3! The four of them put together this remarkable package. I just want to pay my respects to them: To Senator DOLE, our fine leader and former chairman of the Committee on Finance, who knows the issues beautifully and gave his committee chairman full rein; to Senator LONG, who served with my father here in this institution, the Senate.

RUSSELL LONG—how do you cap a career like that with anything more appropriate than this great personal triumph he was involved in with tax reform? Particularly his savvy, his uncommon degree of common sense; really an extraordinary effort and such a pleasure for me to serve with that gentle gentleman, as it was for my father, who served here before me.

Then BOB PACKWOOD, a man who recruited me for this task. He came to Wyoming and told me all the reasons I should run for the U.S. Senate. I really did not need many more, because my father had been here and I knew what it would be. I knew the trials, the tribulations, the triumphs, and the activities that would come before me. Someday, I may find the ability to forgive Senator PACKWOOD for that!

Not so. I love it. I love the work. I love the place. I love the colleagues.

He, in his steady, extraordinarily perceptive way, with an ability to shunt aside the extraneous and to press on—he, indeed, pressed on. While there were the fainthearted who, every day, would stick a microphone under his nose and say "It is gone, isn't it? It is out the window, isn't it?" he would say "No, we are going to get it."

There are many more in this arena—not the Senate but the arena of Washington—who really like to see things get messed up and fall apart; collapse. It is their kind of adrenalin. I have learned that. So they watched BOB PACKWOOD labor and he then brought that committee together in an extraordinary way in confidential activities and they hammered out the heavy stuff they had to do. You have to admire the man. He is a gutsy and extraordinary performer and it is a great pleasure to see his success.

Then, finally, BILL BRADLEY, who came here when I did. I met his folks when I came here, and I see that, indeed, the apple does not fall far from the tree. They are extraordinary. They must be very proud of this man, who has really done everything in his life with absolute, total dedication.

I was a member of the Wyoming Legislature, and not a reknowned basketball player in my own right, you see, and still am the tallest person in the U.S. Senate, even taller than the Senator from New Jersey, which is a matter of record, according to the curator at least. While in the legislature I read this remarkable man's book. It is entitled "A Sense of Where You Are." It was written about his days in basketball, and I thought to myself "Someday I would like to meet that man." And then, of course, we were both sworn in to this body on the same day.

Another thing we share is being here together at the conclusion of the civil rights debate on the floor of the U.S. Senate. The two of us were young men in the gallery, he a bit younger than I. But I shall never forget that extraordinary vote, watching it from the gallery. We were both in the Chamber, in the gallery that day. So we have come to have a very unique relationship. That comes I guess from those who pull the uniform on and play that game.

I was rather nominal as a basketball player. BILL did seem to have some better successes than I, as I reflect on it. In fact, in my days at the University of Wyoming I was listed in the statistical columns as simply "others." They called me Others Simpson at that time because they would list so and so and the other 10 and they just jumbled everybody else in there together and called them others. So I went through my basketball career being called that.

And here is BILL BRADLEY, who comes to us as much, much, much more than a basketball player. He served as the player of the year in tax reform. He kept his eye on that ball. He passed off when there was every opportunity to do so. He had more assists in one game than most guys have in a whole decade of playing the game. That was BILL BRADLEY. He was described yesterday as "The godfather" of tax reform. He, indeed, was the steady one who said, "If you keep getting mired down in the deductions, exemptions, special interests, you will never get it done, but if you just draw the line and pick those two rates, people will fall away because they know that is the bottom line."

That is what finally came to us. It came to us from the extraordinary efforts of those four people, to whom I wanted to briefly refer, remark upon and pay tribute, and that remarkable core group which stayed with it from the beginning, and the extraordinary staff of Democrats, Republicans, and professionals, all of those who did such a tremendous job of dealing with literally dozens of amendments and often in just minutes, handling them and accepting them or modifying them, and the ever patient Bill Diefenderfer, what an extraordinary effort he did for us.

In all my legislating—and I have done it in Cheyenne, WY, and now in Washington, DC—I have never seen such an effort. It was a pleasure to watch, a thrill to see unfold and now we must shepherd this and nurture it, give it stewardship through the conference. I know we will do that. I know Congressman DANNY ROSTENKOWSKI waits for it with great interest. He and Senator PACKWOOD have a very fine relationship, a personal relationship. It will be needed. It is maybe a government of laws and not men, but I have found that it is more a government of men and women and their personal relationships with each other as you move the tough pieces of legislation.

I express my deep admiration for those four, fully realizing I leave out others—and certainly that is not an affront in any way. It is just my deep desire to state my very sincere feelings as to the remarkable efforts of those four.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

CALLING ON CONGRESS NOT TO RECESS UNTIL FARM PROGRAMS ARE FUNDED

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, Oklahoma farmers are in the middle of wheat harvest—the result of a year's worth of work. Customarily, it is a time for bill paying. You see, farmers don't have monthly wages. They pay bills when the crop comes in. To help them pay debts without having to sell their crop at harvest time, traditionally the low point in the market cycle, farmers are able to take out a commodity loan under the farm programs. But this year has been a little different. The Commodity Credit Corporation, which makes crop loans and farm program payments, ran out of money June 4.

Earlier this year, farmers in Oklahoma and throughout the Nation signed a contract with the Government. They agreed to cut production in order to qualify for farm program benefits. They have lived up to their end of the bargain. But Congress, by failing to provide continued funding for the CCC, has let them down.

This is a problem which could have been avoided. Last year, the administration requested Congress to provide an indefinite CCC appropriation, basically a blank check for farm program funding. It was supported and passed by the Senate but was dropped in conference due to House objections. Such a measure, providing uninterrupted funding for farm programs, would have prevented the problem we are now experiencing.

Earlier this month, at my urging, the Senate temporarily laid aside tax reform legislation and passed a supplemental appropriations bill containing $5.3 billion to fund farm programs. The House bill however did not contain funds for farm programs. Fortunately, the funds were maintained in a compromise bill, which I have urged the President to approve.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of a letter to Senator DOLE be placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, June 4, 1986.

Hon. ROBERT DOLE,
Majority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR BOB: Oklahoma farmers are going to be put in a real bind unless Congress takes immediate action to fund the Commodity Credit Corporation. Today, the Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC), which funds government farm programs, ran out of money.

As you know, the Senate has included $5.3 billion to fund the CCC in its supplemental appropriations bill. However, the House included no additional funding in its supplemental spending bill. As you may recall, an indefinite CCC appropriation requested by the Reagan Administration passed the Senate but was dropped in conference with the House. Such a measure would have prevented the need for periodic CCC supplemental appropriations.

It is Congress' responsibility to compensate the CCC for losses incurred beyond its $25 billion spending authority. On behalf of agriculture producers in Oklahoma and through the nation, I strongly urge your assistance and that of our colleagues in obtaining approval of the necessary CCC funding.

Sincerely,

DON NICKLES,
U.S. Senator.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, it is the responsibility of Congress to compensate the CCC for losses. If Congress is to fulfill its obligation to the farmers of America, the House and Senate must stay in session until the necessary CCC funding is passed and signed into law. This reminds me of a time last summer when I warned that unless Congress completed action on the wheat section of the farm bill, Oklahoma farmers would be unable to make planting decisions based on program details. Farmers lost that round. Mr. President, how many times will congressional inaction result in a loss to the farmers of America? How often will Congress rebuff the Nation's No. 1 industry?

Some of the President's advisers, have expressed opposition to provisions other than the CCC funding in the appropriations bill. I have asked several of my colleagues to join me in a letter to the President urging timely approval of legislation containing the necessary CCC funding. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this letter be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, June 24, 1986.

Hon. RONALD REAGAN,
President of the United States, The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Soon, Congress may send you a supplemental appropriations bill containing sorely needed Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) funding. Approval of this legislation will allow resumption of farm program payments, which have been suspended since June 4.

Last December, you approved legislation authorizing five years of farm programs. Now, farmers are harvesting the first crop under the new law and are unable to receive program benefits. Mr. President, they want and need to be paid. To a great extent, the existence of rural families and communities hinges on timely farm program funding.

Your advisers may urge you to veto the appropriations bill over a separate provision they find objectionable. If so, we urge you to act independently, considering a cost too often lost in billion dollar budget figures—the human costs the American people will pay if farm programs remain unfunded.

With this in mind, we strongly urge you to approve legislation containing the necessary farm program funding. Your consideration of this request is greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

DON NICKLES,
U.S. Senator.

Mr. NICKLES. Today, we must move on farm program funding legislation so local ASCS offices can deliver on the promises made by Congress. A letter I recently received from an Oklahoma constituent clearly states the problem at hand. I ask unanimous consent that the letter from E.O. Wheeler with Wheeler Bros. Grain Co. be printed in the RECORD following my remarks and I urge my colleagues to join me in heeding its call.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Mailgram]

WHEELER BROS. GRAIN CO.,
Watonga, OK, June 21, 1986.

Hon. DON NICKLES,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SIR: The Oklahoma wheat harvest is nearly complete. Our farmers need to be able to receive the Government loan payments. Many farmers have land payments and other bills due July 1st. We very strongly urge you to do whatever it takes to see that the local ASCS offices can start writing checks as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

E.O. WHEELER.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DIPLOMATIC SECURITY AND ANTITERRORISM ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to Calendar Order No. 655, H.R. 4151, the diplomatic security bill. The managers are here and prepared to go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4151) to provide enhanced diplomatic security and combat international terrorism, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

TITLE I—DIPLOMATIC SECURITY

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

Titles I through IV of this Act may be cited as the "Diplomatic Security Act".

SEC. 102. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the United States has a crucial stake in the presence of United States Government personnel representing United States interests abroad;

(2) conditions confronting United States Government personnel and missions abroad are fraught with security concerns which will continue for the foreseeable future; and

(3) the resources now available to counter acts of terrorism and protect and secure United States Government personnel and missions abroad, as well as foreign officials and missions in the United States, are inadequate to meet the mounting threat to such personnel and facilities.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of titles I through IV are—

(1) to set forth the responsibility of the Secretary of State with respect to the security of diplomatic operations in the United States and abroad;

(2) to provide for an Assistant Secretary of State to head the Bureau of Diplomatic Security of the Department of State, and to set forth certain provisions relating to the Diplomatic Security Service of the Department of State;

(3) to maximize coordination by the Department of State with Federal, State, and local agencies and agencies of foreign governments in order to enhance security programs;

(4) to promote strengthened security measures and to provide for the accountability of United States Government personnel with security-related responsibilities; and

(5) to provide authorizations of appropriations for the Department of State to carry out its responsibilities in the area of security and counterterrorism, and in particular to finance the acquisition and improvements of United States Government missions abroad, including real property, buildings, facilities, and communications, information, and security systems.

SEC. 103. RESPONSIBILITY OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

(a) SECURITY FUNCTIONS.—The Secretary of State shall develop and implement (in consultation with the heads of other Federal agencies having personnel or missions abroad where appropriate and within the scope of the resources made available) policies and programs, including funding levels and standards, to provide for the security of United States Government operations of a diplomatic nature and foreign government operations of a diplomatic nature in the United States. Such policies and programs shall include—

(1) protection of all United States Government personnel on official duty abroad (other than those personnel under the command of a United States area military commander) and their accompanying dependents;

(2) establishment and operation of security functions at all United States Government missions abroad (other than facilities or installations subject to the control of a United States area military commander);

(3) establishment and operation of security functions at all Department of State facilities in the United States; and

(4) protection of foreign missions, international organizations, and foreign officials and other foreign persons in the United States, as authorized by law.

(b) OVERSIGHT OF POSTS ABROAD.—The Secretary of State shall—

(1) have full responsibility for the coordination of all United States Government personnel assigned to diplomatic or consular posts or other United States missions abroad pursuant to United States Government authorization (except for facilities, installations, or personnel under the command of a United States area military commander); and

(2) establish appropriate overseas staffing levels for all such posts or missions for all Federal agencies with activities abroad (except for personnel and activities under the command of a United States area military commander).

(c) FEDERAL AGENCY.—As used in this title and title III, the term "Federal agency" includes any department or agency of the United States Government.

SEC. 104. BUREAU OF DIPLOMATIC SECURITY.

(a) THE BUREAU.—There shall be a Bureau of Diplomatic Security in the Department of State, to be headed by the Assistant Secretary for Diplomatic Security. The Assistant Secretary shall be responsible for carrying out the functions and duties set forth in section 105 and such additional functions as may be directed by the Secretary of State.

(b) NUMBER OF ASSISTANT SECRETARIES.—The first section of the Act entitled "An Act to strengthen and improve the organization and administration of the Department of State, and for other purposes," approved May 26, 1949 (22 U.S.C. 2652), is amended by striking out "fourteen" and inserting in lieu thereof "fifteen".

(c) POSITIONS AT LEVEL IV OF THE EXECUTIVE SCHEDULE.—Section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking out "(14)" following "Assistant Secretaries of State" and inserting in lieu thereof "(15)".

(d) COMPLIANCE WITH BUDGET ACT.—New spending authority (within the meaning of section 401(c)(2)(C) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974) provided by the amendment made by subsection (c) of this section shall be effective for any fiscal year only to the extent or in such amounts as provided in appropriations Acts.

SEC. 105. RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR DIPLOMATIC SECURITY.

The Assistant Secretary for Diplomatic Security shall be responsible for such activities related to diplomatic security as the Secretary of State shall designate.

SEC. 106. COOPERATION OF OTHER FEDERAL AGENCIES.

(a) ASSISTANCE.—In order to facilitate fulfillment of the responsibilities described in section 103(a), other Federal agencies shall cooperate (through agreements) to the maximum extent possible with the Secretary of State. Such agencies may, with or without reimbursement, provide assistance to the Secretary, perform security inspections, provide logistical support relating to the differing missions and facilities of other Federal agencies, and perform other overseas security functions as may be authorized by the Secretary. Specifically, the Secretary may agree to delegate operational control of overseas security functions of other Federal agencies to the heads of such agencies, subject to the Secretary's authority as set forth in section 103(a). The agency head receiving such delegated authority shall be responsible to the Secretary in the exercise of the delegated operational control.

(b) OTHER AGENCIES.—The President shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to assure that the implementation of titles I through IV does not limit or impair the authority or responsibility of any other Federal, State, or local agency with respect to law enforcement, domestic security operations, or intelligence activities (as defined in Executive Order 12333).

(c) CERTAIN LEASE ARRANGEMENTS.—The Administrator of General Services is authorized to lease (to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts) such amount of space in the United States as may be necessary for the Department of State to accommodate the personnel required to carry out this title. The Department of State shall pay for such space at the rate established by the Administrator of General Services for space and related services.

TITLE II—DIPLOMATIC SECURITY SERVICE

SEC. 201. ESTABLISHMENT OF DIPLOMATIC SECURITY SERVICE.

There shall be, within the Bureau of Diplomatic Security, the Diplomatic Security Service. The Diplomatic Security Service shall perform such functions as may be assigned to it by the Secretary of State.

SEC. 202. DIRECTOR OF DIPLOMATIC SECURITY SERVICE.

The Diplomatic Security Service shall be headed by a Director designated by the Secretary of State from among individuals having a demonstrated ability in the area of security, law enforcement, management, or public administration. The Director shall act under the supervision and direction of the Assistant Secretary for Diplomatic Security.

SEC. 203. POSITIONS IN THE DIPLOMATIC SECURITY SERVICE.

Positions in the Diplomatic Security Service shall be filled in accordance with the provisions of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 3901 et seq.) and title 5, United States Code. In filling such positions, the Secretary of State shall actively recruit women and members of minority groups. The Secretary of State shall prescribe the qualifications required for assignment or appointment to such positions. In the case of positions designated for special agents, the qualifications may include minimum and maximum entry age restrictions and other physical standards and shall incorporate such standards as may be required by law in order to perform security functions, to bear arms, and to exercise investigatory, warrant, arrest, and such other authorities as are available by law to special agents of the Department of State and the Foreign Service.

TITLE III—PERFORMANCE AND ACCOUNTABILITY

SEC. 301. ACCOUNTABILITY REVIEW.

In any case of serious injury, loss of life, or significant destruction of property at or related to a United States Government mission abroad which is covered by the provisions of titles I through IV (other than a facility or installation subject to the control of a United States area military commander), the Secretary of State shall convene an Accountability Review Board (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Board"). The Secretary shall not convene a Board where the Secretary determines that a case clearly involves only causes unrelated to security.

SEC. 302. ACCOUNTABILITY REVIEW BOARD.

(a) MEMBERSHIP.—A Board shall consist of five members, 4 appointed by the Secretary of State, and 1 appointed by the Director of Central Intelligence. The Secretary of State shall designate the Chairperson of the Board. Members of the Board who are not Federal officers or employees shall each be paid at a rate not to exceed the maximum rate of basic pay payable for level GS-18 of the General Schedule for each day (including travel time) during which they are engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in the Board. Members of the Board who are Federal officers or employees shall receive no additional pay by reason of such membership.

(b) FACILITIES, SERVICES, SUPPLIES, AND STAFF.—

(1) SUPPLIED BY DEPARTMENT OF STATE.—A Board shall obtain facilities, services, and supplies through the Department of State. All expenses of the Board, including necessary costs of travel, shall be paid by the Department of State. Travel expenses authorized under this paragraph shall be paid in accordance with subchapter I of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, or other applicable law.

(2) DETAIL.—At the request of a Board, employees of the Department of State or other Federal agencies, members of the Foreign Service, or members of the uniformed services may be temporarily assigned, with or without reimbursement, to assist the Board. Upon request, the Inspector General of the Department of State and the Foreign Service may provide assistance to the Board.

(3) EXPERTS AND CONSULTANTS.—A Board may employ and compensate (in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code) such experts and consultants as the Board considers necessary to carry out its functions. Experts and consultants so employed shall be responsible solely to the Board.

SEC. 303. PROCEDURES.

(a) EVIDENCE.—

(1) UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT PERSONNEL AND CONTRACTORS.—

(A) With respect to any individual described in subparagraph (B), a Board may—

(i) administer oaths and affirmations;

(ii) require that depositions be given and interrogatories answered; and

(iii) require the attendance and presentation of testimony and evidence by such individual.

Failure of any such individual to comply with a request of the Board shall be grounds for disciplinary action by the head of the Federal agency in which such individual is employed or serves, or in the case of a contractor, debarment.

(B) The individuals referred to in subparagraph (A) are—

(i) employees as defined by section 2105 of title 5, United States Code (including members of the Foreign Service);

(ii) members of the uniformed services as defined by section 101(3) of title 37, United States Code;

(iii) employees of instrumentalities of the United States; and

(iv) individuals employed by any person or entity under contract with agencies or instrumentalities of the United States Government to provide services, equipment, or personnel.

(2) OTHER PERSONS.—With respect to a person who is not described in paragraph (1)(B), a Board may administer oaths and affirmations and require that depositions be given and interrogatories answered.

(3) SUBPOENAS.—(A) The Board may issue a subpoena for the attendance and testimony of any person (other than a person described in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of paragraph (1)(B)) and the production of documentary or other evidence from any such person if the Board finds that such a subpoena is necessary in the interests of justice for the development of relevant evidence.

(B) In the case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena issued under this paragraph, a court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which a person is directed to appear or produce information, or within the jurisdiction of which the person is found, resides, or transacts business, may upon application of the Attorney General, issue to such person an order requiring such person to appear before the Board to give testimony or produce information as required by the subpoena.

(C) Subpoenaed witnesses shall be paid the same fee and mileage allowances which are paid subpoenaed witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(b) CONFIDENTIALITY.—A Board shall adopt for administrative proceedings under this title such procedures with respect to confidentiality as may be deemed necessary, including procedures relating to the conduct of closed proceedings or the submission and use of evidence in camera, to ensure in particular the protection of classified information relating to national defense, foreign policy, or intelligence matters. The Director of Central Intelligence shall establish the level of protection required for intelligence information and for information relating to intelligence personnel, including standards for secure storage.

(c) RECORDS.—Records pertaining to administrative proceedings under this title shall be separated from all other records of the Department of State and shall be maintained under appropriate safeguards to preserve confidentiality and classification of information. Such records shall be prohibited from disclosure to the public until such time as a Board completes its work and is dismissed. The Department of State shall turn over to the Director of Central Intelligence intelligence information and information relating to intelligence personnel which shall then become records of the Central Intelligence Agency. After that time, only such exemptions as apply to other records of the Department of State under section 552(b) of title 5 of the United States Code (relating to freedom of information) shall be available for the remaining records of the Board.

(d) STATUS OF BOARDS.—The provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App. 1 et seq.) and section 552b of title 5 of the United States Code (relating to open meetings) shall not apply to any Board.

SEC. 304. FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS BY A BOARD.

(a) FINDINGS.—A Board convened in any case shall examine the facts and circumstances surrounding the serious injury, loss of life, or significant destruction of property at or related to a United States Government mission abroad and shall make written findings determining—

(1) whether there are reasonable grounds to believe that the injury, loss of life, or destruction of property with respect to which the Board was convened was security-related; and

(2) whether there is reasonable cause to believe that a breach of duty by an individual described in section 303(a)(1)(B) contributed to such injury, loss of life, or destruction of property.

In making its findings, the Board shall take into account such standards of conduct, statutes, rules, regulations, instructions and other sources as may have been pertinent to the performance of work and official duties.

(b) PROGRAM RECOMMENDATIONS.—The Board shall make recommendations to the Secretary of State as appropriate to improve the efficiency, economy, suitability, or security of any program or operation which the Board has reviewed, particularly recommendations to promote security awareness and individual accountability for security programs.

(c) DISCIPLINARY PROCEEDINGS.—

(1) NOTICE.—Whenever a Board finds reasonable cause to believe than an individual has breached a duty under subsection (a)(2), the Board shall promptly notify the individual concerned. The Board at the same time shall notify the head of the appropriate Federal agency or instrumentality of such finding and recommend that such agency or instrumentality initiate an appropriate investigatory or disciplinary proceeding.

(2) RECORDS.—Whenever notice of a finding under paragraph (1) is made, the Board shall transmit to the head of the appropriate Federal agency or instrumentality a certified copy of the record of the pertinent administrative proceeding undertaken by the Board under this title, which shall be part of the official record for all purposes of any disciplinary action against the individual concerned. The head of such agency or instrumentality shall maintain such copy under appropriate safeguards to preserve confidentiality and classification of information. For purposes of section 552(b) of title 5, United States Code (relating to freedom of information), such portion of the copy which corresponds to the portion of the original record which was turned over to the Director of Central Intelligence shall be deemed to be held by the Director.

(d) REPORTS.—

(1) PROGRAM RECOMMENDATIONS.—In any case in which a Board transmits recommendations to the Secretary of State under subsection (b), the Secretary shall, not later than 90 days after the receipt of such recommendations, submit a report to the Congress on each such recommendation and the action taken with respect to that recommendation.

(2) PERSONNEL RECOMMENDATIONS.—In any case in which a Board transmits a finding of reasonable cause under subsection (c), the head of the Federal agency or instrumentality receiving the information shall review the evidence and recommendations and shall, not later than 30 days after the receipt of that finding, transmit to the Congress a report specifying—

(A) the nature of the case and a summary of the evidence transmitted by the Board; and

(B) the decision by the Federal agency or instrumentality to take disciplinary or other appropriate action against that individual or the reasons for deciding not to take disciplinary or other action with respect to that individual.

SEC. 305. RELATION TO OTHER PROCEEDINGS.

Nothing in this title shall be construed to create administrative or judicial review remedies or rights of action not otherwise available by law, nor shall any provision of this title be construed to deprive any person of any right or legal defense which would otherwise be available to that person under any law, rule, or regulation.

TITLE IV—DIPLOMATIC SECURITY PROGRAM

SEC. 401. AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) DIPLOMATIC SECURITY PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In addition to amounts otherwise available for such purposes, the following amounts are authorized to be appropriated before October 1, 1987, for the Department of State to carry out diplomatic security construction, acquisition, and operations pursuant to the Department of State's Supplemental Diplomatic Security Program, as justified to the Congress for the respective fiscal year:

(A) For "Administration of Foreign Affairs", as follows:

(i) For "Salaries and Expenses", $245,327,000.

(ii) For "Acquisition and Maintenance of Buildings Abroad", $857,806,000.

(iii) For "Counterterrorism Research and Development", $2,000,000.

(B) For "Antiterrorism Assistance", $4,840,000.

(2) Amounts appropriated pursuant to this section are authorized to remain available until expended.

(b) REPROGRAMMING TREATMENT.—Amounts made available for capital projects pursuant to subsection (a) shall be treated as a reprogramming of funds under section 34 of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 (22 U.S.C. 2706) and shall not be available for obligation or expenditure except in compliance with the procedures applicable to such reprogramming.

(c) SECURITY REQUIREMENTS OF OTHER FOREIGN AFFAIRS AGENCIES.—Based solely on security requirements and within the total amount of funds available for security, the Secretary of State shall ensure that an equitable level of funding is provided for the security requirements of other foreign affairs agencies.

(d) INSUFFICIENCY OF FUNDS.—In the event that sufficient funds are not available in any fiscal year for all of the diplomatic security construction, acquisition, and operations pursuant to the Department of State's Supplemental Diplomatic Security Program, as justified to the Congress for such fiscal year, the Secretary of State shall report to the Congress the effect that the insufficiency of funds will have with respect to the Department of State and each of the other foreign affairs agencies.

SEC. 402. DIPLOMATIC CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM.

(a) PREFERENCE FOR UNITED STATES CONTRACTORS.—Notwithstanding section 11 of the Foreign Service Buildings Act, 1926, and where adequate competition exists, only United States persons and qualified United States joint venture persons may bid on a diplomatic construction or design project, for which funds are authorized to be appropriated by this title, which has an estimated total project value exceeding $5,000,000.

(b) EXCEPTION.—Subsection (a) shall not apply with respect to any diplomatic construction or design project in a foreign country the laws or policies of which prohibit the use of United States contractors on such projects. The exception contained in this subsection shall only become effective with respect to a foreign country 30 days after the Secretary of State certifies to the Congress that he has urged such foreign country to permit the use of United States contractors on such projects.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this section—

(1) the term "adequate competition" means with respect to a construction project, the presence of two or more qualified bidders who are (A) United States persons or are qualified United States joint venture persons and (B) who are submitting responsive bids for that project;

(2) the term "United States person" means a person which—

(A) is incorporated or legally organized under the laws of the United States, including State, the District of Columbia, and local laws;

(B) has its principal place of business in the United States;

(C) has been incorporated or legally organized in the United States for more than 5 years before the issuance date of the invitation for bids or request for proposals with respect to a construction project;

(D) has performed administrative and technical, professional, or construction services similar in complexity, type of construction, and value to the project being bid;

(E) has achieved total business volume equal to or greater than the value of the project being bid in 3 years of the 5-year period before the date specified in subparagraph (C);

(F) employs United States nationals in more than half of its full-time supervisory positions in the United States and will employ United States nationals in 80 percent of the supervisory positions on the foreign buildings office project site; and

(G) has the existing technical and financial resources to perform the contract; and

(3) the term "qualified United States joint venture person" means a joint venture in which a United States person or persons owns at least 51 percent of the assets of the joint venture.

(d) AMERICAN MINORITY CONTRACTORS.—Not less than 10 percent of the amount appropriated pursuant to section 401(a) for diplomatic construction projects each fiscal year shall be allocated to the extent practicable for contracts with American minority contractors.

(e) SECURITY CLEARANCE REQUIREMENTS FOR CONTRACTORS.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall issue regulations to—

(1) strengthen requirements for security clearances for all contractors and subcontractors involved in any way with a diplomatic construction or design project; and

(2) prohibit access to any design or blueprint relating to such a project by any such contractor or subcontractor without the appropriate security clearance.

SEC. 403. QUALIFICATIONS OF PERSONS HIRED FOR THE DIPLOMATIC CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM.

In carrying out the diplomatic construction program referred to in section 401(a), the Secretary of State shall employ as professional staff (by appointment, contract, or otherwise) only those persons with a demonstrated specialized background in the fields of construction, construction law, or contract management. In filling such positions, the Secretary shall actively recruit women and members of minority groups.

SEC. 404. COST OVERRUNS.

Any amount required to complete any capital project described in the Department of State's Supplemental Diplomatic Security Program, as justified to the Congress for the respective fiscal year, which is in excess of the amount made available for that project shall be treated as a reprogramming of funds under section 34 of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 (22 U.S.C. 2706) and shall not be available for obligation or expenditure except in compliance with the procedures applicable to such reprogrammings.

SEC. 405. EFFICIENCY IN CONTRACTING.

(a) BONUSES AND PENALTIES.—The Director of the Office of Foreign Buildings shall provide for a contract system of bonuses and penalties for the diplomatic construction program funded pursuant to the authorizations of appropriations provided in this title. Not later than 3 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Director shall submit a report to the Congress on the implementation of this section.

(b) SURETY BONDS AND GUARANTEES.—The Director of the Office of Foreign Buildings shall require each person awarded a contract for work under the diplomatic construction program to post a surety bond or guarantee, in such amount as the Director may determine, to assure performance under such contract.

(c) DISQUALIFICATION OF CONTRACTORS.—No person doing business with Libya may be eligible for a contract under this Act.

SEC. 406. TRAINING TO IMPROVE PERIMETER SECURITY AT UNITED STATES DIPLOMATIC MISSIONS ABROAD.

It is the sense of Congress that the President should use the authority under chapter 8 of title II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (relating to antiterrorism assistance) to improve perimeter security of United States diplomatic missions abroad.

SEC. 407. CERTAIN PROTECTIVE FUNCTIONS.

Section 208(a) of title 3, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In carrying out any duty under section 202(7), the Secretary of State is authorized to utilize any authority available to the Secretary under title II of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956.".

SEC. 408. REIMBURSEMENT OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY.

The Secretary of State shall reimburse the appropriate appropriations account of the Department of the Treasury out of funds appropriated pursuant to section 401(a)(1) for the actual costs incurred by the United States Secret Service, as agreed to by the Secretary of the Treasury, for providing protection for the spouses of foreign heads of state.

TITLE V—STATE DEPARTMENT AUTHORITIES TO COMBAT INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM

SEC. 501. REWARDS FOR INFORMATION RELATING TO INTERNATIONAL NARCOTERRORISM AND DRUG TRAFFICKING.

(a) INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM.—Section 36(a) of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 (22 U.S.C. 2708(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Secretary of State may pay a reward to any individual who furnishes information leading to—

"(1) the arrest or conviction in any country of any individual for committing, or for conspiring or attempting to commit, an act of international terrorism; or

"(2) the prevention, frustration, or favorable resolution of an act of international terrorism if the act of international terrorism is against a United States person or United States property and is primarily outside the territorial jurisdiction of the United States.".

(b) INTERNATIONAL NARCOTERRORISM AND DRUG TRAFFICKING.—Section 36 of such Act is further amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f) as subsections (c), (d), (e), (f), and (g), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary of State, upon the request of a chief of mission and with the concurrence of the Attorney General, may pay a reward to any individual who furnishes information leading to—

"(1) the arrest or conviction in any country of any individual for committing outside the United States any narcotics-related offense if such offense involves or is a significant part of conduct that involves—

"(A) a violation of the laws of the United States for the prevention and control of illicit traffic in controlled substances (as such term is defined for the purpose of the Controlled Substances Act);

"(B) an act of narcoterrorism, which includes the killing or kidnapping outside the territorial jurisdiction of the United States of—

"(i) any officer, employee, or contract employee of the United States Government while such individual is engaged in official duties, or on account of that individual's official duties, in connection with the enforcement of United States drug laws or the implementing of United States drug control objectives; or

"(ii) a member of the immediate family of any such individual on account of that individual's official duties in connection with the enforcement of United States drug laws or the implementation of United States drug control objectives; or

"(C) an attempt or conspiracy to do any of the acts described in paragraph (1) or (2); or

"(2) the prevention or frustration of an act described in paragraph (1).".

(c) FUNDING FOR REWARDS.—Section 36(g) of such Act, as redesignated by subsection (b)(1), is amended by striking out the period at the end of the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ", up to $2,000,000 of which may be used for rewards for information described in subsection (b)(1)(A) or (B). In addition to the amount authorized by the preceding sentence, there are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1987 for 'Administration of Foreign Affairs' for use in paying rewards under this section, up to $5,000,000 of which may be used for rewards for information described in subsection (b)(1)(A) or (B).".

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 36(f) of such Act, as redesignated by subsection (b)(1), is amended by inserting "or (b)" after "subsection (a)".

(e) REPORTS ON REWARDS; DEFINITIONS.—Section 36 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(h) Not later than 30 days after paying any reward under this section, the Secretary of State shall submit a report to the Congress with respect to that reward. The report, which may be submitted on a classified basis if necessary, shall specify the amount of the reward paid, to whom the reward was paid, and the acts with respect to which the reward was paid, and shall discuss the significance of the information for which the reward was paid in dealing with those acts.

"(i) The purpose of the rewards under subsection (b) is to assist narcotics law enforcement in the effective arrest and prosecution of major narcotics traffickers and, wherever appropriate, to offer rewards in connection with the killing of, or the attempt to kill, any United States officer or employee, in connection with the performance of narcotics control duties by such officer or employee, or any member of the family of such officer or employee. To ensure that the rewards program authorized by this section, especially subsection (b)(1)(A), does not duplicate or interfere with the payment of informants or the purchase of evidence or information, as authorized to the Department of Justice, the offering, administration, and payment of rewards under subsection (b), including procedures for—

"(1) identifying individuals, organizations, and offenses for which rewards will be offered,

"(2) the publication of rewards,

"(3) offering of joint rewards with foreign governments,

"(4) the receipt and analysis of data,

"(5) the payment and the approval of payment, and

"(6) the recommendations of rewards by chiefs of mission to the Secretary of State and the Attorney General, shall be governed by procedures approved by the Secretary of State and the Attorney General.

"(j) As used in this section—

"(1) the term 'United States drug laws' means the laws of the United States for the prevention and control of illicit traffic in controlled substances (as such term is defined for purposes of the Controlled Substances Act); and

"(2) the term 'member of the immediate family' includes—

"(A) a spouse, parent, brother, sister, or child of the individual;

"(B) a person to whom the individual stands in loco parentis; and

"(C) any other person living in the individual's household and related to the individual by blood or marriage.".

SEC. 502. COUNTERTERRORISM PROTECTION FUND.

The State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 is amended—

(1) by redesignating section 39 as section 40; and

(2) by inserting after section 38 (22 U.S.C. 2710) the following new section:

"SEC. 39. COUNTERTERRORISM PROTECTION FUND.

"(a) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of State may reimburse domestic and foreign persons, agencies, or governments for the protection of judges or other persons who provide assistance or information relating to terrorist incidents primarily outside the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. Before making a payment under this section in a matter over which there is Federal criminal jurisdiction, the Secretary shall advise and consult with the Attorney General.

"(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of State for 'Administration of Foreign Affairs' $1,000,000 for fiscal year 1986 and $1,000,000 for fiscal year 1987 for use in reimbursing persons, agencies, or governments under this section.

"(c) DESIGNATION OF FUND.—Amounts made available under this section may be referred to as the 'Counterterrorism Protection Fund'.".

SEC. 503. AUTHORITY TO CONTROL CERTAIN TERRORISM-RELATED SERVICES.

The State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 is amended—

(1) by redesignating section 40 (as so redesignated by section 502 of this Act) as section 41; and

(2) by inserting after section 39 (as added by section 502 of this Act) the following new section:

"SEC. 40. AUTHORITY TO CONTROL CERTAIN TERRORISM-RELATED SERVICES.

"(a) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of State may, by regulation, impose controls on the provision of the services described in subsection (b) if the Secretary determines that provision of such services would aid and abet international terrorism.

"(b) SERVICES SUBJECT TO CONTROL.—The services subject to control under subsection (a) are the following:

"(1) Serving in or with the security forces of a designated foreign government.

"(2) Providing training or other technical services having a direct military, law enforcement, or intelligence application, to or for the security forces of a designated foreign government.

Any regulations issued to impose controls on services described in paragraph (2) shall list the specific types of training and other services subject to the controls.

"(c) PERSONS SUBJECT OF CONTROLS.—These services may be controlled under subsection (a) when they are provided within the United States by any individual or entity and when they are provided anywhere in the world by a United States person.

"(d) LICENSES.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Secretary of State may require licenses, which may be revoked, suspended, or amended, without prior notice, whenever such action is deemed to be advisable.

"(e) DEFINITIONS.—

"(1) DESIGNATED FOREIGN GOVERNMENT.—As used in this section, the term 'designated foreign government' means a foreign government that the Secretary of State has determined, for purposes of section 6(j)(1) of the Export Administration Act of 1979, engages in or provides support for international terrorism.

"(2) SECURITY FORCES.—As used in this section, the term 'security forces' means any military or paramilitary forces, any police or other law enforcement agency (including any police or other law enforcement agency at the regional or local level), and any intelligence agency of a foreign government.

"(3) UNITED STATES.—As used in this section, the term 'United States' includes any State, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and any territory or possession of the United States.

"(4) UNITED STATES PERSON.—As used in this section, the term 'United States person' means any United States national, any permanent resident alien, and any sole proprietorship, partnership, company, association, or corporation organized under the laws of or having its principal place of business within the United States.

"(f) VIOLATIONS.—

"(1) PENALTIES.—Whoever willfully violates any regulation issued under this section shall be fined not more than $100,000 or five times the total compensation received for the conduct which constitutes the violation, whichever is greater, or imprisoned for not more than ten years, or both, for each such offense.

"(2) INVESTIGATIONS.—The Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury shall have authority to investigate violations of regulations issued under this section.

"(g) CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT.—

"(1) REVIEW OF REGULATIONS.—Not less than 30 days before issuing any regulations under this section (including any amendments thereto), the Secretary of State shall transmit the proposed regulations to the Congress.

"(2) REPORTS.—Not less than once every six months, the Secretary of State shall report to the Congress concerning the number and character of licenses granted and denied during the previous reporting period, and such other information as the President may find to be relevant to the accomplishment of the objectives of this section.

"(h) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAWS.—The authority granted by this section is in addition to the authorities granted by any other provision of law.

"(i) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section may be construed to make unlawful any activity conducted by an officer or employee of the United States Government, or any agent thereof, which is properly authorized and conducted in accordance with Federal laws, rules, and regulations, including Executive Orders, governing such activities.".

TITLE VI—FASCELL FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM

SEC. 601. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Fascell Fellowship Act".

SEC. 602. FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM FOR TEMPORARY SERVICE AT UNITED STATES MISSIONS IN THE SOVIET UNION AND EASTERN EUROPE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established a fellowship program pursuant to which the Secretary of State will provide fellowships to United States citizens while they serve, for a period of between one and two years, in positions formerly held by foreign national employees at United States diplomatic or consular missions in the Soviet Union or Eastern European countries.

(b) DESIGNATION OF FELLOWSHIPS.—Fellowships under this title shall be known as "Fascell Fellowships".

(c) PURPOSE OF THE FELLOWSHIPS.—Fellowships under this title shall be provided in order to allow the recipient (hereafter in this title referred to as a "Fellow") to serve on a short-term basis at a United States diplomatic or consular mission in the Soviet Union or an Eastern European country in order to obtain first hand exposure to that country, including (as appropriate) independent study in Soviet or Eastern European area studies or languages.

(d) INDIVIDUALS WHO MAY RECEIVE A FELLOWSHIP.—To receive a fellowship under this title, an individual must be a United States citizen who is an undergraduate or graduate student, a teacher, scholar, or other academic, or an other individual, who has expertise in Soviet or Eastern European area studies or languages and who has a working knowledge of the principal language of the country in which he or she would serve.

(e) WOMEN AND MEMBERS OF MINORITY GROUPS.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary of State shall actively recruit women and members of minority groups.

SEC. 603. FELLOWSHIP BOARD.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT AND FUNCTION.—There is established a Fellowship Board (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Board"), which shall select the individuals who will be eligible to serve as Fellows.

(b) MEMBERSHIP.—The Board shall consist of 9 members as follows:

(1) A senior official of the Department of State (who shall be the chair of the Board), designated by the Secretary of State.

(2) An officer or employee of the Department of Commerce, designated by the Secretary of Commerce.

(3) An officer or employee of the United States Information Agency, designated by the Director of that Agency.

(4) Six academic specialists in Soviet or Eastern European area studies or languages, appointed by the Secretary of State (in consultation with the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the chairman and ranking minority of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate).

(c) MEETINGS.—The Board shall meet at least once each year to select the individuals who will be eligible to serve as Fellows.

(d) COMPENSATION AND PER DIEM.—Members of the Board shall receive no compensation on account of their service on the Board, but while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of their duties under this title, may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703 of title 5 of the United States Code.

SEC. 604. FELLOWSHIPS.

(a) NUMBER.—Up to 100 fellowships may be provided under this title each year.

(b) REMUNERATION AND PERIOD.—The Board shall determine, taking into consideration the position in which each Fellow will serve and his or her experience and expertise—

(1) the amount of remuneration the Fellow will receive for his or her service under this title, and

(2) the period of the fellowship, which shall be between one and two years.

(c) TRAINING.—Each Fellow may be given appropriate training at the Foreign Service Institute or other appropriate institution.

(d) HOUSING AND TRANSPORTATION.—The Secretary of State shall, pursuant to regulations—

(1) provide housing for each Fellow while the Fellow is serving abroad, including (where appropriate) housing for family members; and

(2) pay the costs and expenses incurred by each Fellow in traveling between the United States and the country in which the Fellow serves, including (where appropriate) travel for family members.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Subsection (d) of this section shall not take effect until October 1, 1986.

SEC. 605. SECRETARY OF STATE.

(a) DETERMINATIONS.—The Secretary of State shall determine which of the individuals selected by the Board will serve at each United States diplomatic or consular mission in the Soviet Union or Eastern Europe and the position in which each will serve.

(b) AUTHORITIES.—Such service shall be in accordance with the relevant authorities of the Foreign Service Act of 1980, the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956, and title 5 of the United States Code.

(c) FUNDING.—Funds appropriated to the Department of State for "Salaries and Expenses" shall be used for the expenses incurred in carrying out this title.

TITLE VII—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 701. PEACE CORPS AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 3 of the Peace Corps Act is amended by amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the purposes of this Act $130,000,000 for the fiscal year 1986 and $137,200,000 for the fiscal year 1987.".

Mr. LUGAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I rise to ask the Senate's consideration of the Diplomatic Security and Antiterrorism Act of 1986. This legislation is a response to the immediate need to improve the security of our diplomatic posts overseas and to make management and operational changes in the Department of State which will strengthen our ability to fight the threat of terrorism.

In the past few years, we all have witnessed the deadly consequences of international terrorism. We know that much of this terrorism is aimed directly at America and American interests. American diplomatic missions, the people who work in them and their families are the clearest symbols of American interests overseas and are, therefore, prime targets for international terrorists.

I think it is particularly important to point out that, while most people associate American missions abroad with the Department of State, in fact more than 70 percent of the personnel of the average Embassy are employed by other U.S. Government agencies. About 30 U.S. Government agencies have employees overseas representing American foreign policy interests, analyzing international economic developments, promoting the export of American products and services, and serving in a wide range of other duties.

The U.S. Government has about 17,000 Americans serving overseas in diplomatic missions and another approximately 31,000 foreign nationals. These numbers do not include personnel at military bases who are not included in the scope of the Diplomatic Security Act. Therefore, the State Department is responsible for the protection of about 48,000 employees plus the families of Americans assigned overseas.

Last year, a distinguished panel of experts headed by Adm. Bobby Inman made an extensive study of the security problems facing American interests overseas. The report of the Inman panel contained a number of recommendations to improve diplomatic security overseas as well as security for foreign diplomats in the United States.

Most of these recommendations have been incorporated in the administration's plan for a new Diplomatic Security Program. In February of this year, the State Department presented Congress with a request for a supplemental authorization of $4.4 billion over 5 years, beginning with the current fiscal year.

The administration's original request for a Diplomatic Security Program was contained in S. 2015 which I introduced earlier this year. The House passed H.R. 4151, which has the Diplomatic Security Programs and seven other titles on subjects related to various aspects of terrorism. The Diplomatic Security Program should be the focus of our attention at this time and, therefore, the legislation before us today is an amendment to H.R. 4151 and concentrates on the administration's original request.

Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations has studied this authorization request for more than 3 months. We have talked with State Department officials, officials of other Government agencies represented overseas and representatives of private industry knowledgeable about the costs and procedures of the Overseas Security Program.

On May 14, the committee held a markup on the Diplomatic Security Act and voted to report the bill which is before the Senate today. This legislation has several key components:

It authorizes a total of $1,107,821,000 in supplemental funds for fiscal years 1986 and 1987.

It establishes within the Department of State a Bureau of Diplomatic Security to be headed by an Assistant Secretary with overall authority to manage the worldwide Security Program.

It establishes a Diplomatic Security Service as a professional career path in the Department of State.

It establishes an Accountability Review Board to investigate breaches of security where there are injuries, loss of life or serious destruction of property.

The bill also contains strong preference for the use of American companies in the construction projects and it bars from these projects any company doing business with the Government of Libya.

The committee considered numerous pieces of legislation dealing with the broader issue of terrorism. Three sections were included in the bill that were contained in the House-passed measure with slight modifications.

One section adds a new provision to the current terrorism rewards-for-information fund to permit rewards leading to the arrest and prosecution of major narcotics offenders for narcotics-related offenses committed overseas. Included in these offenses are the killing or kidnaping, or the attempted killing or kidnaping, of U.S. personnel and their families because of their connection to U.S. enforcement and control programs. An additional $5 million is authorized for the rewards-for-information program for 1987.

A second terrorism-related section permits the Secretary of State to regulate the provision of technical services to the law enforcement or security forces of countries defined as supporters of terrorism under the terms of the Export Administration Act. This provision narrows an original administration proposal which arose out of the Wilson-Terpil case and created some controversy by its vague definition of supporters of terrorism.

The last terrorism-related section in the bill permits the Secretary of State to make reimbursements for the protection expenses of those who have provided information relating to terrorist incidents outside the United States. This section augments the Administration of Justice Program by providing protection to witnesses in those instances where the United States has lent special assistance to the investigation and prosecution of a case.

This bill also has a provision for a fellowship program for U.S. citizens to work at American diplomatic missions in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe for 1 or 2 years. This program, named after House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman DANTE FASCELL, would serve two important purposes:

First, it would allow American students, teachers, and scholars to study the Soviet Union and Eastern European countries firsthand, a valuable resource to the United States.

Second, the Americans in this program would replace some Soviet and East bloc nationals working in our Embassies, thus increasing the overall security at these posts.

The cost of this program would come from the State Department's salaries and expenses account and no additional authorization is necessary.

Finally, this bill also has an amendment, added in the markup, to authorize an additional $7.2 million for the Peace Corps in fiscal year 1987. This amendment, which increases the Peace Corps' total authorization to $137.2 million, was proposed by Senator DODD and cosponsored by Senator KERRY and Senator EVANS. The objective of the amendment is to allow the Peace Corps to begin implementation of a 6-year plan to increase its volunteer force which Congress requested in Public Law 99-83 in 1985.

Mr. President, I would like to provide some additional details on the budget and the process by which the committee arrived at the authorization levels. As I said earlier, we studied the budget request in great detail. The budget submission provided by the State Department is more than 300 pages and each line item has a narrative to describe the particular expense and the reason for the request.

In examining the State Department request, we considered two main components: the total amount—$4.4 billion—and the period of authorization—5 years.

The committee decided that a shorter authorization period was necessary in order to fulfill our responsibility to those who represent our Government overseas and taxpayers here at home to see to it that the money is spent in the most efficient and effective manner. During the coming year, we will be examining the budget very closely to monitor the State Department's performance with these funds and funds received in previous years. Then, during the next, regular 2-year authorization process, we will respond to the situation and the needs at that time.

Another reason for the shorter authorization period is that this program is much larger than anything the State Department has undertaken before and we want to be in a position to positively influence the Security Program should changes be necessary.

As to the amounts of specific authorization, the funds are intended for the following four categories:

For salaries and expenses, $243,175,000. In this category, the committee has made clear to the Department of State that the money should be spent on personnel and programs directly related to security. Nonessential items were cut back or eliminated from this authorization. This category has such important items as perimeter security for American missions, Marine guards, Seabees and security training. Also included here is money for counterintelligence and communications security, an area which the Inman Panel identified as needing special attention and which the committee agrees should have high priority.

For the acquisition and maintenance of buildings abroad, $857,806,000. With these funds the State Department will undertake the construction or renovation of diplomatic posts overseas and incorporate into these buildings new security systems and equipment. The cost of these individual projects is high because of the unique security requirements of American diplomatic posts and the need, in some cases, to acquire additional land to set back the buildings 100 feet from main roads, as security experts and Inman Panel recommend. In this category again, we have made it clear to the State Department that it should not spend this money on nonessentials and it should be very, very careful in its planning of new buildings to avoid costly designs that contribute nothing to security or basis building needs.

For counterterrorism research and development, $2,000,000. The technology which terrorists have used against our interests is not static but will change and become more dangerous. Therefore, we must continue our own research to anticipate and negate whatever threats we will face in the future.

For antiterrorism assistance, $4.840,000. This money is for the continuation of a program that provides training and equipment to help foreign governments improve their antiterrorist capabilities. This program also acts as an incentive to other countries to cooperate with the United States and other friendly governments in combating international terrorism.

Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations had two objectives in formulating this supplemental authorization. The committee wanted to authorize a program which will substantially increase our ability to protect our people and our interests overseas. The committee also wanted to authorize a program which accommodates the tight budget situation which we are all facing today.

This supplemental authorization achieves both of those objectives and I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the Diplomatic Security and Anti-Terrorism Act of 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOLDWATER). The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I join the chairman in urging the Senate to pass the Diplomatic Security and Antiterrorism Act of 1986. This bill, H.R. 4151, would authorize an appropriation of $1.1 billion for fiscal year 1986 and 1987 to initiate the administration's 5-year $4.4 billion security enhancement program. This project is designed primarily to finance the acquisition and construction of over 70 new chanceries, consulates, or residences and the renovation of an additional 170 posts. In addition to this ambitious construction program, the administration, through this legislation, hopes to:

First, consolidate all of the overseas diplomatic security responsibilities in the Department of State and create a new bureau for this purpose;

Second, establish a board of inquiry and accountability to review security breaches and to recommend action against negligent personnel;

Third, increase the protective services provided by the Department of State for foreign official visitors and diplomats within the United States;

Fourth, strengthen the residential security provided for U.S. employees at high threat diplomatic posts;

Fifth, increase the staff and training of security personnel in the State Department; and Sixth, provide additional and improved technical security and communications equipment to reduce the vulnerability of U.S. diplomatic missions to electronic penetration.

Mr. President, there is no question that we must do all that is possible to provide adequate protection for American personnel abroad. Americans are being attacked in larger numbers and in increasingly brutal and indiscriminate ways. Since 1975, there have been a large number of citizens killed in 243 attacks against U.S. Embassies and personnel abroad.

In fact, more ambassadors have been assassinated since World War II while serving our Nation abroad than all of our generals and admirals killed in the same period as a result of two wars from enemy action. American diplomats deserve better protection.

I realize the numbers involved may not seem large in scope. In fact, since 1968, nearly 1,000 times as many Americans were killed as the result of drunk driving as of terrorists, but the very fact of Americans working for their Government being at risk I think is a fact that we should prevent.

In this regard, with regard to the total number of casualties, I ask unanimous consent to insert into the RECORD at this point a table prepared by the Department of State on U.S. casualties caused by international terrorism, 1968–85.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CASUALTIES CAUSED BY INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM, 1968–85

Mr. PELL. In July 1984, in response to the increasingly visible problem of state-sponsored terrorism, Secretary Shultz created an Advisory Panel on Overseas Security, chaired by Adm. Bobby Inman. Other members of the panel were Senator WARREN RUDMAN of New Hampshire; Ambassador Anne Armstrong, chairperson of the President's foreign intelligence advisory board; Congressman DAN MICA from Florida; Lt. Gen. D'Wayne Gray, U.S. Marine Corps; Ambassador Larry Eagleburger; Robert McGuire, chief executive officer of Pinkerton's Inc.; and Victor Dikeos, former director of security and of the multinational force in Rome.

This panel was created to review our security posture and to chart a course of action for the U.S. Government to take in better defending our personnel and buildings abroad. Our current defenses were simply inadequate. A more progressive plan to combat the scourge of terrorism was needed.

In June, 1985, the Inman panel submitted its comprehensive study and 109 recommendations. Most of these recommendations which cover a wide range of physical and technical security, intelligence, organization, and diplomatic efforts to combat terrorism were accepted by the Department of State. H.R. 4151 is designed to implement the Inman recommendation. In addition to the Department, many other agencies with personnel and interests abroad contributed to the development of this legislation.

This bill has broad bipartisan support. It passed the Democratic House by a vote of 389 to 71. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support this bill. The lives of Americans working abroad may depend upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise in support of this legislation, now pending on the floor, to provide and enhance diplomatic security for our personnel serving abroad. This proposal flows from a series of recommendations made by the Advisory Panel on Overseas Security, which was convened by the Secretary of State following the Beirut bombings and chaired by Adm. Bobby Inman, now retired and, in my opinion, one of the most able men we have had in public service in this country in recent times. After a very thorough review of the problem, the Inman panel recommended a series of steps, well over 100, that could be taken to improve security.

While the panel noted that it was not possible to prevent all attacks upon our overseas facilities, it did detail a number of steps that could be taken to bring about significant improvement in the situation, including increased professionalism on the part of State Department security personnel, a strict accountability in cases involving a significant loss of life, and a major construction program for upgrading and building new diplomatic facilities overseas.

On the basis of the Inman panel recommendations, the administration submitted recommendations to Congress. The House of Representatives has acted and now it is time for the Senate to act.

Given the parliamentary situation, I will not propose an amendment on the floor, but I regret that an amendment I offered in the committee, which would have increased the authorization level of this bill by about 25 percent, was defeated on a close vote of 7 to 10 within the committee. That amendment was geared to provide an authorization sufficient to fund all the items which the Department of State had included within a band 1 recommendation.

The Department had originally submitted a very broad request to Congress. They were asked to reexamine their request very carefully, to consider it, to put priority items first; in the process of making that judgment, they came up, in effect, with band 1 recommendations. To provide an authorization for that band would have required an increase of about 25 percent over what is contained in the bill. I made such a proposal in the committee. It was not adopted—regrettably, in my view, because I do think this is an extremely important program, one that Congress needs to stand behind.

We had the benefit of the State Department's judgment as to what were the priority items and I thought it better to accept their evaluation items rather than for Congress, in effect, to substitute its own judgment. I am hopeful that when this matter goes to conference, we will be able to arrive at a figure that rests upon some solid basis for meeting the recommendation from the executive branch to Congress as to the authorization that is absolutely necessary. It seems to me that when the executive branch is really pushed to provide their top priorities, as was done with respect to this band 1 recommendation, Congress ought to go along with it.

This is a program with which we should be pennywise, because I believe we will end up running a very high risk: We will not only be pound-foolish in terms of the expenditure of money, but lives will be at risk.

The fact of the matter is that our diplomatic personnel serving in overseas posts are probably as much at risk as anyone serving in the U.S. Government under current circumstances. The figures on the number of diplomatic personnel who have been killed or injured over the last decade, as we confront the problem of international terrorism, are sufficient to cause not only concern but alarm. I think it is very important that we are now moving in a forthright way to deal with this problem.

The pending legislation seeks to do that. It does not go quite as far as I think it should have gone. I am hopeful that when we resolve the differences between the House and the Senate, we will be able to do better. This is an extremely important program. I know Members appreciate that.

□ 1220

There is an understandable tendency to focus on this program and its importance in the immediate aftermath of a particular incident, of a loss of life or an attack. We must also take the longer view. It is very important for Members of Congress and indeed the Nation to comprehend and appreciate the importance of the very well thought out and considered recommendations of the Inman panel, Congress and the country must stand behind the program on a sustained, continuing basis in order to do what we can to enhance diplomatic security and to provide the maximum protection possible we can for our personnel.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 2172

Mr. DURENBERGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER], for himself and Mr. LEAHY, proposes an amendment numbered 2172.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 107, in line 15, delete "$245,327,000" and insert "$283,104,000."

On page 108, between lines 20 and 21, insert the following new subsection:

"(e) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS FOR CERTAIN SECURITY PROGRAMS.—Of the amount of funds authorized to be appropriated by paragraph (a)(1)(A)(i), $34,537,000 shall be available only for the protection of classified office equipment, the expansion of information systems security, and the hiring of American systems managers and operators for computers at high threat locations."

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise in my capacity as chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence to propose the amendment before us. I ask unanimous consent that in addition to my colleague, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], who is the ranking member and the vice chairman of the Intelligence Committee, Senators COHEN, MURKOWSKI, HECHT, MCCONNELL, and BENTSEN also be included as cosponsors of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I will be very brief, I will begin by complimenting my colleagues on the Foreign Relations Committee for the difficult task they have undertaken over the last 1½ years to deal with the issues of diplomatic and Embassy security, not an easy task, and always a task that has resource parameters pressing. So I compliment the chairman of the committee and the ranking member of the committee for the excellent job that they and members of the Foreign Relations Committee have done.

Mr. President, the Diplomatic Security Act is an incredibly important measure. In the wake of the Beiruit bombings and numerous other terrorist attacks, our willingness to create a Bureau of Diplomatic Security and to authorize funds for better security is a crucial, tangible commitment of Congress to United States interests around the world. Without this concrete commitment to security, our Nation will be unable to maintain its active role in the world's capitals and centers of commerce.

Just as we support the Nation's defense, so must we now support it diplomatic security. Our diplomatic presence abroad is truly the first line of our defense. It enables us to seize opportunities for cooperation and for the amicable settlement of disputes with others. It saves us from having to resort to military measures, and it paves the way for the efficient use of our Armed Forces when that is necessary. We cannot—and must not—do without an active, assertive diplomatic presence overseas.

While much of the authorization in this bill is to improve the physical security of U.S. diplomatic facilities against the terrorist threat, some of the funding covers the important need for technical protection against hostile intelligence services. As our Embassies have adopted modern methods of communication, our adversaries have adopted modern methods to penetrate those communications. If our secrets are not to be compromised, we must improve our defenses against those hostile efforts. We must not scrimp on this protection. The compromise of sensitive information, whether it concerns secret negotiations instructions or Embassy security plans, can threaten American interests as severely as any terrorist bomb.

Indeed, it is especially important that we appreciate the inherent link between technical security and security against terrorism. Counterterrorist plans do not emerge out of thin air; they are written, discussed, and may well be stored in computers. Seemingly innocent information from people's conversations, communications or data bases can be of tremendous help to terrorist plotters or to the states that support them. And frankly, no physical security system is foolproof. It is of the utmost importance, then, to safeguard the information about our physical security efforts so that terrorists will not discover ways around them. The technical security programs that this amendment supports are a vital link in the chain of defense against terrorist attacks on U.S. facilities overseas.

The Foreign Relations Committee has subjected this bill to intense scrutiny and significant reductions. I can well appreciate the need, in a very difficult year from the budgetary standpoint, to pare down expensive building proposals. But these technical security programs are relatively low-budget items that are well worth the funds they require. They are needed now, and they can be implemented now; they are not dependent upon the pace of new Embassy construction; and they can all be accommodated within the levels prescribed in the report of the committee of conference on the State Department supplemental appropriation. Now that the conference report on the urgent supplemental has adopted a "salaries and expenses" figure that would permit full funding of these programs, we on the Intelligence Committee strongly urge our colleagues to earmark some of that figure for these programs.

There are three technical security areas that merit this special attention: protection of classified office equipment; expansion of information systems security; and hiring of U.S. citizens to manage and operate Embassy computers in high-threat locations. This amendment would provide $34.6 million for these programs, compared to the $12.6 million recommended by the Foreign Relations Committee. The amendment would delete another $7.7 million requested by the State Department that could not reasonably be used by these programs in fiscal year 1987.

These programs all respond to concerns raised by Admiral Inman's Advisory Panel on Overseas Security, and also by the Select Committee on Intelligence in our yearlong study of U.S. counterintelligence and security programs. Several of these programs grow out of efforts that were supported by the $35 million supplemental appropriation that Congress enacted last year at the urging of the Intelligence Committee.

Mr. President, security has long been the stepchild of our bureaucracies. It is inevitably seen as a sidelight, taking resources away from major missions and making people's lives more difficult. But security is essential, and events of recent years have made that terribly clear. In the past year, decades of bureaucratic inertia have been overcome and the Government has begun programs to improve the security of both persons and programs.

Now we must keep up that momentum. Programs that we have called for are beginning to appear; now we must fund them and support them. The payoffs will be real but invisible. They will be terrorist plots that fail, or that are rejected by the terrorists themselves; they will be intelligence coups that our enemies never achieve; they will be state visits that are unmarred by security problems, buildings that are neither bombed nor broken into, and secrets that remain secret.

This is a silent war, and the technical security programs that this amendment supports are a crucial movement of forces in that campaign. I urge my colleagues of the Senate to enlist in this campaign by supporting this amendment.

Mr. President, I also have a detailed description of the programs that this amendment supports. I ask unanimous consent that it be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the description was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROTECTION OF CLASSIFIED OFFICE EQUIPMENT

Emanations from electronic equipment can be intercepted and converted from electronic impulses into human language. In the past, recognition of this vulnerability has led to extraordinary physical and electronic protection for communications centers and communications equipment at overseas posts. Recent events have highlighted another important area of vulnerability: interception of emanations from typewriters and office equipment that are used to process classified information. To address this problem, the State Department has developed a coordinated program to protect classified office equipment.

The equipment protection program has four parts: product certification; secure transportation with State Department couriers; secure handling of repair jobs; and regular inspections of both equipment and security practices. New technical equipment is required in each of these areas, as well as more couriers, inspection personnel, and contracts for secure repair of the office equipment. The State Department requested $33,287,000 over two years for this program; we estimate that they can usefully spend $28,227,000 in fiscal year 1987. The Foreign Relations Committee would authorize only $10,646,000.

EXPANSION OF INFORMATION SYSTEMS SECURITY

The Department of State and other foreign affairs agencies are rapidly increasing their use of computers and word processors overseas. Admiral Inman's Advisory Panel on Overseas Security notes that this increase is being accompanied by a documented increase in the hostile electronic intelligence threat at those overseas facilities. Currently, however, there are few State Department personnel available to work on this problem, and none at the Regional Administrative Management Centers to which embassies typically turn first for help in managing office systems.

The Department of State proposes to assign six computer security personnel and one administrator to its three Regional Administrative Management Centers, and two computer security people plus an administrator for headquarters. They requested $1,872,000 for two years, but could usefully spend $764,000 in fiscal year 1987. The Foreign Relations Committee would authorize only $345,000.

U.S. MANAGERS AND OPERATORS OF COMPUTERS AT HIGH-THREAT LOCATIONS

The State Department operates large minicomputer systems and small office information (word processing) systems in many overseas locations. While these are unclassified systems, some contain sensitive information, particularly when the information in several files can be accessed and analyzed in the aggregate. Unclassified systems at high technical threat locations are especially vulnerable, and foreign nationals are currently involved in the management and operation of systems in those locations. The State Department has designated certain countries as high technical threat locations based upon reported efforts of other countries to penetrate electronic systems in those locations.

Admiral Inman's Advisory Panel on Overseas Security recommends that no foreign national employee have access to an automated information system at any U.S. Embassy, and the State Department proposes at least to eliminate such foreign nationals as managers and operators of the equipment in high threat areas. State Department requested $7,124,000 for this program over two years, and we estimate that they could usefully spend their full FY 1987 request of $5,546,000. The Foreign Relations Committee would authorize only $1,578,000.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment from the distinguished chairman of the Intelligence Committee. The Foreign Relations Committee and the Intelligence Committee have consulted with regard to the wisdom of this amendment and come to a unanimous point of view that it is in the best interest of this legislation and therefore we are prepared to accept the amendment on this side.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I concur in the view of our chairman. I think it is a good amendment. It is being joined by both the Intelligence and Foreign Relations Committees. However, before acting on it, I know that my colleague, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], would like to comment on it.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the quorum be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am delighted to cosponsor this amendment with my distinguished colleague, the chairman of the Intelligence Committee, Senator DURENBERGER. I see in the chair the distinguished senior Senator from Arizona and former chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee. I know both of my colleagues are well aware of the security considerations reflected in this amendment. The Durenberger-Leahy amendment to the Diplomatic Security Act would earmark $34,537,000 in the diplomatic security bill for three very important technical security programs. Currently, the bill provides only $12½ million for these programs. Our amendment earmarks an additional $21 million, almost $22 million for technical security improvements in our Embassies. The security of our Embassies and consulates abroad is a critical matter for all Americans, certainly to any of those who have visited abroad. It has been one of the first things mentioned to me by our Ambassadors or our security people. It is important for those who serve our country abroad, for those who use American facilities when they travel and really for each of us who care about America's ability to pursue an effective foreign policy. We have to protect our facilities abroad so that we can continue to influence and assist and do business with other people in the world. We are the preeminent nation in the world. We have to be able to carry out our responsibilities worldwide.

In an age of modern terrorism, it is not enough to bar the doors or to buttress walls or to hire more guards. Terrorists, and those who aid them, especially when it is State sponsored terrorism, can and do subject U.S. facilities to intensive surveillance, enormous surveillance. They seek to understand our security measures to determine their weak points. If we fail to protect the information about our security practices, we make it that much easier for terrorists to attack us.

Now, the State Department, responding to the recommendations of Admiral Bobby Inman's Advisory Panel on Overseas Security, has proposed some excellent programs to improve the security of communications and computers in U.S. Embassies. These programs are aimed at making sure that the typewriters and word processors handling classified information do not fall into hostile hands. Certainly, as vice chairman of the Intelligence Committee, I understand the concerns we have about that, as do the two distinguished Senators, the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Arizona.

These programs are aimed at making sure that the typewriters and word processors handling classified information do not fall into hostile hands. They will put Americans in charge of the computers in U.S. Embassies, rather than leaving reams of sensitive information in the hands of foreign employees who may actually be hostile intelligence agents, and oftentimes are, and they will provide computer security experts, both at headquarters and in regional communications support centers. These are the most basic of security measures. They can be implemented in our current Embassies instead of waiting for new ones to be built, and they can be funded without adding to the overall total authorized in this bill. They deserve our support.

Today we are going to vote on authorizing $1.1 billion for overseas security through fiscal year 1987. The $34,537,000 that our amendment earmarks for high-priority technical security programs is only about 3 percent of the bill. I believe that the State Department can squeeze that amount out of its construction budget. Surely this is not too high a price to enhance technical security in those new Embassy buildings this bill will fund.

Let us make sure that our computers and word processors are in the hands of Americans, not hostile agents, as they have been many times in the past. The amount of money we are talking about is a tiny fraction of what we would lose if we do not do that.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I emphasize that our amendment is within the figures agreed to by the conference committee on the urgent supplemental appropriation. As a concerned citizen, I am convinced that this sign of our determination to strengthen technical security is a vital part of the effort to improve our security against hostile intelligence services and terrorist organizations. I urge the floor managers to accept this amendment and my fellow Senators to support it.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I thank my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2172) was agreed to.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2173

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], for himself, Mr. DENTON, and Mr. DECONCINI, proposes an amendment numbered 2173:

At the appropriate place in the bill add the following new section: That (a) paragraph (3) of subsection (b) of section 112 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out "but outside the District of Columbia and".

(b) The Act entitled "An Act to protect foreign diplomats and consular officers and the buildings and premises occupied by them in the District of Columbia", approved February 15, 1938 (52 Stat. 30; D.C. Code 22-1115 and 1116) is repealed.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I thank Senator DECONCINI and Senator DENTON for cosponsoring this amendment with me.

This amendment is a product of legislation that Senator DECONCINI and I recently introduced, which was S. 2508. This would repeal a District of Columbia Code, and the section number is 22-1115. This local law for the District of Columbia makes it a crime to congregate within 500 feet of an Embassy and to refuse to disperse when ordered to do so by the police.

In effect, S. 2508 would replace the local law with a more recent and more comprehensive congressional statute codified in the Federal criminal law, and that was put on the books in 1972. The Federal statute protects foreign diplomats in all 50 States in this country, such as New York, where the headquarters of the United Nations is, and the home of many foreign diplomats of ambassadorial rank. This 1972 law prohibits activity within 100 feet—as compared to the 500 feet of D.C. law—of a diplomatic facility when it is designed to threaten, harass, coerce, or intimidate those entering or those leaving such a facility.

Congress did not extend this law to the District of Columbia, because it was said at that time that the District already had sufficient law, and it was evidently thought to be similar to this 1972 law.

However, the fact is this: The District of Columbia law is in no way similar. Unlike the Federal law, D.C. law prohibits more than two people from standing in front of an Embassy. On its face, this law, it seems to me, infringes upon our constitutional right of freedom of speech and freedom of assembly.

Moreover, we have had selective enforcement of the D.C. statute. That has resulted in the arrests of peaceful demonstrators—arrests that have taken these people, so arrested, through an ordeal of prosecution, trial, sentence, and, in some cases, even imprisonment.

It is grossly offensive to our constitutional values in this country to subject a U.S. citizen to prosecution simply because he or she stands peacefully on a public street holding a sign that might say something like "Russia Get Out Of Afghanistan," or have the word "Solidarity" on it, or have the words "Apartheid Is Evil."

There is no reason why professional diplomats in the District of Columbia need more protection from seeing such demonstrations than, say, those located at the consulates in New York or Chicago or Los Angeles.

What I have sent to the desk is, of course, the contents of S. 2508 in amendment form. Its adoption will ensure uniform treatment of Embassy property and personnel, while at the same time it ought to protect important constitutional rights of U.S. citizens.

Mr. President, the bill I have referred to, S. 2508, was favorably reported recently by the Security and Terrorism Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee. That committee is chaired by our colleague Senator from Alabama [Mr. DENTON], and I thank him for his favorable consideration and the unanimous approval that this subcommittee gave to our bill. It also enjoys the sponsorship of Senator DECONCINI and the cosponsorship of Senator DENTON and Senator EAST. In addition, I have heard of no opposition to this proposal.

I defer to Senator DENTON, if he would like to make some comments on this amendment, of which he is a cosponsor.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague from Iowa. I strongly support Senator GRASSLEY's amendment to H.R. 4151. I am proud to be a cosponsor.

As Senator GRASSLEY mentioned, we did clear the bill unanimously 2 days ago in the Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism, which this Senator chairs. In doing so, we noted that there was a bipartisan feeling on the subcommittee that in our haste to improve the security of Embassies, the security of airports, the security of Government installations around Washington, and the security of our citizens around the world, we must take careful consideration to avoid infringing on first amendment rights.

Mr. President, this amendment would repeal the District of Columbia law which makes it a crime for more than two people to congregate within 500 feet of an Embassy if they fail to leave when ordered to do so.

By repealing that law, we permit the Embassies in Washington, DC to fall under the same law as is applicable in the 50 States, which prohibits activity within 100 feet of a diplomatic facility when it is designed to threaten, harass, coerce, or intimidate those entering or leaving the facility.

Senator GRASSLEY mentioned that the current inconsistency in the law could prohibit peaceful demonstrators from congregating and expressing that which they are entitled to by their first amendment right. I appreciate his efforts in this matter. I should note that Senator DECONCINI has worked closely with me and with Senator LEAHY on this and on a number of legislative initiatives which do improve antiterrorism propensities in our country.

I thank Senator GRASSLEY for his leadership and for yielding to me.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I do not see any of my colleagues desiring to comment on this. It is my understanding that this amendment has been approved by the managers of the bill. If that is true, maybe we can have adoption of the amendment.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I am pleased to say that the Senate, I think, will be well advised to adopt the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Iowa. He has long been a champion of the peaceful rights of Americans to assemble and make known their points of view. He has brought this issue to the floor on numerous occasions.

Working in cooperation with the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, on terrorism, Senator DENTON has done much excellent work in this area.

I believe they have come forward with a suggestion that merits our approval. We are prepared to accept the amendment on our side.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, personally, I have some doubts here because I visualize not just peaceful demonstrators but overseas where you have angry problems sometimes surrounding our Embassies. I wish to keep them as far away as we can.

I hope if we accept this amendment it will not be used as an example or a precedent for other nations and other parts of the world to let mobs get closer as is the case now.

However, in view of the hard work and efforts of the supporters of the administration, and I believe certainly in America they are absolutely correct, we have no objections on this side.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I comment, first of all, to thank both of the managers of the bill. The chairman and the ranking minority member have been very cooperative, and without their help, I am not sure that this bill would be this far.

Also I wish to comment, because maybe I could alleviate some of the fear that the Senator from Rhode Island expressed about it and the point of view that he made in regard to what might be the situation in a foreign country, this was all taken into consideration in 1972 when the legislation now on the books that we are conforming the D.C. law to was all taken into consideration and was considered to be good public policy at that time.

As far as I know, there is no change of that thought at this point.

Mr. President, I move adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment (No. 2173) was agreed to.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, before I send an amendment to the desk I would say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I concur with his concern and would further state that my subcommittee will look into the concerns he has raised.

The United States has simply not been confronted with the same kind of incidents which have arisen in foreign countries with respect to their Embassies. If and when it does confront such a threat most assuredly Senator GRASSLEY, I am certain, as well as myself and members of my subcommittee would take another look at this concession to first amendment privileges.

AMENDMENT NO. 2174

(Purpose: To amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 to provide for the national security by allowing access to certain Federal criminal history records)

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. DENTON] for himself and Mr. LEAHY proposes an amendment numbered 2174.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill insert the following:

NATIONAL SECURITY ACCESS

SEC. (a) The Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2011 et seq.) is amended by adding after section 148 the following new section:

"SEC. 149. FINGERPRINTING FOR SECURITY CLEARANCE.—

"a. Every person in the process of being licensed or licensed pursuant to section 103 or 104b to operate a utilization facility shall require that each individual allowed unescorted access to the facility be fingerprinted. All fingerprints obtained by a licensee as required in the preceding sentence shall be submitted to the Attorney General of the United States through a person or persons designated by the Commission in consultation with the Attorney General for identification and a criminal history records check. The costs of any identification and records check conducted pursuant to the preceding sentence shall be paid by the licensee. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Attorney General may provide all the results of the search to such person or persons designated by the Commission in consultation with the Attorney General.

"b. The Commission, by rule, may relieve persons from the obligations imposed by this section, upon specified terms, conditions, and periods, if the Commission finds that such action is consistent with its responsibilities to promote the common defense and security and to protect the health and safety of the public.

"c. For purposes of administration this section, the Commission shall prescribe regulations to—

"(1) implement procedures for the taking of fingerprints;

"(2) establish the conditions for use of information received from the Attorney General in order to—

"(A) limit the redissemination of such information; and

"(B) assure that such information is used solely for the purposes provided in this section; and

"(3) provide individuals subject to fingerprinting the right to complete and correct information contained in the criminal history records prior to any final adverse action.".

(b) The provisions of subsection a. of section 149 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as added by this Act, shall take effect upon promulgation of regulations by the Commission as set forth in subsection c. of such section. Such regulations shall be promulgated on or before January 1, 1986.

(c) The table of contents at the beginning of such Act is amended by inserting after the item for section 148 the following new item:

SEC. 149. Fingerprinting for security clearance.".

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, this amendment to H.R. 4151, which I offer on behalf of Senator LEAHY and myself will incorporate the substance of S. 274, the Nuclear Power Plant Security and Anti-Terrorism Act, a bill which I introduced on January 24, 1985. On September 12, 1985, the Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously reported S. 274 with wide bipartisan support. The bill was then considered by the full Senate on October 3, 1985, and was passed with similar wide bipartisan support.

The purpose of the proposed Nuclear Power Plant Security and Anti-Terrorism Act amendment is to provide for the national security by granting nuclear power reactor licensees access to the national criminal history files of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. By creating a mechanism to conduct a background investigation on any individual having unescorted access to a nuclear power facility, the amendment will help to ensure that only individuals who are reliable and trustworthy have access to critically sensitive areas thereby significantly improving the security of that nuclear power facility.

Most background checks by nuclear power reactor licensees are limited to State and local files as things presently stand. Unfortunately, those files do not include information about an individual's criminal record, if any, from other parts of the country other than the local and the State from which that individual comes and where the power plant is located. By allowing nuclear power reactor operators to have access to the FBI's criminal history records files, they would be able to obtain more complete criminal histories. That information is an essential element in the determination of who should be granted unescorted access to nuclear facilities.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission—the Commission—advises that there are 85 U.S. nuclear reactor plants that produce and are licensed for full power. There are five that are licensed for fuel loading and low power. These facilities currently produce approximately 15.5 percent of all our electrical power in this country. As of December 1984, 37 additional plants had been granted construction permits. when those plants become operational, nuclear power will provide approximately 25 percent of all our national electrical power. Although increasingly vital for energy, nuclear facilities can also present a grave danger to the environment and to human life, as Chernobyl dramatically indicates and with little help from saboteurs is a more important danger than that which Chernobyl appears to have presented.

The Commission has investigated more than a dozen incidents of suspected sabotage by plant employees. The incidents involved critical valves in the wrong position, miswired electrical equipment, and other problem areas. A Commission report indicated that between 1974 and 1982 there had been 32 possible deliberate acts of damage at 24 operating reactors and reactor construction sites, including the dozen reported since 1980.

I would like to offer some examples of these incidents, Mr. President, to give us a more immediate familiarity with them.

Examples of incidents include instrument valves apparently deliberately mispositioned in a way that knocked out the steam generator feed-water pump thus forcing the operator to reduce power immediately to keep the reactor from going into emergency shutdown. That incident happened on May 1, 1982, at the Salem atomic power station in southern New Jersey. Another example at the Beaver Valley plant near Pittsburgh, a valve normally left in an open position was found closed and the chain and padlock that normally secured the valve in the open position were missing. With the valve closed, emergency cooling water would not have been available for high pressure injection into the core.

The Commission reported: "Since there were no indication of unauthorized entry to the sites of these incidents, they are thought to have involved insiders." A 1983 Commission memorandum concluded that: "The major threat of sabotage to a nuclear plant is associated with the insider." More stringent employee screening procedures might have prevented many incidents of that kind.

Mr. President, currently, the FBI provides criminal history records checks only to Government or private entities specifically authorized by statute. The FBI originally disseminated criminal history records to State, city, and county officials if authorized by statute, ordinance, or rule for applicants for employment or for a permit or license, as well as for federally insured banks. However, in Menard v. Mitchell, 328 F. Supp. 718, 725-728 (D.D.C. 1971), rev'd. on other grounds, 498 F.2d 1017 (D.C. Cir. 1974), a U.S. District Court interpreted the statute which authorizes the FBI to collect criminal records (28 U.S.C. 534) as containing an implicit prohibition against dissemination to private entities and to State and local noncriminal justice agencies. The FBI, accordingly, amended its regulations to prohibit criminal history record dissemination to the general public or private sector employers, except in limited circumstances not relevant in this case.

The Menard decision has, however, been partially superseded. Congress in Public Law 92-544, authorized the FBI to disseminate criminal history records to officials of federally chartered or insured banking institutions and to officials of State and local governments for purposes of employment and licensing decisions, if authorized by State statute and approved by the Attorney General. Following Public Law 92-544 Congress also authorized dissemination to private entities engaged in certain securities transactions, such as brokerage houses (15 U.S.C. section 78(F)).

Mr. President, to prevent nuclear power facilities from becoming targets of terrorists, extortionists, or saboteurs, the licensees must be given access to the data contained in the criminal history files of the FBI.

The criminal history records contain full fingerprint identification cards for individuals who have been arrested by Federal, State or local authorities. It is important to note that identification of the person arrested is based on a full set of fingerprints rather than a name, Social Security number or other personal identifier. Currently, the FBI maintains over 22 million arrests records broken into 1,200 fingerprint classification codes.

Mr. President, because these records are based on a full fingerprint identification, the FBI, by comparing fingerprints, can positively identify a record as belonging to a certain individual thereby ensuring that the person determining employment suitability does not attribute a criminal record to the wrong person. This procedure avoids problems which could occur if an unsophisticated noncriminal justice user of criminal record information undertook a criminal record check based on an individual's name and other identifiers. With a name check it is possible that a record could be attributed to the wrong person or, by merely, using an alias, a criminal record might never be identified.

While the arrest data contained in these criminal history records is generally accurate, it is often incomplete. The FBI requires that law enforcement authorities submitting arrest data subsequently submit information concerning the disposition of the arrest. Despite this requirement, FBI experts have informed the Senate Judiciary Committee that this disposition data does not get forwarded to the FBI in close to 50 percent of the cases.

Because of the imcompleteness of this data, the Senate Judiciary Committee was faced, during consideration of the original bill, with requiring the withholding from the Commission of arrest data unaccompanied by disposition. This would protect the privacy and due process rights of prospective employees, but it would risk the failure to provide the operator important and relevant information concerning the prospective employee. Alternatively, the Senate Judiciary Committee could authorize the FBI to provide a complete arrest history record to the Commission, provided that the Commission institutes a program to protect the rights of prospective employees to correct and supplement the record and to limit the redissemination of the information supplied to the operator. After weighing the pros and cons of each approach, the Senate Judiciary Committee chose the latter course.

I should note, however, Mr. President, that in choosing the latter course, Senator PATRICK LEAHY and myself added specific language to the original bill to protect the civil liberties of the individuals to be fingerprinted. That is, the original bill and the amendment specifically directs the Commission to prescribe regulations for the taking of fingerprints and for establishing the conditions for both using the information and limiting the redissemination of the information provided by the record check in a manner limited to the purposes contained in the act. The legislation gives discretion to the Commission to implement a practical program, through regulation, for carrying out the purposes of the act. Because of the possible incompleteness of the FBI's criminal history records mentioned earlier and because of the important due process and privacy interests of prospective employees, it was Senator LEAHY's and my belief that the regulations prescribed by the Commission shall contain the following minimum requirements:

First, individuals who are asked to submit fingerprints under the program will be notified that the fingerprints will be used to run a criminal history records check through the FBI;

Second, individuals who are subject to fingerprinting will be provided with an opportunity to complete and correct the information contained in the FBI's criminal history records prior to any adverse job action being taken; and

Third, the Commission will establish procedures to ensure that the information provided to the plant operator will only be used to determine whether the person is fit to be given unescorted access to the nuclear facility, and for no other purpose.

Mr. President, the original bill and the amendment have wide support. In written testimony endorsing S. 2470—the 98th Congress version of S. 274—Herzel H.E. Plaine, general counsel of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, noted that the bill represented a means of facilitating nuclear reactor licensee efforts to obtain criminal history records and of promoting uniformity in industry-conducted personnel screening programs.

In testimony submitted to the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism on June 13, 1985, Arthur E. Lundvall, vice president of Baltimore Gas & Electric Co., and president of the Nuclear Power Executive Advisory Committee of the Edison Electric Institute, noted that:

> Nuclear powerplants have effective security programs that may include a system for psychological evaluation of potential employees and the conduct(ing) of a background investigation that involves limited State and local police record checks. This system would be significantly improved with the enactment of S. 2470 (S. 274) since it would provide a uniform system for background investigation throughout the industry.

He goes on:

> Each individual's complete criminal history will be reviewed and we can be assured that, to the maximum extent possible, only stable, reliable, and law-abiding people have unescorted access to vital areas of our nuclear powerplants.

One other piece of testimony by the manager of Corporate Security, Alabama Power Co., Mr. David Hinman, submitted to my Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism expressed concern that the failure of the industry to obtain criminal history records based on fingerprint identification could permit terrorists and would-be saboteurs an opportunity for employment at nuclear plants, using falsified birth records and other falsified credentials. Mr. Hinman concluded by endorsing this amendment and stating that it is imperative that access to such records be provided to assure that employment in sensitive positions be conducted based on full information as to the trustworthiness of the individual.

Mr. President, the amendment which is endorsed by the Commission, the Department of Justice, and private industry, would help to ensure the safety of nuclear powerplants, and thereby protect our citizens and our environment from disasters on the scale of Chernobyl. It is urgently needed to safeguard the security of the United States and the welfare of the American people.

It is my understanding, Mr. President, that this amendment has the support of the distinguished chairman of the committee and the ranking member and I understand it has been cleared by both sides and is acceptable.

THE NUCLEAR POWERPLANT SECURITY

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am very pleased to be an original cosponsor of this amendment. I congratulate my colleague and chairman of the Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism, Senator DENTON, for his initiative in sponsoring this legislation. I was proud to work closely with him on the final draft which was passed overwhelmingly by the Senate on August 3, 1985.

There are currently 85 nuclear reactor plants that produce and are licensed for full power in the United States. We recently saw the great harm that just one of these plants can cause, when the nuclear reactor at Chernobyl exploded killing and contaminating dozens of people in the Soviet Union. In the days following that accident, the milk from cows in my own State of Vermont, half way around the world, was found to contain high levels of radiation.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has investigated dozens of incidents of suspected sabotage by plant employees. Between 1974 and 1982, there were 32 possible deliberate acts of damage at 24 operating reactors and reactor construction sites. Several of those incidents could have resulted in a catastrophe at least on the scale of Chernobyl. All of those incidents were believed to have involved insiders.

At a time when terrorism is on the minds of most Americans, it would be inexcusable for us not to do everything reasonably possible to protect our nuclear powerplants from sabotage.

Under current law, most background checks by nuclear powerplant licensees are limited to State and local files. Those files do not include information about a person's criminal record, if any, in other parts of the country. By allowing nuclear plant operators to have access to FBI criminal records files, they would be better able to determine who should be granted unescorted access to nuclear facilities.

That is, very simply, what this legislation does. The nuclear plant licensee would bear the cost of fingerprinting and of the criminal records check, and could use the information obtained only for the limited purpose of determining if the person is fit to receive unescorted access to the plant. Individuals who are subject to fingerprinting would be given an opportunity to correct and complete any information contained in the FBI's records prior to any adverse job action being taken.

Mr. President, this amendment is drafted narrowly to accomplish its important purpose without unreasonably infringing on individual civil liberties. It is absolutely necessary legislation and I am proud to have taken part in the final draft. I urge my colleagues to support it.

□ 1250

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I wish to identify our side strongly with the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Alabama. This measure, as the Senator has pointed out, gathered 44 cosponsors when it was passed by voice vote unanimously by the Senate last year. It is an important measure. It is illustrative of the vital work performed by the Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism, which is chaired, of course, by Senator DENTON.

This legislation, in my judgment, adds an important tool to our efforts to protect weapons grade nuclear materials from falling into the wrong hands. It was recognized clearly by the Senate last year. In my judgment, it should be recognized again today. Our side endorses the amendment.

Mr. PELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, this seems like an excellent amendment. There is no amendment to it on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2174) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2175

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR] proposes an amendment numbered 2175.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

On page 124, between lines 9 and 10, insert the following new section:

SEC. 504. MANAGEMENT OF ANTI-TERRORISM ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.

(a) Section 573(d) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 is amended as follows:

Paragraph (4) is amended to read as follows: "(4)(A) Articles on the United States Munitions List may be made available under this chapter only if—

"(i) they are small arms in category I (relating to firearms), ammunition in category III (relating to ammunition) for small arms in category I, articles in category IV(c) or VI(c) (relating to detection and handling of explosive devices), articles in category X (relating to protective personnel equipment), or articles in subsection (b), (c), or (d) of category XIII (relating to speech privacy devices, underwater breathing apparatus and armor plating), and they are directly related to anti-terrorism assistance under this chapter; and

"(ii) at least 15 days before the articles are made available to the foreign country, the President notified the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate of the proposed transfer, in accordance with the procedures applicable to reprogramming notifications pursuant to section 634A of this Act.

"(B) The value (in terms of original acquisition cost) of all equipment and commodities provided under subsection (a) in any fiscal year may not exceed 25 percent of the funds made available to carry out this chapter for that fiscal year.

"(C) No shock batons or similar devices may be provided under this chapter."

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to replace the present $350,000 worldwide cap on equipment and commodities of the Anti-Terrorism Assistance Program with a cap equal to 25 percent of the appropriated amount.

The Anti-Terrorism Assistance Program, enacted into law 3 years ago, has established itself as a valuable addition to our Nation's effort to defend itself and its citizens against terrorist attack.

The program has created valuable links between professionals in our Government with antiterrorism responsibilities and their counterparts overseas. The potential benefits of these contacts must not be underestablished. Should some future incident occur where American lives are endangered overseas, these linkages could expand dramatically the options available to the President in responding.

When enacted, Congress emphasized that the ATA Program was to emphasize training of foreign security forces; it was not to be an equipment transfer program. Congress placed a worldwide cap of $325,000 in equipment and commodities that could be provided under the program.

This amendment retains that emphasis. It removes the $325,000 cap on equipment and commodities and puts in its stead a cap of 25 percent of the total appropriated amount. That means that at a minimum, 75 percent of ATA funds will go for training.

The administration has asked for this change after having had experience with the ATA Program. They have discovered that few benefits derive from training an individual on equipment here in the United States which is then unavailable upon his return home. The problem is especially acute for those countries participating in the program which are experiencing severe financial problems.

As Congress has increased funds for the ATA Program, the $325,000 munitions limit has begun to constrain the training program itself. Several countries have faced immediate needs for airport security programs and have consumed most of the equipment funds. This amendment provides an appropriate ratio of equipment to training without altering Congress' intent that the ATA Program emphasize training.

In addition the amendment expands the categories of equipment which may be provided to include underwater and diving equipment, armor plating and structural materials for defense purposes, and secure communications gear.

It is my hope this amendment will be readily adopted.

Mr. PELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, there is no objection to this amendment on our side. I suggest we proceed to vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2175) was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2176

(Purpose: To make available for use within the United States the United States Information Agency's film "The March")

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR], on behalf of Mr. KERRY, proposes an amendment numbered 2176.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

On page 129, after line 3, add the following new section:

SEC. 702. DISTRIBUTION WITHIN THE UNITED STATES OF THE USIA FILM ENTITLED "THE MARCH".

Notwithstanding section 207 of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1986 and 1987, and the second sentence of section 501 of the United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948 (22 U.S.C. 1461)—

(1) the Director of the United States Information Agency shall make available to the Archivist of the United States a master copy of the film entitled "The March"; and

(2) upon evidence that necessary United States rights and licenses have been secured and paid for by the person seeking domestic release of the film, the Archivist shall reimburse the Director for any expenses of the Agency in making that master copy available, shall deposit that film in the National Archives of the United States, and shall make copies of that film available for purchase and public viewing within the United States.

(b) Any reimbursement to the Director pursuant to this section shall be credited to the applicable appropriation of the United States Information Agency.

On page 91, in the table of contents, after the item relating to Section 701, insert the following new item:

"Sec. 702. Distribution within the United States of the USIA film entitled "The March".

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I am offering this amendment on behalf of Senator KERRY, a distinguished member of the Foreign Relations Committee. It provides that a film entitled "The March" might be shown principally on a television station in Boston, MA. Specific requirement is made under the act that Congress must rule on these exceptions. That is the purpose of the amendment today. On our side, we are prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. PELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, this seems like an excellent amendment and we support its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2176) was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2177

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR] proposes an amendment numbered 2177.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

In the appropriate place in the bill insert the following amendment:

SEC. . (a) In addition to funds otherwise available for such purposes under chapter 8 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, assistance authorized to carry out the purposes of chapter 4 of part II of such Act for the fiscal years 1986 and 1987 (as well as undisbursed balances of previously obligated funds under such part) which are allocated for Egypt may be furnished, notwithstanding section 660 of such Act, for the provision of nonlethal airport security equipment and commodities, and training in the use of such equipment and commodities. The authority contained in this section shall be exercised in coordination with the office of the Department of State rsponsible for administering chapter 8 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961.

(b) This section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, this amendment responds to an urgent request from the Government of Egypt for United States help in increasing security at Cairo Airport.

Airport security in the region is a high priority for the Egyptians and for the United States but the Egyptians do not have the financial resources to upgrade.

The United States Federal Aviation Administration [FAA] is working with the Egyptians to upgrade security and has identified $5 to $9 million in needed equipment and training.

The amendment would permit economic support funds [ESF] already allocated for commodity procurement in Egypt to be used to procure nonlethal airport security equipment such as x-ray machines and bomb disposal equipment, perimeter fencing, vehicles, closed circuit television systems, and so forth.

The procurement needs exceed the funding available under the antiterrorism chapter of the Foreign Assistance Act. The amendment would simply permit utilization of the ESF in Egypt for this purpose.

To ensure coordination of antiterrorism activities, the amendment requires that the procurement of equipment be coordinated with the office in the Department of State responsible for administering the antiterrorism program.

The amendment is Egypt-specific. It does not allow similar use of ESF worldwide. If there are similar needs elsewhere, the administration still must come back to Congress for additional authorization.

I know of no opposition to the amendment on our side. We are prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. PELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, this is an excellent amendment. On behalf of the minority, I suggest its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2177) was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LAUTENBERG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

AMENDMENT NO. 2178

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEVENS). The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG] proposes an amendment numbered 2178.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following section:

SEC. . INTERNATIONAL MEASURES FOR SEAPORT AND SHIPBOARD SECURITY

The Congress encourages the President to continue to seek an agreement through the International Maritime Organization on matters of international seaport and shipboard security, and commends him on his efforts to date. In developing such agreement, each member country of the International Maritime Organization should consult with appropriate private sector interests in that country. Such agreement would establish seaport and vessel security standards and could include—

(1) seaport screening of cargo and baggage similar to that done at airports;

(2) security measures to restrict access to cargo, vessels, and dockside property to authorized personnel only;

(3) additional security on board vessels;

(4) licensing or certification of compliance with appropriate security standards; and

(5) other appropriate measures to prevent unlawful acts against passengers and crews on board vessels.

SEC. . MEASURES TO PREVENT UNLAWFUL ACTS AGAINST PASSENGERS AND CREWS ON BOARD SHIPS.

(a) REPORT ON PROGRESS OF IMO.—The Secretary of Transportation and the Secretary of State, jointly, shall report to the Congress by December 31, 1986, on the progress of the International Maritime Organization in developing recommendations on Measures to Prevent Unlawful Act Against Passengers and Crews on Board Ships.

(b) CONTENT OF REPORT.—The report required by subsection (a) shall include the following information—

(1) the specific areas of agreement and disagreement on the recommendations among the member nations of the International Maritime Organization;

(2) the activities of the Maritime Safety Committee, the Facilitation Committee, and the Legal Committee on the International Maritime Organization in regard to the proposed recommendations; and

(3) the security measures specified in the recommendations.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared on both sides.

This amendment encourages the President to continue to seek an agreement through the International Maritime Organization [IMO] on matters of international seaport and shipboard security. It specifies that such an agreement would establish seaport and vessel security standards, and could include provisions on seaport screening of cargo and baggage, and security measures to restrict access to cargo, vessels, and dockside personnel.

The amendment also requires that the Secretaries of Transportation and State make a detailed, joint report to Congress by December 31, 1986 on the IMO's progress in developing such an agreement. The importance of such an international agreement cannot be overstated.

Mr. President, 1½ million Americans will travel on cruise ships this year, armed with only American passports. As passengers on the Achille Lauro learned, that is not enough. The Achille Lauro hijacking dramatized how vulnerable cruise passengers are to the ruthless tactics of terrorists. Nothing stopped the terrorists from smuggling weapons aboard the Achille Lauro while it was docked at one of its ports of call. No security measures prevented those terrorists from turning hundreds of dream vacations into nightmares. As Viola and Seymour Meskin, constituents of mine from New Jersey, and passengers on the ill-fated Achille Lauro testified before the House Merchant Marine Subcommittee, no one checked their bags or their person at any time before or during the cruise. The Achille Lauro was a floating invitation to terror. And there are more ships like it.

Before the Achille Lauro provides deadly inspiration to other terrorists, security aboard cruise ships must be improved. One life is too many to lose to terrorism.

Fortunately, until now, shipboard terrorism has not been as common as that directed at airlines. But cruise and cargo ships are large, slow moving means of transportation. They make ideal targets for major acts of terrorism and war. Others are undoubtedly watching to see if security improves in the wake of the Achille Lauro incident. It is in the interest of passengers, shipowners, and nations to make ships as secure as possible.

Currently, no Federal or international laws require that security measures be taken to protect ports, vessels, passengers, or crew from incidents of terrorism. Though many cruise ships and ports take such measures voluntarily, many do not. A cruise ship passenger simply cannot rely on the fact that the particular ship he or she boards will be safe.

Passing U.S. laws requiring stricter security on ships, while desirable, must be accompanied by similar action on an international scale. The cruise ship industry in the United States controls only two ships, with a third coming into operation within months. Most cruise ships are foreign-flag and foreign operated. Real improvements in cruise ship security will come only with the adoption of international safety standards. To reach this goal, we need cooperation on an international scale. Such cooperation has already begun at the international level.

The International Maritime Organization [IMO], a U.N. agency whose charter directs it to aid cooperation among governments on matters affecting shipping, has discussed the issue of maritime security at several meetings. IMO's Maritime Safety Committee has begun to draft international safety standards for shipboard security. If such standards are completed by the Maritime Safety Committee, and accepted by all IMO's members, they will go a long way to fulfilling the need for a workable international agreement on seaport security.

An international seaport security agreement will increase safety for the traveling public by requiring that countries observe agreed upon international standards to prevent terrorists from gaining a foothold on cruise and passenger ships. Measures that could be adopted to increase security range from instituting seaport screening of cargo and baggage to requiring additional security on board cruise ships. Other measures could include enacting international criminal sanctions against terrorists who seize or attempt to seize ships.

Cruise passengers, seeking relief from the wear and tear of ordinary international travel in the leisurely pace of a cruise ship would gladly endure some inconvenience in return for peace of mind on their cruise. As Viola and Seymour Meskin testified from firsthand experience, whatever it takes to ensure that cruise passengers are safe would be a great improvement over being hijacked.

Mr. President, the best tribute to the bravery of the Achille Lauro hostages, and to the life of Leon Klinghoffer, is to take strict precautions to assure that their experiences are not repeated. While the United States cannot act alone, we can lead the way. I urge my colleagues to adopt this amendment.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LUGAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, we wish to commend on our side the distinguished Senator from New Jersey for a thoughtful amendment. We are prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. PELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Having been a delegate to the IMO, which was the IMC, Intergovernmental Maritime Commission, I have been following its work through the years. I think it is eminently suited to take on this study and this report. The amendment is excellent. For our side of the aisle I recommend approval.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I thank the managers of the bill for their support. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment (No. 2178) was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SIMON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

AMENDMENT NO. 2179

(Purpose: To urge the Secretary of State to substantially strengthen the foreign language skills of the U.S. Foreign Service)

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON] proposes an amendment numbered 2179.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the resolution, add the following new section:

SEC. . It is the sense of the Senate that the Secretary of State substantially strengthen the foreign language training of foreign service officers and other diplomatic personnel who may serve in embassies overseas, and to work toward early implementation of a program focusing on acquisition and retention of effective linguistic skills throughout a foreign service officer's career.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, this is an amendment I have discussed with the chairman of the committee and the ranking member. I appreciate their cooperation on this.

It is an amendment that stresses the sense of the Senate that we have to strengthen our foreign language expertise in the Foreign Service. We have the only Foreign Service in the world where someone can get into the Foreign Service without speaking a foreign language. And it is costing us in all kinds of ways.

Just recently the diplomatic message the United States intercepted from Libya warning of the attack on the West German discotheque sat untranslated for several days because of the unavailability of someone to translate the telegram from Berber to English. One of the complaints of Yurchenko, the recent defector from the Soviet Union, who went back to the Soviet Union, was there was no one here with whom he could speak in Russian.

We had recently the case of the Ukrainian sailor where we had a language difficulty. At the U.S. Embassy in Pakistan right now, no one speaks Pashto, the language spoken by over 20 million tribesmen in Afghanistan.

At the U.S. Embassy in Manila where we have 1,500 employees, we have only one, the economic attaché, who speaks Tagalog. That happens to be the language spoken by the majority of the people in the area where you have the Communist revolt right now. Totally, in the Foreign Service we have only 30 fully fluent speakers of Arabic, we have only 15 to 16 U.S. Foreign Service officers fully fluent in Chinese, and only 10 Foreign Service officers who are fully fluent in Japanese.

Just recently Monteagle Sterns, former Ambassador to Greece, did an internal examination and report for the State Department. He reported not only do we have a bad situation, but it is getting worse. He makes comparisons with other countries and comparisons that are, frankly, not very helpful to our country. And he says we are hurting ourselves.

□ 1310

I had an amendment adopted on the Foreign Service Act a few years ago which called for the Secretary of State to designate two countries where we would have an experiment, where we would require everyone in those countries, including the secretaries, the Marine guards, AID people, everyone, to speak the language of the country.

Secretary Haig designated Senegal and Uruguay as the two countries.

It is very interesting. We have a report back from the State Department now saying it was an unbelievable success.

Well, it did not surprise some of us. Clearly, we ought to be moving in this direction.

I was pleased to note that the chairman of the committee quoted Bob Inman in his opening remarks. Admiral Inman, when he was still in the Navy, testified before a subcommittee I chaired in the House, in which he said we faced a horrendous problem in foreign language competency in our country.

The head of the CIA has talked about it. Secretary Weinberger has talked about it. Morehead Kennedy, one of the hostages in Iran, testified that of the 52 hostages in Iran, 6 spoke Farsi, the language of the country in which they were stationed. His explanation or one of the reasons for what happened is that he said we were speaking with the elite in English rather than speaking to the people on the street.

Well, we have a problem.

I thought initially about taking some money from this appropriation and having it put directly into this very serious area of concern. After discussing it with the chairman of the committee and having a brief discussion with Senator PELL and Senator SARBANES, I decided, instead, to have this sense-of-the-Senate resolution, which I believe is agreeable. I do want, however, for that to have some muscle.

For that reason, Mr. President, I am going to ask for a rollcall on this particular amendment so that we send the signal to the State Department that we are going to have to change.

Let me just add, this is not a problem for the State Department in isolation. It is a problem in our culture. We are the only nation on the face of the Earth where you can go through grade school, high school, college, get a Ph.D. and never have a year of foreign language. We have to change things.

I hope that the State Department will get a signal from this and that we can start improving things.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is not a sufficient second.

Mr. SIMON. I renew my request for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois has presented an important amendment. It is correct that we have had discussions with the Senator. The success was apparent at the Embassies in Senegal and Uruguay where the experiment was conducted, where their abilities were enhanced and improved.

It appears to me that the sense-of-the-Senate resolution with regard to increasing language capability is well placed. Therefore, we are prepared to accept the amendment. Obviously, the Senator has called for a rollcall vote and the Senate will be heard in a different way.

I would like to ask the distinguished ranking Member to get some indication from his leadership as to the desirability of having that vote at this time. It occurs to me that there are many Members who were not anticipating votes at 1:15, and who are some distance from the floor. I simply add that thought to give staff time to consult the leadership and determine what would appear to be the proper procedure at this stage.

Mr. PELL. I must say I have the same reaction. I know of at least one Senator on this side and others who are downtown attending various functions.

First, I will comment on the amendment and then I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

The amendment to my mind is an excellent amendment. I think it is a disgrace that we are the only Foreign Service in the world where you can enter with just one language, English. I believe very strongly that greater emphasis should be made on foreign language training, particularly on tough languages, as the Senator from Illinois has pointed out.

I do, indeed, support this amendment. I know of no objection to it on our side.

Mr. SIMON. If the Senator will yield, can I ask unanimous consent to stack this vote and have it just before final passage? That would be fine with me.

Mr. LUGAR. The Senator has asked that a rollcall vote on his amendment occur before the rollcall vote on final passage.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1320

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Illinois be set aside until, at the time of 2:15 on this date, the rollcall vote which has been requested will be cast on his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I amend my unanimous-consent request to ask merely that the pending amendment be temporarily set aside. I do so in view of the fact that Members may wish to be informed via the hot lines of both parties before we set the time for the vote. My request is simply that the amendment be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, while the minority leader is present, I should like to make a unanimous-consent request that the vote on the Simon amendment occur at 2 p.m., and that no amendment be permitted to the Simon amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN and Mr. McCONNELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

AMENDMENT NO. 2180

(Purpose: Relating to trade between the United States and the Republic of Korea)

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCONNELL] proposes an amendment numbered 2180.

Mr. McCONNELL. I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. . DENIAL OF BENEFITS UNDER THE GENERALIZED SYSTEM OF PREFERENCES TO THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA.

(a) The Congress finds that——

(1 the exports of the Republic of Korea to the United States have grown at an average annual rate of nearly 16 percent since 1981, United States exports to the Republic of Korea grew at an average annual rate of approximately 3 percent during that period with a decrease of 2 percent in 1985;

(2) in 1985 the United States imported from the Republic of Korea merchandise worth $10,013,085,000, the Republic of Korea only imported merchandise from the United States of a value of $5,720,136,000, resulting in a United States trade deficit of $4,292,949,000;

(3) in 1985 the United States extended to the Republic of Korea preferential treatment under the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) program for certain products it exports to the United States worth $1,655,000,000, making the Republic of Korea the second largest beneficiary under such program;

(4) the Republic of Korea persists in maintaining the following acts, policies, and practices which are unreasonable, unjustifiable, or discriminatory and which burden or restrict United States commerce:

(A) the domestic market of the Republic of Korea is closed to cigarettes made in the United States to the extent that—

(i) it is illegal for citizens of the Republic of Korea to possess cigarettes made outside the Republic of Korea, and

(ii) a citizen of the Republic of Korea possessing foreign cigarettes is subject to a fine of up to $1,161.44, imprisonment, and loss of employment,

(B) the importation into the Republic of Korea of all beef and pork from the United States has been effectively banned since May 1985 even though, prior to the ban, the United States supplied most of the high-quality beef imported into the Republic of Korea,

(C) the Office of National Tax Administration of the Republic of Korea is scheduled to require that all distilled spirit products be manufactured with a minimum proportion of local raw materials after January 1987,

(D) the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries of the Republic of Korea restricts the importation of many United States agricultural items by refusing to grant import approval to those items, including fresh oranges, canned fruit cocktail, grape juice, wine, alfalfa products, edible meat offals, walnuts, fresh grapes, sausages, canned beef and pork, canned peaches, concentrated orange juice, other fruit juices, and canned corn and dried peas,

(E) the issuance of an import license for United States manufactured goods must have the recommendation of the Korean industry association whose members compete with the imported goods, which has an adverse effect on many United States products, including agricultural chemicals, soda ash, automotive parts, cosmetics, nylon carpets, loudspeakers, electric hand tools, razors and razor blades, machine tools, personal computers, electric shavers, cameras, and construction equipment,

(F) the importation of computers and peripheral equipment that can be produced locally has been effectively banned since July 1982, by the requirement of the Republic of Korea that investment or licensing of local production of computers and peripheral equipment be made as a condition for importing computers and peripheral equipment,

(G) tariffs imposed by the Republic of Korea remain unreasonably high on several products in which the United States has a comparative advantage, including—

(i) fresh fruits and vegetables (current tariff is percent ad valorem),

(ii) canned meat (current tariff is 40 percent ad valorem),

(iii) cosmetics (current tariff is 40 percent ad valorem),

(iv) wood products (current tariff is 20 percent ad valorem),

(v) electric hand tools (current tariff is 20 percent ad valorem),

(vi) computers (current tariff is 20 percent ad valorem),

(vii) automobile parts (current tariff is 30 percent ad valorem), and

(viii) chocolate confectionary (current tariff is 40 percent ad valorem, falling to 30 percent ad valorem in 1988),

(H) the application of emergency tariffs, adjustment tariffs, special commodity taxes, and value added tax on top of the general tariff rate, and other fees, make many products prohibitively expensive,

(I) the entire import regime of the Republic of Korea is designed, through the use of import licenses and quotas, to discourage the importation of any seafood, so that the only United States product now entering the Republic of Korea in any volume comes from joint ventures, and much of this is reprocessed in the Republic of Korea and exported,

(J) the Republic of Korea unreasonably restricts the sale of United States fire insurance to only those properties outside of the 10 largest cities in the Republic of Korea, and unreasonably denies licenses to United States firms to write life insurance,

(K) the Republic of Korea unreasonably denies United States banks the ability to participate fully in the domestic financial market, and

(L) the Republic of Korea does not adequately protect intellectual property; and

(5) these unreasonable, unjustifiable, and discriminatory acts, policies, and practices of the Republic of Korea burden or restrict United States commerce.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that the Republic of Korea should not be treated as a beneficiary developing country under title V of the Trade Act of 1974, popularly known as the Generalized System of Preferences, until the unreasonable, unjustifiable, and discriminatory acts, policies, and practices described in subsection (a)(4) are eliminated and import restrictions imposed by the Republic of Korea are liberalized through—

(1) agreement by the Republic of Korea that the purchase and sale of imported cigarettes, and regulation thereof by the Republic of Korea and its instrumentalities, will be conducted on a nondiscriminatory and equitable basis, including repeal of the law which makes it illegal for citizens of the Republic of Korea to use or possess imported tobacco products under threat of fine, imprisonment, or loss of employment;

(2) extension of the ability to import United States tobacco leaf into the Republic of Korea to all private non-Korean entitles;

(3) elimination of the ban on the importation into the Republic of Korea of beef and pork from the United States;

(4) inclusion on the Automatic Approval List of fresh oranges, canned fruit cocktail, grape juice, wine, alfalfa products, edible meat offals, walnuts, fresh grapes, sausages, canned beef and pork, canned peaches, concentrated orange juice, other fruit juices, and canned corn and dried peas;

(5) inclusion on the Automatic Approval List of agricultural chemicals, soda ash, automotive parts, cosmetics, nylon carpets, loudspeakers, electric hand tools, razors and razor blades, machine tools, personal computers, electric shavers, cameras, and construction equipment;

(6) elimination of the ban on the importation of computers and peripheral equipment that can be produced locally;

(7) reduction and binding of the general tariff rates imposed by the Republic of Korea to the levels of protection maintained by average industrialized countries, including, but not limited to, wood, wood products, and dairy commodities;

(8) elimination of the practice of discouraging the importation of seafood into the Republic of Korea;

(9) elimination of the requirement that all distilled spirit products be manufactured with a minimum proportion of local raw materials after January 1987;

(10) elimination of restrictions on the sale of United States fire insurance in the Republic of Korea;

(11) elimination of unreasonable denials of licenses to United States firms to write life insurance; and

(12) extension to United States banks of the ability to participate fully in the financial markets of the Republic of Korea.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, on March 19, I submitted Senate Resolution 369, which if approved, would express the sense of the Senate that the Republic of Korea should not be extended benefits under the generalized system of preferences [GSP] until the unreasonable and unjustifiable trade-related acts, policies, and practices described in the legislation are eliminated. Presently, 13 of my Senate colleagues have cosponsored this resolution: Senators ABDNOR, EAST, FORD, GORE, HEINZ, HELMS, HOLLINGS, SASSER, SYMMS, THURMOND, TRIBLE, WARNER, and WILSON. The resolution is embodied in the amendment that I have sent to the desk today.

I recognize that this initiative is narrow in its focus. By submitting Senate Resolution 369 and offering this amendment, however, I have chosen to isolate what I believe is a particularly important part of the trade debate. Korea is not alone in erecting trade barriers, but it has maintained in some areas especially egregious policies of import protection.

Title V of the Trade Act of 1974 as amended provides the authority to extend preferences and sets forth criteria for country and product eligibility, and for limitations of preferential treatment under GSP. In all GSP determinations, the President is required to take into account several discretionary criteria relating to country practices. Specifically, he is required, among other things, to examine "the extent to which such country has assured the United States it will provide equitable and reasonable access to the markets and basic commodity resources of such country and the extent to which such country has assured the United States that it will refrain from engaging in unreasonable export practices * * *."

Furthermore, the President must consider "the extent to which such country is providing adequate and effective means under its laws for foreign nations to secure, to exercise, and to enforce exclusive rights in intellectual property, including patent, trademarks, and copyrights * * *." He must also consider "the extent to which such country has taken action to reduce distorting investment practices and policies (including export performance requirements); and reduce or eliminate barriers to trade in services."

Mr. President, it was after examining these criteria as applied to the Republic of Korea that I decided to submit Senate Resolution 369, and it is why I offer this amendment today. I am convinced that market access barriers that have been set up by the Republic of Korea to protect its markets require us to seriously consider eliminating duty-free access for Korean products and commodities to our markets. Let me take a couple of minutes to talk about the kind of barriers the Republic of Korea erects.

For example, the importation into the Republic of Korea of all beef and pork from the United States has been effectively banned since May 1985. Prior to the ban, the United States supplied most of the high-quality beef imported into the Republic of Korea. The Office of National Tax Administration of the Republic of Korea is scheduled to require that all distilled spirit products be manufactured with a minimum proportion of local raw materials after January 1987.

The Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries in the republic restricts the importation of many U.S. agricultural items by refusing to grant import approval to those items. Included in the items which are subject to such restraints and are presented from being imported into the Republic of Korea are fresh oranges, canned fruit cocktail, grape juice, wine, alfalfa products, edible meats, walnuts, fresh grapes, canned beef and pork, canned peaches, frozen orange juice concentrate, and on and on. I have a whole list in my amendment of a variety of different American products that are either eliminated altogether from the market or to which are applied such restrictive quotas or such excessive tariffs that they are eliminated from the market.

Obviously, coming from a State that has 150,000 tobacco growers, I am particularly offended by the fact that in Korea, it is illegal for a Korean to possess a foreign cigarette. The Korean Government is not kidding about this. They arrested several Korean people back in 1984. What can happen to you if you have a foreign cigarette on your person? A Korean found with a foreign cigarette on his person is subject to a fine up to $1,161.44, imprisonment, and loss of employment. I call that rather serious protectionism.

The tobacco growers in Kentucky cannot understand why, in a country where many of them fought side by side to protect South Korea from the Communist invasion from the north, it is illegal to possess American cigarettes into which the tobacco they grow is placed.

After I submitted this resolution, with the support of all the Senators referred to earlier, I had a number of discussions with the various Korean officials in this country for a couple of months prior to my visit to Korea over the Memorial Day recess. I want to relate to my colleagues my experience upon my visit to Korea during that period.

The Koreans could not have been nicer. I met with their equivalent of our Secretary of State, their equivalent of our Secretary of Commerce, their equivalent of our Federal Trade Representative, and with the President of Korea, Chun Doo Hwan, for 45 minutes privately at the Blue House. During all of those discussions and most specifically during the discussion with President Chun, the following commitment was made: No. 1, that the Korean National Assembly, during its extraordinary session, which just ended yesterday, was to pass a bill which would begin to change the way the Republic of Korea handles imported cigarettes.

The bill which was to have passed during the extraordinary session would have begun to change the Korean ginseng and tobacco monopoly from a government agency into a corporation. This first step on the part of the Korean Government would have taken some courage. They have 30,000 employees in their tobacco and ginseng monopoly, Mr. President, larger than the State of Kentucky government. It was, of course, a move that would have been somewhat unsettling to those Korean employees of the Government. Nevertheless, President Chun, whose party controls the National Assembly, assured me that that step would be taken during the extraordinary session.

The extraordinary session ended yesterday and the step was not taken. The President's party does control the National Assembly. While I understand and realize the political difficulties in taking that first step toward liberalizing the market, it seems to me clearly evident that this commitment was not kept.

No. 2, the second commitment made by the President was that in the regular session of the National Assembly this fall, Korea would pass a bill decriminalizing the possession of foreign cigarettes. I am now told that both steps will be taken in the regular session this fall. But I might say, Mr. President, I am quite impatient and I know other Members of the Senate from States which have commodities that are effectively shut out of the Korean market are growing equally impatient. Word was given that this step would be taken during the extraordinary session and it was not taken.

Mr. President, I offer the amendment today, even though I do not intend to press for its adoption or for a vote, because I think it is appropriate to bring up at this time the failure to honor this commitment on behalf of the Korean Government. I shall not, as I have assured the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, press for a vote. I do think this is a matter that should come before the Senate this year. It is my understanding, from various observations that the majority leader has made, that some kind of trade legislation will be before the Senate, likely this summer. I shall indicate to him and I indicate to my colleagues today that I intend to offer this sense-of-the-Senate resolution as an amendment to appropriate trade legislation when it comes before the Senate, we hope this summer.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I have listened carefully to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky. He makes a very important point about conversations with the Government of South Korea. Let me indicate to the distinguished Senator, it is my understanding that many Senators, led by, of course, the majority leader, have expressed a serious interest in trade legislation. Indeed, a comprehensive bill was introduced with the cosponsorship of many committee chairmen last year. That bill still remains a working vehicle in the judgment of this Senator. My guess is that there are many Senators who would want to be heard, if they were in my stead presently, indicating a very considerable interest in the expression by the Senate on these issues, one of which the distinguished Senator from Kentucky has raised very specifically this afternoon. I appreciate the Senator's willingness to revisit this issue on another piece of legislation on another day but, likewise, the very explicit facts that he has brought to the attention of the Senate that clearly will be a part of the conversation as we look at overall trade legislation.

Mr. McCONNELL. If the Senator will yield, I must repeat my particular exasperation with receiving two specific commitments on this trip—two very specific commitments. Unlike a lot of the experiences that many of us have had abroad in trying to tie down an exact time after which a certain step was to be taken, I was told by officials in the Korean Government, unlike other governments in that area of the world, specific commitments would be made, A, and B, specific commitments would be kept. Two specific commitments were made, the first to be kept during the extraordinary session of the National Assembly that ended yesterday and that commitment was not kept. So I think it is a matter of grave concern to all of us who are looking for market access abroad. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee for his observations and, Mr. President, I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT NO. 2181

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate that funding of Kurt Waldheim's retirement allowance from the United Nations should be eliminated)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair notifies the Senator from New York that it would take unanimous consent to set aside the Simon amendment.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I thank the Chair for its courtesy. I ask unanimous consent that the Simon amendment be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] proposes an amendment numbered 2181.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) Since Kurt Waldheim has lied repeatedly about his past, particularly his service as intelligence officer for convicted war criminal General Alexander Lohr;

(2) Since such mendacity enabled Kurt Waldheim to rise to the position of Secretary General of the United Nations;

(3) Since Kurt Waldheim currently receives $81,650 a year as a retirement allowance for his service in that position; and

(4) Since the allowance rewards him for having lied about matters that are at the very heart of the existence and purposes of the United Nations.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that the President should instruct the Permanent Representative of the United States to the United Nations to introduce in the General Assembly—

(1) an amendment to the 1986-1987 United Nations Regular Program Budget eliminating funding of Kurt Waldheim's retirement allowance; and

(2) a resolution denying Kurt Waldheim a retirement allowance in all budgets after 1987.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, this amendment can be stated in very compact terms. It has to do with the pension allowance which is provided each year in the budget of the General Assembly for Mr. Kurt Waldheim in respect of his 10-year service as Secretary General. This amount is $81,650 a year. It is not a pension. There is no pension fund. It is, rather, an appropriation in lieu of a pension and is entirely optional with the General Assembly.

Mr. President, I do not think it necessary to rehearse here on the Senate floor the very painful and damaging details of the past history of Mr. Waldheim that we have learned in the course of this year's campaign for the Presidency of Austria in which he was a candidate, ultimately the successful one, and during which these facts came out.

Let me suggest that as the Senate acts in this measure—and I am sure that it will wish to do—we make a narrow statement of the facts dealing only with measures that can be fully established from the record but which in our view are sufficient to merit this action. The facts to which I refer are elemental and indeed there is only one important fact, which was that in all of his representations to the Western World, in his autobiography, in his official biographies, his public statements, Mr. Waldheim always represented that he was a member of the German Armed Forces, the German infantry—and in that time Austria was a part of Germany—that he fought for a period in the Eastern front, that is to say, in the Soviet Union, that he was wounded in the leg and returned in 1942 in most narrations and in effect left military service and resumed his law studies.

Mr. President, it is painful to say this, but this is a lie, a lie now admitted, a lie no longer in any dispute, but a lie that was not of just an ordinary misrepresentation of the past; rather, a misrepresentation that went to the very heart of the purposes and origins of the United Nations, for the fact is that Mr. Waldheim, after recovering, returned to military service and was actively involved on the staff of a war criminal, Gen. Alexander Lohr, who was executed for war crimes involving the Balkan region in 1943-44. It was he who ordered the expulsion, the deportation, if you like, of the Jewish community of Salonika, one of the oldest Jewish Sephardic communities of the Mediterranean, almost to the last child rounded up and deported to be destroyed, to be murdered at Auschwitz as an act of sheer madness.

It was Lohr who carried out, for a ruthless time, the extraordinary barbarous treatment of civilians in the guerrilla war that the Yugoslavian partisans and various groups undertook in response to the German invasion of that country. In all these matters, Mr. Waldheim was on hand. He was an intelligence officer. He was a translator. These are all his own admission. And they could even at this distance of time with enough openness, honesty, contrition, I think, be understood and accepted. This was the experience of many persons of that time and not everyone had their fate under their own control. But if you consider that the United Nations was formed in an alliance against Nazi Germany and its declarations of human rights, international law, are so fundamentally directed to putting an end to exactly those things in which Mr. Waldheim participated, for him to have concealed those facts is unjustifiable, is unforgivable, and has done the United Nations damage which will be a very long while before it becomes a matter of the past, and from which the institution has recovered, if indeed it does recover.

Some day, on this floor, we are going to have to talk about the process by which the United States involves itself in the selection of the Secretary General. But suffice it to say at this point that had Mr. Waldheim's past been known, it is very unlikely he ever would have been chosen. In my mind it is not possible that Mr. Waldheim would have been chosen Secretary General had this aspect of his past been known.

It happens that I was present on the evening, the early hours of the day, on which the choice was made. The United States had supported a distinguished diplomat, Mas Jakobson of Finland, who was unacceptable to the Soviet Union for the very reason of his distinctions. Other candidates were put in nomination. In the end, Mr. Waldheim was chosen, with obviously very little attention on our part to any background we might have needed to know. He was then the permanent representative of the Government of Austria. We had reason to take some things as given, but clearly we will not have that reason in the future.

In any event, had it ever developed in the course of his first term that he had in fact concealed this information the way he did, he would never have been nominated for a second term. Certainly the United States would have vetoed it. I was the permanent representative at the time the decision was made that we would support him for a second term, and I can speak with a degree of certainty that had this concealed past been known, there would have been no such second term.

So the question is now, What can we do? Well, we cannot undo the history of 10 years of this man as Secretary General, but we can cease to reward him for those 10 years of deception—and we know not what else.

It is the practice each year for the General Assembly to appropriate $81,650 as a payment in lieu of pension—in place of pension. It seems to me that this need no longer be done. Dr. Waldheim is President of Austria. He is well provided with the amenities and allowances and salary that go with that position. He has other resources as well from his past in the foreign ministry. We need not concern ourselves that he may become destitute as a consequence of our action. Our action gives our Government the first opportunity to state that it does not like what happened and wishes, by formal action, to declare its dismay and possibly to indicate its resolve that such an event will not happen again.

Mr. President, the amendment simply asks our President to instruct the permanent representative to offer an amendment striking this retirement allowance for the current year and for future years. I cannot doubt that this would be welcomed in the executive branch and in the Department of State as a measure of supporting what I cannot but suppose is the wish of the administration. It may be that they are not aware of this payment. All the better, then, that we could put them on notice and give them the opportunity and the right to say that the U.S. Senate supports them in this matter and, indeed, has urged it upon them.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, it is always important to listen to the distinguished Senator from New York as he speaks about the United Nations. I know that I speak for all Senators in the admiration we have for his distinguished service on behalf of our country at the United Nations. It is of historical interest, as the Senator has pointed out, that he was present at the time that Mr. Waldheim came into the office that is being discussed.

I have no indication from the administration or the Department of State with regard to their feelings on the amendment. It is a new subject that has come to the attention of the managers of the bill today. At the same time, we have read the amendment carefully. It does express the sense of this body that the President of the United States ought to instruct our permanent representative with regard to the Waldheim pension. It seems to me to be a sensible and reasonable proposition, and we are prepared on this side of the aisle to accept the amendment.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I think the amendment of the Senator from New York probably expresses the chagrin of many of us for the behavior and the actions and the lack of fullness in telling the truth of the Secretary General.

We are aware of the good he did when he was Secretary General; conscious of the fact that his wife, who joined the Nazi Party as a young woman of 19, was persuaded by Secretary General Waldheim 2 or 3 years later, as a condition of their marriage, to get out of the Nazi Party.

So it is not all black and white here. But I do think that, on balance, the Senator from New York has raised some very valid points. There is no question that if the United Nations had been aware of the wartime record and service of Mr. Waldheim, he would not have been rewarded with the Secretary Generalship of the United Nations.

For that reason, I say there is no objection to this amendment on our side of the aisle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2181) was agreed to.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agred to.

Mr. LUGAR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished friends, the chairman and ranking minority member of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

AMENDMENT NO. 2182

(Purpose: To authorize a study of the feasibility of a program for the control and eradication of amblyomma variegatum (heartwater), in bovins animals in the Caribbean and for a program to control and eradicate amblyomma variegatum in countries in the Caribbean)

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Florida that the amendment of the Senator from Illinois would have to be temporarily set aside in order to consider the Senator's amendment and the Chair will also indicate to the Senator from Florida that the time of 2 o'clock has been established for voting on that amendment.

Does the Senator wish to set aside the amendment temporarily?

Mrs. HAWKINS. The Senator does wish to set the amendment aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is set aside temporarily.

The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS] for herself and Mr. MATTINGLY, proposes an amendment numbered 2182.

At the appropriate place insert the following:

(a) Section 103 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 is hereby amended—

(1) by adding the following paragraph after paragraph (a)(2):

(3) Of the funds authorized to be appropriated in paragraph (2) of this subsection, $150,000 for the fiscal year 1986 shall be available only for a study of the feasibility of a program for the control and eradication of amblyomma variegatum (heartwater) in bovine animals in the Caribbean, to be completed within 180 days from the date of enactment of this Act. Of the funds authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1987, not less than $4,000,000 shall be available only for the purpose of controlling and eradicating amblyomma variegatum in these countries.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment to deal with an emergency situation that has arisen in the Caribbean. There has been identification of heartwater, known by its scientific name amblyomma vaniegatum, in several islands in the Caribbean.

This is a disease which has been unknown in this hemisphere until recently when it seems to have been transmitted from Africa to certain countries in the Caribbean.

There is reason to fear that this disease could be further transmitted to the southern, warmer regions of the United States where it could cause severe economic hardship on the cattle industry of this country. It could even be transmitted to the northern part of the country.

Agriculture, especially livestock raising, is an important element in the development of all the countries of this region. The disease transmitted is fatal. It can be transmitted by birds and wildlife, as well as bovine animals. There is no way these countries will be developed unless we show our concern for their agricultural industries.

This is an opportunity to help the countries of the region, and protect an important American industry, simultaneously. I hope the managers of the bill will be willing to accept the amendment. It is a small amount of money, but an amount that will be well invested.

We know that heartwater is present in the Caribbean. We cannot afford to have it spread into the United States. Florida could very well be the gateway and we cannot let that happen. The cattle industry in Florida is a $350 million a year business that is directly threatened by the possible spread of this disease.

This is a major type of amendment. We have been working on this problem since March 1986. This benefits the entire United States. A study that we do in our State is solving a problem throughout the United States and one wonderful thing about this particular amendment is it is a study to be done in 180 days so we will have a solution to this problem.

I unerstand it has been cleared on both sides of the aisle.

I thank both sides of the aisle for giving it immediate consideration, since it is a major matter.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I believe we are prepared to accept the amendment on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the Senator's amendment? The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2182) was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I inquire of the managers of the bill since there is a vote scheduled for 2 o'clock. I have four very small amendments. They have been cleared on both sides. Will the managers agree that we might go forward at this time by asking the pending amendment be set aside?

Mr. LUGAR. Yes.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be laid aside for the purpose of considering en bloc four amendments that have been accepted by both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2183

(Purpose: To reduce the dollar threshold on contracts for which only U.S. contractors may bid)

(Purpose: To narrow the provision authorizing the Secretary of State to waive the requirement that U.S. contractors be used)

(Purpose: To permit more United States persons to bid on contracts)

(Purpose: To require that 10 percent of the contracts, to the extent practicable, be amended to small businesses)

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk four amendments which I ask to be considered en bloc and ask for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] proposes an amendment en bloc numbered 2183.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 109, line 4, strike "$5,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$500,000 or which involves physical or technical security".

On page 109, line 7, beginning with "laws" strike all through line 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"statutes which prohibit the use of United States contractors on such projects. The exception contained in this subsection shall only become effective with respect to a foreign country 30 days after the Secretary of State certifies to the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, the House Committee on Appropriations, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations what specific actions he has taken to urge such foreign country to permit the use of United States contractors on such projects, and what actions he shall take with respect to that country as authorized by the Foreign Missions Act.".

On page 110, line 4, strike "5" and insert in lieu thereof "2".

On page 110, beginning on line 12, strike all through line 15.

On page 110, strike "(F)" and "(G)" where they appear and insert in lieu thereof "(E)" and "(F)", respectively.

On page 111, line 8, strike "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(e) AMERICAN SMALL BUSINESS CONTRACTORS.—Not less than 10 percent of the amount appropriated pursuant to section 401(a) for diplomatic construction projects each fiscal year shall be allocated to the extent practicable for contracts with American small business contractors. Contracts awarded pursuant to subsection (d) of this section shall not be considered in determining compliance with this subsection.

"(f)".

THRESHOLD FOR "BUY AMERICAN" PROVISION

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President. The committee bill indicates that only U.S. contractors may bid on diplomatic construction or design projects with total project values exceeding $5,000,000. The effect is to open those projects valued at less than $5,000,000 to foreign competition, in effect often denying projects to American firms.

An ironic effect of the committee bill is to provide a "Buy American" preference for the larger projects likely to be bid on by large companies, while denying such preference for those projects more likely to be bid on by small business.

My amendment solves this problem by reducing from $5,000,000 to $500,000 the level at which foreign contractors may compete for projects involved in this diplomatic security enhancement program. In addition, it provides that only U.S. firms may compete on any projects involving physical or technical security.

FOREIGN PROHIBITIONS ON U.S. CONTRACTORS

Mr. President, the committee bill permits the Secretary of State to waive the preference for U.S. contractors when the foreign country has laws or policies which prohibit the use of U.S. firms, provided he notifies Congress of his intent to do so.

My amendment strengthens that by limiting the Secretary's authority to waive in situations where the foreign country has statutes precluding U.S. firms from competing. The amendment also requires the Secretary to report to the appropriation congressional committees on what retaliatory action, if any, he is proposing to take under the Foreign Missions Act.

The fact of the matter is that U.S. Embassies and consulates overseas are legally a part of the United States. No foreign country should be allowed with impunity to dictate to our Government who we may or may not use to build or improve the security of our diplomatic facilities.

MAKING IT POSSIBLE FOR MORE FIRMS TO COMPETE

Mr. President, the third amendment addresses provisions which effectively preclude many firms, especially smaller businesses, and any new companies from bidding on these projects.

The committee, in what I believe was an effort to try control quality, limited eligible contractors to companies who had been in business for at least 5 years and which had achieved a certain level of business volume. However, many of the companies involved in physical and technical security equipments and installations are evolving companies resulting from the recent upsurge in worldwide terrorism. The committee provision has the effect of precluding many of these newer companies from competing for contracts under this program. With less competition, the taxpayer will end up paying more.

My amendment solves the problem by reducing the 5 year requirement to 2 years and striking the business volume threshold.

SMALL BUSINESS SETASIDE

Mr. President, the fourth amendment establishes a setaside for small businesses, and now I quote from the amendment, "to the extent practicable."

The fact of the matter is that the State Department has a history of preferring to deal with a small number of favored suppliers for goods and services. Small businesses around the country who are not in favor find it almost impossible to successfully bid on State Department work.

My amendment attempts to address this problem by ensuring small businesses a percentage of the available work. At the same time, it provides the State Department with the flexibility to waive these provisions when absolutely necessary.

I might note that I expect the State Department to have good explanations if they fail to meet this requirement. As chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee with jurisdiction over their budget, I intend to monitor their implementation of this provision carefully.

Mr. President, a very brief explanation.

As the committee bill is presently written, I believe that American companies will in general, have more difficulty in competing for contracts on the smaller projects.

Accordingly, these four amendments deal with enhancing the opportunities for American firms to do the kind of construction that we are talking about in support of the diplomatic security initiative that this Congress is going to fund at a very high level this year. These amendments will enhance the opportunity of American companies, both large and small, to do that work.

It is also the purpose of one of these amendments to ensure that only American companies will compete for projects involving physical or technical security.

I believe that fairly describes the amendments, which have been cleared on both sides.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, my distinguished colleague, the Senator from New Hampshire, has proposed four amendments which will assure further participation by American small business in the Diplomatic Security Program

One of the most important objectives the Foreign Relations Committee had in drafting the amended version of H.R. 4151 was to see that American companies were involved in the program both for the economic benefit as well as the additional security it afforded the program.

The Senator's amendment certainly helps reach that objective.

I support the amendment on our side of the aisle and I am prepared to accept all four.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, these are four excellent amendments.

Coming from the State where I do, where small business is really a great deal of all our business, I am glad indeed to recommend the passage of these amendments and commend the Senator from New Hampshire for having proposed them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment (No. 2183) was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, let me express my appreciation to the chairman and ranking minority member of the Foreign Relations Committee and their staff working with us and working out these amendments and allowing us to present them at this time.

I am sure the small business community of America does appreciate that.

Mr. LUGAR. I thank the Senator.

AMENDMENT NO. 2179

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUDMAN). Under the previous order, the hour of 2 p.m. having arrived, the vote will now occur on the Simon amendment.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON: I announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PRESSLER). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 99, nays 0, as follows:

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be temporarily set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2184

(Purpose: To provide for forfeiture of proceeds derived from espionage activities, and for other purposes)

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS], for himself, Mr. DENTON, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. BOREN, Mr. LAXALT, Mr. ZORINSKY, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. MATTINGLY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. ANDREWS, and Mr. LUGAR proposes an amendment numbered 2184.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following: Section 794 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(d)(1) Any person convicted of a violation of this section or of any other felony in violation of the provisions of this chapter shall forfeit to the United States, irrespective of any provision of State law—

(A) any property constituting, or derived from, any proceeds the person obtained, directly or indirectly, as the result of such violation; and

(B) any of the person's property used, or intended to be used, in any manner or part, to commit, or to facilitate the commission of, such violation.

"(2) The court, in imposing sentence on a defendant for a conviction of a violation of this section or of any other felony in violation of this chapter, shall order that the defendant forfeit to the United States all property described in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(3) The provisions of subsections (b), (c) and (e) through (o) of section 413 of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (21 U.S.C. 853 (b), (c), and (e)-(o)) shall apply to—

"(A) property subject to forfeiture under this subsection;

"(B) any seizure or disposition of such property; and

"(C) any administrative or judicial proceeding in relation to such property, if not inconsistent with this subsection.

"(4) Upon motion of the United States attorney made at any time after conviction of a person at a trial conducted under chapter 47 of title 10 with respect to convictions under sections 904 (article 104), 906 (article 106), 906a (article 106a), and for convictions under section 934 (article 134) that incorporate provisons of this chapter, a court of competent jurisdiction shall, if the court determines that the interest of justice so requires, order such person to forfeit to the United States all property described in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(e)(1) Upon the motion of the United States attorney made at any time after conviction of a defendant for a violation of this section, for any other felony in violation of this chapter, or for an offense described in subsection (d)(4) of this section, and after notice to any interested party, the court shall, if the court determines that the interest of justice so requires, order such defendant to forfeit to the United States all or any part of proceeds received or to be received by that defendant, or by a transferee or that defendant, from a contract relating to the depiction of such offense in a movie, book, newspaper, magazine, radio or television production, or live entertainment or presentation of any kind, or from a contract relating to an expression of the convicted person's thoughts, opinions, or emotions regarding such crime.

"(2) An order issued under this subsection shall require that the party with whom the defendant contracts pay to the Attorney General any proceeds due the defendant under such a contract.

"(3) Proceeds paid to the Attorney General under this subsection shall be paid into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

"(4) As used in this subsection, the term 'interested party' includes the defendant, any transferee of proceeds due the defendant under the contract referred to in paragrpah (1), and the person with whom the defendant has contracted.

"(f)(1) The Attorney General of the United States, at his discretion, is authorized to pay an amount not to exceed $100,000 as a reward for information—

"(A) leading to the arrest or conviction of any person for—

"(i) the commission of a felony in violation of this chapter or for a conspiracy or attempt to commit such an offense; or

"(ii) an offense described in subsection (d)(4) of this section, or for a conspiracy or attempt to commit such an offense; or

"(B) leading to the prevention, frustration, or mitigation of the effect of a felony in violation of this chapter or of an offense described in subsection (d)(4) of this section.

"(2) The Attorney General or the designeee of the Attorney General shall determine whether an individual furnishing information described in paragraph (1) is entitled to a reward under this section and the amount to be paid, except that the authority to pay a reward of $10,000 or more shall not be delegated to any person other than the Deputy Attorney General, the Associate Attorney General, or the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. A determination made by the Attorney General or the designee of the Attorney General under this subsection shall be final and conclusive, and no court shall have jurisdiction or power to review such determination.

"(3) No officer, employee, or member of the Armed Forces of the United States or of any governmental entity who, while in the performance of his or her official duties, furnishes the informaton described in paragraph (1) shall be eligible for any monetary reward under this subsection, except that a person who acts with official approval as an undercover source or informant, when it is not a part of that person's normal official duties to do so, may be eligible for such a reward.

"(4) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary for the payment of rewards under this subsection except that no funds may be appropriated for this purpose prior to fiscal year 1987.".

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the amendment I present to the Senate addresses what I consider to be a serious problem that faces our Nation, the question and the problem surrounding espionage.

I introduced S. 1654 on September 17 of last year to attempt to respond to that problem and that bill was pending before the Judiciary Committee for some time. It is now before us.

I offer this amendment on my behalf and also Senator DENTON, who worked very hard to get the bill out of the Judiciary Committee, as well as Senators LEAHY, MURKOWSKI, D'AMATO, BOREN, LAXALT, ZORINSKY, THURMOND, MCCONNELL, LEVIN, ANDREWS, MATTINGLY, ARMSTRONG, and DURENBERGER.

There are at least 41 cosponsors to the basic bill. Unfortunately I have been unable to contact all of them before today so I ask unanimous consent the remainder of the list be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senators Domenici, Heinz, Simpson, Glenn, Nunn, Hatch, Chiles, East, Chafee, Gorton, Kasten, Rudman, Goldwater, Garn, Bumpers, Byrd, Boschwitz, Exon, Nickles, Hawkins, Roth, Gore, Abdnor, Grassley, Quayle, and Symms.

Mr. STEVENS. This legislation, Mr. President, is not too complicated. It addresses the problem of spies, spies who have been selling information concerning the security of our country and have been profiting from that action.

It would deny spies the proceeds of the sale of the information. It would deny spies any royalties from the sale of any story pertaining to their activities, and it would allow rewards for those who turn in information which leads to the apprehension of spies.

By taking away the proceeds of espionage and confiscating property used to commit espionage, we will not just be punishing those convicted of espionage; we will make them think twice about entering into the career of spying for profit.

I believe that we can make it harder for people to get their hands on information of this type. We can try to improve detection methods and we will take various steps to increase security.

However, until we take away the motivation which has been present, that is the financial aspects of spying, we will not be able to stop what has been going on.

Our real job, I think, is to let everyone know that no one in this country will be allowed to profit from espionage.

This legislation will allow the confiscation of any of the proceeds of the sale of the spy story, that is of the spy himself or herself.

The public, I think, has a fascination with spies and espionage but infamy should not be the foundation for a public career or for financial success.

I really believe that it is time for us to act to prevent this type of situation from developing in our country. It is a growing threat to our national security.

Since 1945 there have been 65 prosecutions relating to espionage. Since 1982 the FBI has arrested 25 individuals for espionage; 18 have been convicted and six cases are still pending. This 4-year total is the highest rate for arrest and convictions for espionage charges since World War II. I think the figures speak for themselves.

The lure of money is taking people into espionage. It is attracting too many people and this prime motivation is sheer greed.

Law enforcement officials responsible for investigating espionage cases recognize the common denominator in these cases has become the search for profit. To quote Bill Baker, assistant director of the FBI, "It says in the KGB manual, 'Americans can be bought.'"

We are all aware of the Walker family spy case. We are actually fortunate that John and Michael Walker reached a plea bargaining agreement. This gives us the opportunity to answer questions about just how serious the damage done by the Walkers has been. The Walkers, however, are not alone in their infamy—by any stretch of the imagination. They have been joined in the headlines recently by Ronald Pelton and the Pollards.

There have been several serious cases in the last few years. The problem of U.S. citizens selling off national security information is best illustrated by a few examples.

Joseph Helmich was arrested on July 15, 1981, on charges of selling top secret information about a cryptographic system to Soviet agents. He was awarded the honorary rank of Colonel in the Soviet Army, and received $131,000.

David Barnett, a former member of the CIA's Directorate of Operations, pleaded guilty on October 29, 1980, to a charge of selling classified information on CIA operations to the Soviet Union. He admitted to receiving $92,600 for this information, and may have been paid an additional amount to try and secure a staff position with the Senate or House Intelligence Committees.

William Bell, a former employee of Hughes Aircraft Corp., was arrested on June 28, 1981. He was charged with espionage in connection with the sale of documents to the Polish intelligence service, for which he received approximately $110,000.

James D. Harper was arrested October 15, 1983, for selling missile data to a Polish agent. Harper reportedly was paid over $250,000. He pleaded guilty to one count of espionage, and was sentenced to life imprisonment on May 14, 1984.

In this sampling—which is far from exhaustive—there is a common factor which dominates each case. These individuals were paid fairly large sums for classified information. Each of them exchanged a portion of our national security for their personal gain.

We all recognize that it is time for Congress to do something about what has become a pervasive problem. This is by no means the only response I expect us to make to espionage. However, I believe this to be a major step in the right direction. If we discourage individuals from selling information we remove the incentive to commit espionage. I propose that we use the profit motive against these perpetrators. This legislation would confiscate the proceeds of espionage activity, and turn the tables on spies by paying those who provide information on their activities.

The tool we would create with this legislation to fight espionage is very similar to one available to drug enforcement agents. This is very appropriate, since the motivation to commit espionage and to deal in drugs is very similar. In both cases, the perpetrator cares little for the consequences of his actions. The reason for being in the business is to make money—at any cost, no questions asked. It is an embarrassment to our society.

It is now apparent that one of the best ways to strike at drug dealers is by taking away the profits of their business. Even though spies are inspired by a similar desire, the amounts of money we are talking about are decidely smaller. At the same time, the harm being done is much greater. Drug use is a plague in this country, but espionage threatens the nation's survival.

Taken as a package, I believe this proposal provides a fairly complete response to the prime motivation of espionage. It is carefully drafted so that it affects only those convicted of espionage felonies. The power to grant rewards is carefully limited to avoid abuse and excess. This is a good piece of legislation—one that demands action now. To put it off any longer could doom this proposal as time runs short later this year.

In my judgment, it is time for Congress to do something about this problem. I think the Senate knows that I have other legislation pending which I think is sort of old fashioned, but I believe spies just ought to be shot. As a matter of fact, the Senator from Arizona told me just now he thinks they ought to be hung using a loose rope.

I do not think there is anything about our system in the United States today that infuriates me as much as the increasing tendency of Americans to spy on their own Government and to do so because of the motivation of profit.

It is time for us to take a major step to discourage individuals from selling information, and if we do so, I think we will take action to remove the incentive to commit the espionage in the first place.

As I said, this amendment would confiscate the proceeds of espionage activities and turn the table on those who spy against their own country by paying individuals who provide information on the spying activities. The tool we would create with this legislation to fight espionage is very similar to that we are using in the drug enforcement area.

I think the Senate is well aware of that.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. I appreciate my colleague yielding and I am proud to join him in this effort because of all the kinds of heinous acts against our people, the selling out of our Nation's secrets for profit is perhaps the worst.

You can talk about ideology, you can talk about people who disagree with what is going on within the Government, you can talk about general spying. They are all bad enough. But spying for pay for those 40 pieces of silver has absolutely no place, Mr. President, in this society of ours. Spying for profit, selling out your friends, your family, your neighbors, for a few dollars is the worst, the most treasonable act anyone can engage in against our people.

I would hope that we would be able to put this kind of stiff regulation in wherein we would confiscate any of the profit, any of the profit from writing the books or taking part in a movie later on, celebrating this great spy case or whatever it might be. Not only that, but I am totally inclined to go along with my colleague when he quotes our colleague from Arizona in saying, "These are the kinds of people who ought to be shot because there is absolutely no justification for spying, for espionage, for profit."

I applaud my colleague for introducing this amendment. We cosponsored the legislation. It would be my hope that the leaders of the debate of this bill will accept this amendment because it is long overdue.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from North Dakota. He has been in the forefront of those who have tried the assist to work out this legislation. I think we should mention Senator DENTON, who has worked very hard to see to it that the legislation be brought to the floor.

There is no question about it that we are now dealing with a different phenomenon in our country with this increased activity of espionage for money.

I have introduced legislation to make certain that that kind of activity, espionage for profit against our own Government, is considered treason.

□ 1430

I consider it to be treason and I think the country believes it is treason. This amendment has been carefully drafted. It does not affect those people who go out and study the activities of a convicted spy and present to the country the story of that type of activity. What it does is prevent the person who is convicted of espionage from profiting from the act and forfeit whatever that person received in connection with the espionage activity.

There is no reason to allow them to keep their ill-gotten gains and there is no reason to allow them to sell for any purpose the story of their actions.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will adopt this amendment. It is time for us to take this action, particularly in view of the number of cases that are pending right now in which substantial sums will be retained by those who have been involved if Congress does not act.

● Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, as a member of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence I am acutely aware of the problem of espionage against the United States. Soviet bloc intelligence services spare no effort or expense in a relentless effort to steal scientific, technical, and defense secrets from the West. A single technical document can save Moscow years and hundreds of millions of dollars in research and development. Super-sophisticated U.S. intelligence systems, upon which our security depends, can be compromised in a few minutes by a traitor with special knowledge. Any reader of the newspaper in recent weeks knows these are not hypothetical possibilities; they are case histories.

We have seen the emergence of a new breed of spy, unscrupulous mercenaries willing to sell out their country for cash. Spying has become a lucrative business. Men like Walker and Whitworth apparently received hundreds of thousands of dollars for the information they provided. Walker, now that he has been caught, has embarked on a new money-making scheme to sell his story to a publisher. The more notorious the author, the fatter the royalties.

Why should espionage pay? It should not, and passage of the amendment will make sure it does not. It is time to make it abundantly clear that there will be no opportunity for the Walkers and their ilk to keep their ill gotten gains. Espionage is not fun and games. Anyone contemplating spying against this country must know that there will be no pot of gold at the end of the rainbow—only a very long stay in prison.

Mr. President, the amendment offered by Senator STEVENS is right on point. It prevents spies from taking advantage of their illegal activities, and says that spies cannot profit by receiving financial rewards from book royalties, movie rights, and similar arrangements. Clearly, Mr. President, the Senate must say loud and clear that spies cannot become "media stars" from their illegal activities. I urge my colleagues to support this important amendment.●

● Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS) which incorporates the substance of S. 1654. The original bill, which was unanimously approved by the Judiciary Committee on June 12, 1986, will amend title 18 U.S.C. to provide for criminal forfeiture of proceeds derived from espionage activities and rewards for informations providing information leading to arrests in espionage cases. I commend Senator STEVENS for his leadership in this area and I am only too happy to join as an original cosponsor of this amendment.

Mr. President, recent events surrounding the Walker and other espionage cases have made it abundantly clear that the threat of espionage is real and pervasive. The Soviet Union, its client-states, and other hostile countries have a massive effort underway in this country to amass large amounts of material about our military secrets and technology.

The foreign intelligence-gathering in the United States has caused untold damage to our national security. The technological lead enjoyed by the United States in certain defense-related areas has been seriously eroded by the foreign success in obtaining classified scientific and technical information. In addition, spying has cost our country billings of dollars in stolen technology and military secrets. To reverse the trend, we must remove the financial incentive for those persons who would assist these foreign spies by engaging in espionage activity.

This amendment will remove the financial incentive and will aid in the battle against espionage. The amendment contains three separate provisions.

First, it requires that convicted spies forfeit all proceeds from their espionage activities by incorporating by reference the forfeiture provisions contained in the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970, (21 U.S.C. section 853);

Second, it requires that any proceeds from publication or television rights to the story on, or interviews of, convicted spies be forfeited (Mirroring the Son-of-Sam provisions contained in 18 U.S.C. section 3671);

Third, it establishes a new fund to reward those whose information leads to the arrest or conviction of spies (mirroring the rewards provision contained in the Rewards for Information Concerning Terrorism Act, 18 U.S.C. section 3071).

Mr. President, I am pleased that Senator STEVENS has accepted, at my suggestion, language which will make the provisions of the amendment applicable to members of the Armed Forces convicted of espionage pursuant to the Uniform Code of Military Justice, as well as those individuals convicted under title 18 of the United States Code.

This amendment represents a necessary tool in our fight against espionage. I urge my colleagues to support it.●

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of this amendment. Simply stated, it will apply existing Federal procedures for forfeiture of criminal proceeds, and rewards for informants, to espionage cases.

We have all been shocked by the wave of espionage cases that have occurred in the Defense Department, among Defense contractors, and even in the intelligence agencies. Perhaps the most ominous development was revealed in the Walker case. Whatever other factors may have motivated John Walker to betray his country's defense secrets to the Soviet Union, his cynical attention appeared to focus primarily on the money he stood to make from his activities.

This amendment squarely addresses the ill-gotten gains from espionage and the incentive to turn in those suspected of this crime. It will be a useful contribution in our effort to see to it that espionage will never be seen to pay, and that those actually or contemplating spying for foreign powers recognize that others could be rewarded for providing information that leads to their arrest.

I want to congratulate Senator STEVENS for his initiative, and Senator

DENTON, chairman of the Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism, who worked closely with me on the Denton/Leahy substitute which became the final draft of this bill.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. STEVENS. I yield for a question to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. MATHIAS. My question arises from the so-called "Son of Sam" provision of this amendment, which would prevent persons convicted of certain espionage offenses from profiting by writing about their crimes. It is surely a repulsive spectacle when an individual profits from the commercial exploitation of his crimes against the United States, and I am in complete sympathy with the Senator's effort to divert that profit stream. Nonetheless, I am also concerned about the degree to which any "Son of Sam" provision burdens the exercise of first amendment rights. Am I correct in my understanding that this amendment is modeled after the "Son of Sam" provision that Congress enacted in the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, and that now is codified at 18 U.S.C section 3671?

Mr. STEVENS. The Senator is correct. I am offering this legislation so that the forfeiture remedies that were made available to the Government in the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 with respect to crimes of violence can be used against those who are convicted of violating certain specified espionage statutes.

Mr. MATHIAS. Am I also correct that it is not the Senator's intent to inhibit in any way the right of a third person to write or publish an account of the crimes that a convicted spy committed against the United States?

Mr. STEVENS. The Senator is correct. Let me quote from a portion of the Judiciary Committee's report on the 1984 "Son of Sam" legislation. I am confident that it will help clarify the scope of the forfeiture provision that I am offering:

> . . . the [ ] amendment refers to money payable to the defendant's "transferee," rather than "any other party." This is to ensure that innocent third parties, such as Truman Capote, the author of "In Cold Blood," or other authors who have not participated in criminal conduct and who wish to depict the defendant's crime, are not affected by the proposed rule change.

The "In Cold Blood" example is instructive here, since the corresponding provision in this legislation is not intended to reach an innocent third party who was not convicted of espionage when that third party writes or publishes an account of the events surrounding the espionage offense. It would apply to any proceeds due to the convicted spy or any part of the convicted spy's share that he has diverted to some third person.

Mr. MATHIAS. I thank the Senator from Alaska for that clarification. I have one additional question. One of the statutes covered by this amendment is 18 U.S.C. 793. As the Senator knows, an important case under that statute was recently concluded in my home State of Maryland. In that case, the jury convicted Samuel Morison of providing certain classified photographs to Jane's Defense Weekly.

I raise this point because the prosecution of Mr. Morison under section 793 is unprecedented, has wide-ranging first amendment implications, and is currently on appeal. In other words, the law in this area may be in a state of flux. Would the Senator's amendment have any effect on the substantive reach of section 793?

Mr. STEVENS. It is not my intent to affect in any way the definition of the underlying offenses to which this legislation would apply. Thus, this legislation should have no impact on the judicial interpretation of section 793. It would simply provide the Government with the opportunity to seek an additional remedy against someone finally convicted under that statute.

Mr. MATHIAS. I thank the Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Let me amplify the comments I have just had with Senator MATHIAS to emphasize again that this is not any attempt to invade the other areas of the Federal Code. Nor is it an attempt to in any way prevent a third party from engaging in the business of writing either for the print media or for the air or television media the stories of those who have been involved in these kinds of activities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I am pleased to answer any questions my colleagues may have.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I do not think any of us would speak in opposition to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska with respect to the forfeiture of funds gained from espionage or from writing relative to that or removing pictures. I think we all support that concept. This language is, I think, identical with language that has been in the Judiciary Committee for several weeks.

We have been wrestling with one aspect of the problem I would like to discuss with my colleague from Alaska. That has to do with the question of the right of a defendant to have legal counsel and the concern that has been expressed that assumes the individual did engage in espionage or it was alleged that he did and then he hires counsel. As I understand it, under this provision, those funds that would have been paid to counsel could be forfeited as well. As a consequence, the individual might not be in a position to be represented by a lawyer. He is not guilty until he is found guilty.

I wonder whether or not it is the intent of the author of the amendment to preclude the right of the defendant to have legal counsel, even though it very well might be that some portion of those funds would be expended for legal counsel. Some thought has been given to giving the judiciary, the judge handling the case, some discretionary authority in connection with this subject. Would the Senator from Alaska care to indicate his thoughts on that subject?

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, we have no intention of changing the normal treatment of attorneys' fees in such circumstances. If an attorney has reason to know that his client is paying him the proceeds that he has obtained by committing a crime, then the money in the hand of the attorney is forfeitable. If he does not have reason to suspect that, then it is another matter.

It is my understanding that this has been handled this way in other circumstances, it does not come up just in connection with this case. If a person robs a bank and is on trial and the lawyer who is defending that person knows that the money he has received is part of the loot from the bank, he cannot keep that. I think those of us in our profession understand that full well. We are not seeking to change that.

Mr. STEVENS. I say to my friend from Ohio, I understand what he is saying. I have no intention of changing the normal treatment of attorney-client relationship nor the right of the attorney to be paid. Unless he has reason to believe that the money he receives is part of the proceeds of the crime, we do not affect his status.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I appreciate the comment of the Senator from Alaska. I think it goes most of the way to the thing about which I have concern. But let us assume for the moment that the attorney were to know where the proceeds came from but that for a host of other reasons, he was convinced that the defendant was not guilty. The man might have the money but he might not be guilty for any one of a number of reasons, including the conceivable reason of statute of limitations, that it was out of the jurisdiction of the court, that there was some violation of his rights as to how the information was obtained, that there was an unlawful search and seizure.

I am not trying to make out a case for any particular individual, but my colleague and I are both lawyers. I think we would both agree that a lawyer would not be held responsible or should not be called upon to make a judicial determination as to whether his client is or is not guilty.

I think it is reasonable to assume that the lawyer taking the individual's case is taking it on the basis that he—assuming he is going to put in a "not guilty" plea—that he in his mind feels that there is a chance of having the defendant found not guilty. All I want to do is let the individual, whoever he may be—whether he is accused of the most heinous crime, and certainly espionage has to be included in that category—to let that individual have legal counsel. Some have suggested that the courts could appoint counsel, but I think we would agree that if the individual had funds, and certainly substantial funds, it would not be reasonable to expect that the court would appoint counsel.

I have that one reservation concerning the Senator's response, which indicated that if he knew the man was guilty or where the money came from. I think he has practiced law long enough and I have practiced law long enough to know that nobody is guilty until the court has found the individual guilty and that every person has the right to have his day in court.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, we have been in the practice of law for a long time, and I was the Government attorney in my State for 3 years, and I know some of these issues come up in a hard way.

I say to the Senator from Ohio that they cannot come under this amendment in any more difficult circumstances than they do in a drug situation today with all the drug cases we see, with tremendous funds being received by those peddling drugs. When we do apprehend them, we regain some of that money. We find that the defendant has received money and upon conviction, there are existing statutes which allow for forfeiture. As a matter of fact, this bill, as the Senator knows, is patterned after the drug statute that requires the forfeiture of the money received by the defendant who has been convicted of violating the law relating to drugs.

I say to my friend that this amendment before us does not require a forfeiture until conviction and it puts in the hands of the court that imposes the sentence the duty to order the forfeiture to the United States of the property we have listed as being subject to forfeiture. It is similar, as I said, to the drug statute.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I know it cannot cause a forfeiture of attorneys' fees as such. That is not indicated by implication or otherwise. Am I correct in my understanding?

Mr. STEVENS. The Senator is correct in the sense that we, of course, are not trying to require that—but if the court, following the normal procedures, would find that the attorney had knowledge of the source of the moneys he received, the court could order forfeiture of the moneys in the hands of the attorney in whole or in part, depending on what the court decides under the circumstances. But it is the Comprehensive Drug Abuse and Prevention and Control Act that has been the guide and it does, as I said, deal with the forfeiture of such funds that have been received and gives the authority to the court to order such other disposition of the property as it sees fit.

I think we have to leave this issue, Mr. President, where it has been in the past, and that is with the judge who presides over the case. Obviously, what the Senator from Ohio says is right, that until conviction the attorney is not in any way in a position of facing a forfeiture of moneys that have come into his hands as a result of his relationship with the defendant. But if he has knowledge and it can be shown and the court decides the attorney had knowledge the money the defendant delivered to him was received from proceeds of espionage or the proceeds of selling drugs, they are treated the same. It is up to the court to determine what should be forfeited under this statute.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Is it my understanding that the amendment of the Senator from Alaska is intended to be interpreted in the same manner the courts have interpreted the drug-related cases?

Mr. STEVENS. That is correct.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I have no further questions, Mr. President.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, as a cosponsor of the amendment, I certainly commend the distinguished Senator from Alaska for a very important amendment. On our side, we are prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the colloquy between the Senator from Alaska and the Senator from Ohio cleared up one of the problems that might have been with us in approving this amendment. We think it is a good amendment and, as far as I know on my side, there is no objection to it. I recommend we go forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2184) was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Rhode Island. I appreciate the contribution the Senator from Ohio has made to the legislative history on this amendment.

Mr. LUGAR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1450

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NOMINATION OF DANIEL A. MANION

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I want to take a moment to express the strong support I have for Dan Manion, who is being considered for an important judgeship. There will be a vote held on this floor tomorrow afternoon on cloture, so that we might proceed to a vote on Dan Manion.

He is a Hoosier, which means a resident of the State of Indiana. Beyond that, he has served in a distinguished capacity for 4 years as a State senator. He was elected in the South Bend area to that seat. I have know him, have campaigned with him, have been involved with him in politics in South Bend and have a very good idea of the support on both sides of the aisle that Dan Manion enjoys from both Democrats and Republicans. He has that support in his home town, which is a sizable city, a complex city, a city in which the votes are narrowly divided between Democrats and Republicans, in which independent voters have cast their lot with people of quality.

Mr. President, in my association with Dan Manion, I have found him to be a person of vigor, of character, and of intelligence. Very clearly, in his work in behalf of the people of the State of Indiana, he has demonstrated qualities which have led to very strong support in our State and very strong support from many persons around the Nation for his nomination.

I mention all this because there has been, I have noticed, a national campaign of persons who are not so well acquainted with Mr. Manion. I appreciate the nature of the argument that is being made. In short, many persons around the country believe that Dan Manion is a conservative and some believe he is too conservative for the courts and for issues that he might consider.

I think it is a misfortune that the issue has been cast in this mold. I appreciate that others have said that that really is not the issue. We are not persuaded that persons are either too conservative or too liberal but, rather, we are talking about competence. We are talking about specific opinions that have been written. We are talking about specific activities as part of legislative and administrative abilities.

Mr. President, I say in all candor that those who are attempting to make a case on the basis of competence have had to stretch very far. As a matter of fact, Dan Manion is a very competent human being, a very competent public servant, a person, I believe, of extraordinary force as he has presented conservative ideas in the State legislature—some of them adopted, some of them not. Clearly, he has acquitted himself well. I know of no one in Hoosier politics who ever thought he lacked confidence or lacked the ability to handle himself well in public life and with public issues.

Mr. President, I hope that as we take a look at this vote on cloture tomorrow, we take a look at another issue, and that is basic fairness to a nominee, a nominee for a very important office. In my judgment, most Americans believe that Mr. Manion ought to receive a vote up or down on the basis of his record, on the basis of the President's nomination of him for this high position.

I appreciate that legal scholars have been combing through the years to try to find if there is a single other instance in which a nominee for a judgeship has been blocked on the Senate floor by extended debate or filibuster. That instance, I think, for the particular office Mr. Manion seeks, has not been found, and for good reason.

Senators, whether Republicans or Democrats, believe in fairness. They believe in taking a look at the man or the woman, the nominee; the President who has made the nomination; the circumstances of that nomination.

I hope that precedent will prevail again, that there will be a strong vote for cloture, so that the debate can proceed after tomorrow on the merits of the case.

Senator DAN QUAYLE of Indiana and I, as those who are happy to count Dan Manion as our constituent, look forward to making a strong case on the merits for this nominee, the nominee of the President, for whom we have very great respect.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1510

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCONNELL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2185

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS] proposes an amendment numbered 2185.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

At the appropriate place insert the following:

TITLE .—VICTIMS OF TERRORISM COMPENSATION

SEC 801. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Victims of Terrorism Compensation Act".

SEC. 802. BENEFITS FOR CAPTIVES AND OTHER VICTIMS OF HOSTILE ACTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter VII of chapter 55 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 5569. Benefits for captives

"(a) For the purpose of this section—

"(1) 'captive' means any individual in a captive status commencing while such individual is—

"(A) in the civil service, or

"(B) a citizen, national, or resident alien of the United States rendering personal service to the United States similar to the service of an individual in the civil service (other than as a member of the uniformed services);

"(2) the term 'captive status' means a missing status which, as determined by the President, arises because of a hostile action and is a result of the individual's relationship with the Government;

"(3) 'missing status'—

"(A) in the case of an employee, has the meaning provided under section 5561(5) of this title; and

"(B) in the case of an individual other than an employee, has a similar meaning; and

"(4) 'family member', as used with respect to a person, means—

"(A) any dependent of such person; and

"(B) any individual (other than a dependent under subparagraph (A)) who is a member of such person's family or household.

"(b)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall establish a savings fund to which the head of an agency may allot all or any portion of the pay and allowances of any captive to the extent that such pay and allowances are not subject to an allotment under section 5563 of this title or any other provision of law.

"(2) Amounts so allotted to the savings fund shall bear interest at a rate which, for any calendar quarter, shall be equal to the average rate paid on United States Treasury bills with 3-month maturities issued during the preceding calendar quarter. Such interest shall be compounded quarterly.

"(3) Amounts in the savings fund credited to a captive shall be considered as pay and allowances for purposes of section 5563 of this title and shall otherwise be subject to withdrawal under procedures which the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish.

"(4) Any interest accruing under this subsection on—

"(A) any amount for which an individual is indebted to the United States under section 5562(c) of this title shall be deemed to be part of the amount due under such section 5562(c); and

"(B) any amount referred to in section 5566(f) of this title shall be deemed to be part of such amount for purposes of such section 5566(f).

"(5) An allotment under this subsection may be made without regard to section 5563(c) of this title.

"(c) The head of an agency shall pay (by advancement or reimbursement) any individual who is a captive, and any family member of such individual, for medical and health care, and other expenses related to such care, to the extent that such care—

"(1) is incident to such individual being a captive; and

"(2) is not covered—

"(A) by any Government medical or health program; or

"(B) by insurance.

"(d)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (3), the President shall make a cash payment to any individual who became or becomes a captive commencing on or after November 4, 1979. Such payment shall be made before the end of the one-year period beginning on the date on which the captive status of such individual terminates or, in the case of any individual whose status as a captive terminated before the date of the enactment of the Victims of Terrorism Compensation Act, before the end of the one-year period beginning on such date.

"(2) A payment under this subsection in the case of any individual held as a captive shall be not less than the amount of the world-wide average per diem rate which would be payable to any person under section 5702 of this title, based on—

"(A) a period of time equal to the period for which such individual was held as a captive; and

"(B) the world-wide average per diem rate which, during the period of captivity involved, was in effect under such section.

"(3) The President—

"(A) may defer a payment under this subsection in the case of any individual who, during the one-year period described in paragraph (1), is charged with an offense described in subparagraph (B), until final disposition of such charge; and

"(B) may deny such payment in the case of any individual who is convicted of an offense described in subsection (b) or (c) of section 8312 of this title committed—

"(i) during the period of captivity of such individual; and

"(ii) related to the captive status of such individual.

"(4) A payment under this subsection shall be in addition to any other amount provided by law.

"(5) The provisions of subchapter VIII of this chapter (or, in the case of any person not covered by such subchapter, similar provisions prescribed by the President) shall apply with respect to any amount due an individual under paragraph (1) after such individual's death.

"(6) Any payment made under paragraph (1) which is later denied under paragraph (3)(B) is a claim of the United States Government for purposes of section 3711 of title 31.

"(e)(1) Under regulations prescribed by the President, the benefits provided by the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, including the benefits provided by section 701 of such Act but excluding the benefits provided by sections 104, 105, 106, 400 through 408, 501 through 512, and 514 of such Act, shall be provided in the case of any individual who is a captive.

"(2) In applying such Act under this subsection—

"(A) the term 'person in the military service' is deemed to include any such captive;

"(B) the term 'period of military service' is deemed to include the period during which the individual is in a captive status; and

"(C) references to the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, the Adjutant General of the Army, the Chief of Naval Personnel, and the Commandant, United States Marine Corps, are deemed, in the case of any captive, to be references to an individual designated for that purpose by the President.

"(f)(1)(A) Under regulations prescribed by the President, the head of an agency shall pay (by advancement or reimbursement) a spouse or child of a captive for expenses incurred for subsistence, tuition, fees, supplies, books, and equipment, and other educational expenses, while attending an educational or training institution.

"(B) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), payments shall be available under this paragraph for a spouse or child of an individual who is a captive for education or training which occurs—

"(i) after that individual has been in captive status for 90 days or more, and

"(ii) on or before—

"(I) the end of any semester or quarter (as appropriate) which begins before the date on which the captive status of that individual terminates, or

"(II) if the educational or training institution is not operated on a semester or quarter system, the earlier of the end of any course which began before such date or the end of the 16-week period following that date.

In order to respond to special circumstances, the appropriate agency head may specify a date for purposes of cessation of assistance under clause (ii) which is later than the date which would otherwise apply under such clause.

"(C) In the event a captive dies and the death is incident to that individual being a captive, payments shall be available under this paragraph for a spouse or child of such individual for education or training which occurs after the date of such individual's death.

"(D) The preceding provisions of this paragraph shall not apply with respect to any spouse or child who is eligible for assistance under chapter 35 of title 38 or similar assistance under any other provision of law.

"(E) For the purpose of this paragraph, 'child' means a dependent under section 5561(3)(B) of this title.

"(2)(A) In order to respond to special circumstances, the head of an agency may pay (by advancement or reimbursement) a captive for expenses incurred for subsistence, tuition, fees, supplies, books, and equipment, and other educational expenses, while attending an educational or training institution.

"(B) Payments shall be available under this paragraph for a captive for education or training which occurs—

"(i) after the termination of that individual's captive status, and

"(ii) on or before—

"(I) the end of any semester or quarter (as appropriate) which begins before the date which is 10 years after the day on which the captive status of that individual terminates, or

"(II) if the educational or training institution is not operated on a semester or quarter system, the earlier of the end of any course which began before such date or the end of the 16-week period following that date, and shall be available only to the extent that such payments are not otherwise authorized by law.

"(3) Assistance under this subsection—

"(A) shall be discontinued for any individual whose conduct or progress is unsatisfactory under standards consistent with those established pursuant to section 1724 of title 38; and

"(B) may not be provided for any individual for a period in excess of 45 months (or the equivalent thereof in other than full-time education or training).

"(4) Regulations prescribed to carry out this subsection shall provide that the program under this subsection shall be consistent with the assistance program under chapters 35 and 36 of title 38.

"(g) Any benefit provided under subsection (c) or (d) may, under regulations prescribed by the President, be provided to a family member of an individual if—

"(1) such family member is held in captive status; and

"(2) such individual is performing service for the United States as described in subsection (a)(1)(A) when the captive status of such family member commences.

"(h) Except as provided in subsection (d), this section applies with respect to any individual in a captive status commencing after January 21, 1981.

"(i) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subchapter, any determination by the President under subsection (a)(2) or (d) shall be conclusive and shall not be subject to judicial review.

"(j) The President may prescribe regulations necessary to administer this section.

"§ 5570. Compensation for disability or death

"(a) For the purpose of this section—

"(1) 'employee' means—

"(A) any individual in the civil service; and

"(B) any individual rendering personal service to the United States similar to the service of an individual in the civil service (other than as a member of the uniformed services); and

"(2) 'family member', as used with respect to an employee, means—

"(A) any dependent of such employee; and

"(B) any individual (other than a dependent under subparagraph (A)) who is a member of the employee's family or household.

"(b) The President shall prescribe regulations under which an agency head may pay compensation for the disability or death of an employee or a family member of an employee if, as determined by the President, the disability or death was caused by hostile action and was a result of the individual's relationship with the Government.

"(c) Any compensation otherwise payable to an individual under this section in connection with any disability or death shall be reduced by any amounts payable to such individual under any other program funded in whole or in part by the United States (excluding any amount payable under section 5569(d) of this title) in connection with such disability or death, except that nothing in this subsection shall result in the reduction of any amount below zero.

"(d) A determination by the President under subsection (b) shall be conclusive and shall not be subject to judicial review.

"(e) Compensation under this section may include payment (whether by advancement or reimbursement) for any medical or health expenses relating to the death or disability involved to the extent that such expenses are not covered under subsection (c) of section 5569 of this title (other than because of paragraph (2) of such subsection).

"(f) This section applies with respect to any disability or death resulting from an injury which occurs after September 30, 1985.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The analysis for chapter 55 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 5568 the following:

"5569. Benefits for captives.
"5570. Compensation for disability or death.".

SEC. 803. RETENTION OF LEAVE BY ALIEN EMPLOYEES FOLLOWING INJURY FROM HOSTILE ACTION ABROAD.

Section 6325 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The preceding provisions of this section shall apply in the case of an alien employee referred to in section 6301(2)(viii) of this title with respect to any leave granted to such alien employee under section 6310 of this title or section 408 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980.".

SEC. 804. TRANSITION PROVISIONS.

(a) SAVINGS FUND.—(1) Amounts may be allotted to the savings fund under subsection (b) of section 5569 of title 5, United States Code (as added by section 802(a) of this Act) from pay and allowances for any pay period ending after January 21, 1981, and before the establishment of such fund.

(2) Interest on amounts so allotted with respect to any such pay period shall be calculated as if the allotment had occurred at the end of such pay period.

(b) MEDICAL AND HEALTH CARE; EDUCATIONAL EXPENSES.—Subsections (c) and (f) of such section 5569 (as so added) shall be carried out with respect to the period after January 21, 1981, and before the effective date of those subsections, under regulations prescribed by the President.

(c) DEFINITION.—For the purpose of this subsection, "pay and allowances" has the meaning provided under section 5561 of title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 805. BENEFITS FOR MEMBERS OF UNIFORMED SERVICES WHO ARE VICTIMS OF HOSTILE ACTION.

(a) PAYMENTS.—(1) Chapter 10 of title 37, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 559. Benefits for members held as captives

"(a) In this section—

"(1) 'captive status' means a missing status of a member of the uniformed services which, as determined by the President, arises because of a hostile action and is a result of membership in the uniformed services, but does not include a period of captivity of a member as a prisoner of war if Congress provides to such member, in an Act enacted after the date of the enactment of the Victims of Terrorism Compensation Act, monetary payment in respect of such period of captivity; and

"(2) 'former captive' means a person who, as a member of the uniformed services, was held in a captive status.

"(b)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall establish a savings fund to which the Secretary concerned may allot all or any portion of the pay and allowances of any member of the uniformed services who is in a captive status to the extent that such pay and allowances are not subject to an allotment under section 553 of this title or any other provision of law.

"(2) Amounts so allotted shall bear interest at a rate which, for any calendar quarter, shall be equal to the average rate paid on United States Treasury bills with three-month maturities issued during the preceding calendar quarter. Such interest shall be computed quarterly.

"(3) Amounts in the savings fund credited to a member shall be considered as pay and allowances for purposes of section 553(c) of this title and shall otherwise be subject to withdrawal under procedures which the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish.

"(4) Any interest accruing under this subsection on—

"(A) any amount for which a member is indebted to the United States under section 552(c) of this title shall be deemed to be part of the amount due under such section; and

"(B) any amount referred to in section 556(f) of this title shall be deemed to be part of such amount for purposes of such section.

"(5) An allotment under this subsection may be made without regard to section 553(c) of this title.

"(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection, the President shall make a cash payment to any person who is a former captive. Such payment shall be made before the end of the one-year period beginning on the date on which the captive status of such person terminates.

"(2) The amount of such payment shall be determined by the President under the provisions of section 5569(d)(2) of title 5.

"(3)(A) The President—

"(i) may defer such payment in the case of any former captive who during such one-year period is charged with an offense described in clause (ii) of this subparagraph, until final disposition of such charge; and

"(ii) may deny such payment in the case of any former captive who is convicted of a captivity-related offense—

"(I) referred to in subsection (b) or (c) of section 8312 of title 5; or

"(II) under chapter 47 of title 10 (the Uniform Code of Military Justice) that is punishable by dishonorable discharge, dismissal, or confinement for one year or more.

"(B) For the purposes of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, a captivity-related offense is an offense that is—

"(i) committed by a person while the person is in a captive status; and

"(ii) related to the captive status of the person.

"(4) A payment under this subsection is in addition to any other amount provided by law.

"(5) Any amount due a person under this subsection shall, after the death of such person, be deemed to be pay and allowances for the purposes of this chapter.

"(6) Any payment made under paragraph (1) of this subsection that is later denied under paragraph (3)(A)(ii) of this subsection is a claim of the United States Government for purposes of section 3711 of title 31.

"(d) A determination by the President under subsection (a)(1) or (c) of this section is final and is not subject to judicial review.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"559. Benefits for members held as captives.".

(3)(A)(i) Except as provided in clause (ii), section 559 of title 37, United States Code, as added by paragraph (1), shall apply to any person whose captive status begins after January 21, 1981.

(ii)(I) Subsection (c) of such section shall apply to any person whose captive status begins on or after November 4, 1979.

(II) In the case of any person whose status as a captive terminated before the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall make a payment under paragraph (1) of such subsection before the end of the one-year period beginning on such date.

(B) Amounts may be allotted to a savings fund established under such section from pay and allowances for any pay period ending after January 21, 1981, and before the establishment of such fund.

(C) Interest on amounts so allotted with respect to any such pay period shall be calculated as if the allotment had occurred at the end of such pay period.

(b) DISABILITY AND DEATH BENEFITS.—(1) Chapter 53 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1051. Disability and death compensation: dependents of members held as captives

"(a) The President shall prescribe regulations under which the Secretary concerned may pay compensation for the disability or death of a dependent of a member of the uniformed services if the President determines that the disability or death—

"(1) was caused by hostile action; and

"(2) was a result of the relationship of the dependent to the member of the uniformed services.

"(b) Any compensation otherwise payable to a person under this section in connection with any disability or death shall be reduced by any amount payable to such person under any other program funded in whole or in part by the United States in connection with such disability or death, except that nothing in this subsection shall result in the reduction of any amount below zero.

"(c) A determination by the President under subsection (a) is conclusive and is not subject to judicial review.

"(d) In this section:

"(1) 'Captive status' has the meaning given that term in section 559 of title 37.

"(2) 'Dependent' has the meaning given that term in section 551 of that title.

"(3) 'Secretary concerned' and 'uniformed services' have the meanings given those terms in section 101 of that title.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"1051. Disability and death compensation: dependents of members held as captives.".

(3) Section 1051 of title 10, United States Code, as added by paragraph (1), shall apply with respect to any disability or death resulting from an injury that occurs after September 30, 1985.

(c) MEDICAL BENEFITS.—(1) Chapter 55 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1095. Medical care: members held as captives and their dependents

"(a) Under regulations prescribed by the President, the Secretary concerned shall pay (by advancement or reimbursement) any person who is a former captive, and any dependent of that person or of a person who is in a captive status, for health care and other expenses related to such care, to the extent that such care—

"(1) is incident to the captive status; and

"(2) is not covered—

"(A) by any other Government medical or health program; or

"(B) by insurance.

"(b) In the case of any person who is eligible for medical care under section 1074 or 1076 of this title, such regulations shall require that, whenever practicable, such care be provided in a facility of the uniformed services.

"(c) In this section:

"(1) 'Captive status' and 'former captive' have the meanings given those terms in section 559 of title 37.

"(2) 'Dependent' has the meaning given that term in section 551 of that title.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"1095. Medical care: members held as captives and their dependents.".

(3)(A) Section 1095 of title 10, United States Code, as added by paragraph (1), shall apply with respect to any person whose captive status begins after January 21, 1981.

(B) The President shall prescribe specific regulations regarding the carrying out of such section with respect to persons whose captive status begins during the period beginning on January 21, 1981, and ending on the effective date of that section.

(d) EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE.—(1) Part III of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 110—EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE FOR MEMBERS HELD AS CAPTIVES AND THEIR DEPENDENTS

"Sec.

"2181. Definitions.

"2182. Educational assistance: dependents of captives.

"2183. Educational assistance: former captives.

"2184. Termination of assistance.

"2185. Programs to be consistent with programs administered by the Veterans' Administration.

"§ 2181. Definitions

In this chapter:

"(1) 'Captive status' and 'former captive' have the meanings given those terms in section 559 of title 37.

"(2) 'Dependent' has the meaning given that term in section 551 of that title.

"§ 2182. Educational assistance: dependents of captives

"(a) Under regulations prescribed by the President, the Secretary concerned shall pay (by advancement or reimbursement) a dependent of a person who is in a captive status for expenses incurred, while attending an educational or training institution, for—

"(1) subsistence;

"(2) tuition;

"(3) fees;

"(4) supplies;

"(5) books;

"(6) equipment; and

"(7) other educational expenses.

"(b) Except as provided in section 2184 of this title, payments shall be available under this section for a dependent of a person who is in a captive status for education or training that occurs—

"(1) after that person is in a captive status for not less than 90 days; and

"(2) on or before—

"(A) the end of any semester or quarter (as appropriate) that begins before the date on which the captive status of that person terminates;

"(B) the earlier of the end of any course that began before such date or the end of the 16-week period following that date if the educational or training institution is not operated on a semester or quarter system; or

"(C) a date specified by the Secretary concerned in order to respond to special circumstances.

"(c) If a person in a captive status or a former captive dies and the death is incident to the captivity, payments shall be available under this section for a dependent of that person for education or training that occurs after the date of the death of that person.

"(d) The provisions of this section shall not apply to any dependent who is eligible for assistance under chapter 35 of title 38 or similar assistance under any other provision of law.

"§ 2183. Educational assistance: former captives

"(a) In order to respond to special circumstances, the Secretary concerned may pay (by advancement or reimbursement) a person who is a former captive for expenses incurred, while attending an educational or training institution, for—

"(1) subsistence;

"(2) tuition;

"(3) fees;

"(4) supplies;

"(5) books;

"(6) equipment; and

"(7) other educational expenses.

"(b) Except as provided in section 2184 of this title, payments shall be available under this section for a person who is a former captive for education or training that occurs—

"(1) after the termination of the status of that person as a captive; and

"(2) on or before—

"(A) the end of any semester or quarter (as appropriate) that begins before the end of the 10-year period beginning on the date on which the status of that person as a captive terminates; or

"(B) if the educational or training institution is not operated on a semester or quarter system, the earlier of the end of any course that began before such date or the end of the 16-week period following that date.

"(c) Payments shall be available under this section only to the extent that such payments are not otherwise authorized by law.

"§ 2184. Termination of assistance

"Assistance under this chapter—

"(1) shall be discontinued for any person whose conduct or progress is unsatisfactory under standards consistent with those established under section 1724 of title 38; and

"(2) may not be provided for any person for more than 45 months (or the equivalent in other than full-time education or training).

"§ 2185. Programs to be consistent with programs administered by the Veterans' Administration

"Regulations prescribed to carry out this chapter shall provide that the programs under this chapter shall be consistent with the educational assistance programs under chapters 35 and 36 of title 38.".

(2) The table of chapters at the beginning of subtitle A of such title, and the table of chapters at the beginning of part III of such subtitle, are amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 109 the following new item:

"110. Educational Assistance for Members Held as Captives and Their Dependents ..... 2181".

(3) Chapter 110 of title 10, United States Code, as added by paragraph (1), shall apply with respect to persons whose captive status begins after January 21, 1981.

SEC. 806. EFFECTIVE DATE OF ENTITLEMENTS.

Provisions enacted by this title which provide new spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 shall not be effective until October 1, 1986.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, this is an amendment to offer comprehensive compensation for American victims of terrorism abroad. This legislation has already been considered in the other body. In fact, a similar measure has been approved in the other body.

Its purpose is very straightforward. It would establish a permanent program to protect our diplomats, diplomatic families and foreign nationals whom we employ in our Embassies and our consulates around the world. If we are to engage able and well-educated individuals to serve abroad, we have to provide assurance that not only they but their families will receive educational and medical benefits in the event of a terrorist attack or, God forbid, in the event that they are taken hostage and held for prolonged periods of time.

The likelihood of such catastrophic events would at one time have been considered very remote. And for that reason, among others, no comprehensive program was established to meet such contingencies. As a result, we have yet to provide the hostages who were held in Iran and their families with any kind of adequate compensation for the experience which they endured as a direct consequence of their employment by the United States of America.

This amendment would only offer a just settlement to the hostages who went through those long days in Tehran, but it would establish a rational basis for compensating victims of such terrorism in the future.

I hold—and I am sure that every Senator would agree—that we have a moral obligation to those to whom we appoint to represent our interests all over the world. I think it is absolutely necessary that we be able to promise employees and their families that they and their survivors will be cared for if they are injured or killed in an attack or if they are held as hostages over a long period of time.

If we put an American employee's or official's family at risk by authorizing them to accompany him or her to a dangerous spot, then we have the normal employer's obligation to pay the medical expenses of the family member injured in an attack. If a former hostage is unable to return to active duty as a result of some traumatic incident, I think we have, as an employer, the normal employer's obligation to help in his or her retraining for other duties.

Furthermore, I think we must do what we can to continue to attract the most qualified foreign nationals who serve important secondary services at Embassies and consulates abroad. The State Department reports that it is becoming more and more difficult to recruit able employees because of the increased danger and because of the lack of prospects of any permanent relief if some problems of the kind I have been discussing should occur.

Now, I am well aware that there is considerable concern that the eligibility requirements of this legislation are too broad. One specific complaint is that it would cover employees of contractors who build Embassies and consulates. That is not an immaterial point in the light of the general purposes of this bill which will contemplate a serious construction activity. I would point out, however, that such employees are already covered by workmen's compensation for being part of the contract signed by the construction firms before they can begin on the project.

Such issues have been cited as compelling reasons to separate the terrorism compensation title of the bill from the other body from the legislation which is now before us. I respect the commitment to write and report a separate bill devoted to this problem.

But in all due respect I hardly think that we should wait on this subject. I am confident that some of the most specific terms that may be unacceptable to some Members such as the use of worldwide per diem or other rates for compensation in the hostage case can be worked out in conference. The State Department has offered to clarify and tighten any language in the bill with the other body that will ensure that only deserving cases receive benefits under the legislation.

But the fact is, the fact that we all have to live with, the fact that I think should weigh upon our consciences, all Americans, all of our officials, all of our employees abroad remain today without the kind of basic protection they deserve in the truly dangerous circumstances in which they live and work. The other body has already acted to correct this oversight in an effective, economical, and just manner. And I submit, Mr. President, that it is incumbent upon us to respect that work and to carry it through to completion without delay.

Mr. LUGAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Maryland has spoken eloquently as always to a very important point that is especially poignant with regard to those who have served our country in the foreign service in its broad sense in the past. And clearly, as the distinguished Senator from Maryland has pointed out, the House of Representatives as it thought about Embassy security legislation decided to address this problem of victims of terrorism compensation very directly and included title VIII in their bill. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee decided not to include title VIII in our markup largely because there were problems raised as the Senator from Maryland has mentioned, of the levels of compensation and and who would be covered.

Further, in a technical and jurisdictional sense, Mr. President, there were claims on this issue by several committees of the Senate for various reasons. There were calls for sequential referral, and we simply tried to meet this by indicating that we see the item as very important, and one on which separate legislation with separate hearings might be appropriate.

The distinguished Senator from Maryland already has mentioned in his remarks the fact that the House of Representatives has such a provision in its bill, and therefore the victims of terrorism compensation at this time will be a part of the conference with the House and the Senate in view of the fact that it is a conferenceable item. We will have an opportunity to discuss it.

I hope, perhaps, he would be willing to withdraw the amendment from consideration today on this bill with assurances that there are many Senators who will be members of that conference who have been made much more knowledgeable by the Senator's remarks today. Sensitivity clearly is an issue that is involved. With the intensity with which he is pressing these issues upon us, and in view of our sensitivity and our interest, I hope he will withdraw the amendment today and take part in that conference with others who share the concern and idealism he has expressed.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I share the sentiments of our chairman. I commend the Senator from Maryland for this amendment. As a former member of the Foreign Services I am particularly in sympathy with the travails of those men and women in today's world. But those in the military service receive rewards for different dangers, different risks, and different blows of fortune. If you are wounded, you get a Purple Heart. You get certain benefits if you are an invalid at home. If you are killed, your family gets certain benefits. If you are a prisoner of war, you get certain benefits. But to be a hostage is like being a prisoner of war only with greater risk in it, greater mental horror, and harassment because you do not know if you are going to survive. If you are a prisoner of war, you know that under the Geneva Convention you will be returned unless something dreadful happens. If you are a hostage, you have no idea whether you will be returned or not be returned, or shot in the back of your head instead.

So our people who are exposed to these dangers really deserve to be recompensed at at least the same standard or level that we do for our military. I hope this will be a criterion that will follow in the conference.

But in the meantime, I agree it probably would be best if this amendment is withdrawn at this time.

Mr. MATHIAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. MATHIAS. I am reluctantly persuaded by the managers of the bill. I am persuaded, I must say to them with all due respect, not so much because of their arguments but because of their personal assurances that this matter will be considered in conference. As a little backup in my personal confidence in them, I even have the temerity to hope that I might be a conferee myself, and will be watching.

So I think under those circumstances the position that we have stated is a reasonable one. Therefore, I withdraw the amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 2186

Mr. President, I send another amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS] proposes an amendment numbered 2186.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 129, after line 3, insert the following new section:

SEC. 702. EXPRESSION OF SUPPORT OF ACTIVITIES OF THE UNITED STATES TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRAINING INSTITUTE.

Nothing in this Act, the Communications Act of 1934, or any other Act, shall be construed to preclude the Department of State, the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID), or the United States Information Agency (USIA) from participation (including use of staff, other appropriate resources and service on the board of the USTTI) in support of any activities of the United States Telecommunications Training Institute (USTTI).

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, The amendment I am offering, expressing support for the activities of the U.S. Telecommunications Training Institute, is not a contentious one and is similar to language which was attached in 1984 to th Cable Communications Policy Act. The USTTI is a nonprofit corporation sustained by private sector contributions and the volunteer services of those who sit on the board. Since 1982, this institute has offered tuition-free training to qualified telecommunications professionals from the developing world. The institute's success in equipping its participants with valuable training and a better understanding of the United States and its telecommunications industry is due in part to the working partnership between Government leaders and chief executives in the telecommunications field. This amendment simply clarifies that this cooperation between Government and corporate leaders does not present a "conflict of interest" on the part of the USTTI's Government board members.

Mr. LUGAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland has presented an important clarification. It is important there not be conflict of interest. He has made a good commendation in the course of his statement. On our side, we are prepared to accept the amendment. I have been advised by the distinguished ranking member of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator PELL, that the Democratic side is likewise prepared to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on the agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment (No. 2186) was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MATHIAS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, shortly I shall be proposing two amendments which have been discussed with the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and have been cleared on both sides of the aisle, amendments which deal with the subject of terrorism. For some time now, Mr. President, it has been apparent to everyone in the world that firm action had to be taken against terrorist attacks. Starting back in mid-1984, I introduced a series of legislative enactments, resolutions, and proposed bills to deal with terrorism. The matters first came to my attention as matters of some urgency with the April 10, 1984, shooting of the British policewoman by the Libyan diplomat.

□ 1530

Following that, I submitted a sense-of-the-Senate resolution seeking to limit diplomatic immunity because if anything is clear, it is clear that diplomatic immunity does not comprehend the shooting of a policewoman. That is not an act of diplomacy. I called at that time for a provision in the convention on diplomatic immunity.

Subsequent to 1984, there has been a series of terrorist acts taking American lives around the world, the lives of innocent American soldiers, and the lives of tourists around the world, calling for some firm action.

The two measures which I will offer deal with the effort of attacking the problem of terrorism, first by making it an international crime, with an international definition of terrorism, and, second, awaiting action for such an international definition of terrorism, legislation which would provide that it is a violation of the laws of the United States to attack, maim, or murder a U.S. citizen anywhere in the world.

The latter legislation passed this body on February 18 of this year by a vote of 90 to 0. I seek to attach it as an amendment to this legislation. It will be in the conference with the House and will be enacted into law, it will be signed by the President, and will provide much needed protection.

AMENDMENT NO. 2187

(Purpose: Expressing the sense of the Senate that the President should call for international negotiations to make international terrorism a universal crime prosecutable in the United States)

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] proposes an amendment numbered 2187.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill add the following: In the past decade there have been nearly 6,500 terrorist incidents around the world, killing over 3,500 people and wounding more than 7,600, including over 2,500 incidents against Americans;

Terrorism anywhere affects nations everywhere by chilling the free exercise of sovereign authority;

Rampant terrorism by its very nature threatens world order and thereby all civilized nations and their citizens;

Any and every nation has the right, under current principles of international law, to assert jurisdiction over offenses considered to be "universal crimes", such as piracy and slavery, in order to protect sovereign authority, universal values, and the interests of mankind; and

Individuals committing "universal crimes" may be prosecuted in any nation in which the offender may be found, irrespective of the nationality of the offender or victim or the place of the offense: Now, therefore,

It is the sense of the Senate that the President should call for international negotiations for the purpose of agreeing on a definition of "international terrorist crimes" and for the purpose of considering whether such a crime would constitute a universal crime under international law. Such definition should require that acts constituting an international terrorist crime—

(1) involve the threat or use of violence or be dangerous to human life,

(2) would be a crime in the prosecuting jurisdiction if committed within its boundaries,

(3) appear to be intended—

(A) to intimidate or coerce a civilian population;

(B) to influence the policy of a government by intimidation or coercion; or

(C) to affect the conduct of a government by assassination or kidnapping; and

(4) transcend national boundaries in terms of the means by which they are accomplished, the persons they appear intended to coerce or intimidate, or the locale in which their perpetrators operate or seek asylum.

The President should also consider including in these international negotiations the possibility of establishing an international criminal court along the lines of the International Military Tribunal established after World War II for the trial of major war criminals at Nuremburg, Germany, that would have jurisdiction over the crime of international terrorism.

Mr. SPECTER. The essence of this amendment is to provide two resolution clauses. First, that it is the sense of the Senate that the President should call for international negotiations for the purpose of agreeing on a definition of international terrorist crimes and for the purpose of considering whether such a crime would constitute a universal crime under international law.

The second aspect of the resolution calls for the President to consider including in these international negotiations the possibility of establishing an international criminal court along the lines of the International Military Tribunal established after World War II for the trial of major war criminals in Nuremberg, Germany, which would have jurisdiction over the crime of international terrorism.

Mr. President, I suggest there is ample precedent for declaring terrorism an international crime. Piracy has long been an international crime, and in defining piracy as an international crime, it differed from the general concept that the crime could be prosecuted only in the jurisdiction where it was committed.

As, for example, if a crime were committed in the United States, for example, in my home State of Pennsylvania, it customarily could be prosecuted only in Pennsylvania. An international crime such as terrorism could be so defined that a terrorist could be prosecuted wherever he would be apprehended because terrorism is such a serious offense.

The act of torture has received some status as international crime. I think the time has come, Mr. President, that terrorism should be defined as an international crime. If such a definition can be agreed upon, we ought to look to the future to having the crime of terrorism and the terrorist defendants tried in an international tribunal similar to Nuremberg.

Mr. President, I realize that it is a difficult matter to achieve such a definition and to set up such an international tribunal, considering all the factors of national sovereignty and the difficulty of getting nations to act together. But it is the view of this Senator that such action will really put the imprimatur and the stamp on terrorism as an act which the world community will not tolerate. If these crimes were prosecuted in a world tribunal, there could be no question that such prosecutions, as distinguished from prosecutions of any specific nature, in an international tribunal would have much greater force and much greater weight than those prosecutions in an individual state.

That is the first amendment which I seek to offer, Mr. President, at this time.

At this time I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania for this amendment. He has been a scholar in this field, both as a U.S. Senator and as a distinguished prosecutor, a district attorney. We believe that the amendment is a sound one and we are prepared to accept it on this side.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I have one question I would like to be enlightened upon. That is in view of the fact that a crime is committed outside the United States in another country's jurisdiction, do we have now in the law the right to bring that particular criminal, or whatever you want to call him who carried out this act, under the jurisdiction of our own courts, or does that, as a matter of custom, remain under the courts of the country where the crime was committed?

Mr. SPECTER. The question which the distinguished ranking Member raises relates more directly to the next amendment I will offer, which makes it a violation of U.S. law and an act prosecutable in U.S. courts even if the act were committed in some other country.

On that subject, there is solid precedent as a matter of international law that the United States may prosecute in U.S. courts an attack or a crime against the United States anywhere in the world regardless of the locale where the crime was committed.

On the amendment now pending, it encourages the President to work for an international definition of terrorism, with those acts prosecuted in international court.

There is no question about the jurisdiction of such an international tribunal to move to prosecute defendants in that context, where an act was committed anywhere in the world.

Mr. PELL. But in the present body of international law, is terrorism recognized as a crime?

Mr. SPECTER. I would think it is, but not with sufficient clarity so there is one coherent, cohesive definition of terrorism.

I believe there would be precedent for a nation to define terrorism in a variety of ways and to make it stick as a matter of national law and as a matter of international law. But there are some who would disagree with what is a justifiable definition of terrorism.

Some have said that one man's fear is another man's terror. That is why this Senator believes that there ought to be an international tribunal for international consideration. It would be a broader definition of what we in the United States would find to be an act of terrorism. Let others have input and let us try to reach an international consensus on terrorism.

Mr. PELL. But the international arbiter would be the International Court of Justice at The Hague. Have they had any cases of international terrorism?

Mr. SPECTER. I think that many would not recognize the International Court of The Hague as being the arbiter.

Mr. PELL. Who would?

Mr. SPECTER. The answer is that no one is the arbiter. The international law is defined most frequently as international narrowly. The fact is that international law customarily turns on where power lies, where force lies, and where the ability lies to carry out what nations seek to achieve.

□ 1540

So we do not have international law in so many situations involving international disagreements. There are some narrow ranges of international law on an international commercial transaction, maybe the U.S. district court for Washington, DC. But if you are talking about terrorism, talking about conflict, talking about encroachment, talking about acts of war maybe, there are wide differences of opinion as to what the act of the law is.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the reason I felt this should be pursued is that I understand this coming week, or later on this week, the International Court of Justice is going to come out with a case in which it is inferred that terrorists are our own people—Contras, and so forth—in Nicaragua. So I withdraw from suggesting the ICJ as an arbiter and turn again to asking whether we are not now creating a new body of law—which may be a good idea.

Mr. SPECTER. We may be creating a new body of law. Every time there is a judicial decision, in a sense, there is a new body of law. That is the way the common law functions.

A case arises, the court makes a decision, and the law is established on the relationship of that particular transaction or occurrence with those parties. That is the way the law evolves. When Congress passes a legislative enactment, we create many laws and there are many interpretations. Frequently, courts cannot agree among themselves as to what it has done—as in the circuit court of appeals this spring. The process of establishing the law is a very complex procedure. The thrust of this amendment is to try to bring some international focus on this critical aspect of terrorism so that it is not merely a U.S. determination.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I asked a theoretical question. Let us say that, in Central America, a Contra machineguns a bus and some people are killed there. Would they then be justified in passing a law in their country having us return from Miami or the United States that individual if he were in the United States?

Mr. SPECTER. That is precisely the sort of question which I do not think this Senator can answer or this body should answer. That is precisely the kind of question which ought to be addressed by an international tribunal. There would be a different answer by the courts in the United States to that question as opposed to the courts of Nicaragua. That is precisely why this Senator believes that there ought to be an international focus, an effort by an international tribunal to define terrorism in a way that transcends the interests of the United States and transcends the interests of the Contras or the Sandinistas, and seeks a philosophical definition of terrorism which would satisfy all parties, including those involved in the disputes in Iran or those involved in the disputes in Afghanistan or Angola.

It is a very, very difficult assignment but I think it is one which ought to be tackled on the international level, one which is long past due.

Mr. PELL. I join my friend from Pennsylvania and I support the amendment. There is no objection.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am happy the Senator supports the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2187) was agreed to.

Mr. SPECTER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2188

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] for himself, Mr. LEAHY, and Mr. DENTON, proposes an amendment numbered 2188.

At the appropriate place in the bill add the following:

SEC. .

(A) This section may be cited as the "Terrist Prosecution Act of 1985"

(B)(1) Part I of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:

"CHAPTER 113A—TERRORIST ACTS AGAINST UNITED STATES NATIONALS ABROAD

"2331. Findings and purpose.

"2332. Terrorist acts against United States nationals abroad.

"SEC. 2331. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

"The Congress hereby finds that—

"(a) between 1968 and 1985, there were over eight thousand incidents of international terrorism, over 50 per centum of which were directed against American targets;

"(b) it is an accepted principle of international law that a country may prosecute crimes committed outside its boundaries that are directed against its own security or the operation of its governmental functions;

"(c) terrorist attacks on Americans abroad threaten a fundamental function of our Government: that of protecting its citizens;

"(d) such attacks also threaten the ability of the United States to implement and maintain an effective foreign policy;

"(e) terrorist attacks further interfere with interstate and foreign commerce, threatening business travel and tourism as well as trade relations; and

"(f) the purpose of this chapter is to provide for the prosecution and punishment of persons who, in furtherance of terrorist activities or because of the nationality of the victims, commit violent attacks upon Americans outside the United States or conspire outside of the United States to murder Americans within the United States.

"SEC. 2332. TERRORIST ACTS AGAINST UNITED STATES NATIONALS ABROAD.

"(a) Whoever outside the United States commits any murder as defined in section 1111(a) of this title or manslaughter as defined in section 1112(a) of this title, or attempts or conspires to commit murder, of a national of the United States shall upon conviction in the case of murder be punished as provided in section 1111, for manslaughter be punished as provided in section 1112, for attempted murder be imprisoned for not more than twenty years, and for conspiracy be punished as provided by section 1117 of this title, notwithstanding that the offense occurred outside the United States.

"(b) Whoever outside the United States, with intent to cause serious bodily harm or significant loss of liberty, assaults, strikes, wounds, imprisons, or makes any other violent attack upon the person or liberty of any national of the United States or, if likely to endanger his person or liberty, makes violent attacks upon his business premises, private accommodations, or means of transport, or attempts to commit any of the foregoing, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both. Whoever in the commission of any such act uses a deadly or dangerous weapon shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

"(c) Whoever, outside of the United States conspires to commit murder, as defined in section 1111(a) of this title, within the United States of any national of the United States, shall be punished as provided in section 1117 of this title notwithstanding that the offense occurred outside the United States.

"(d) As used in this section, the term 'national of the United States' has the meaning given such term in section 101(a)(22) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(22)).

"(e) No indictment for this section can be returned without the written approval of the Attorney General or his designee.".

(2) The table of chapters for part I of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item for chapter 113, the following:

"113A. Terrorist acts against United States nationals abroad..... 2331".

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, this amendment is identical to S. 1429, which was adopted by the U.S. Senate on February 19, 1986, by a unanimous vote of 92 to zero. It is an amendment which has an extensive legislative history on a series of amendments or perfecting amendments which the Senator has introduced over the course of the past 2 years.

This amendment would expand U.S. law by making it a crime for anyone in any country to assault any U.S. citizen as part of an act of terrorism. This legislation would also preclude defendants in such cases from challenging the manner in which they were brought before the court.

A similar bill was originally introduced as S. 3018 in the 98th Congress.[1] This broader version now deserves prompt enactment.

We need not wait for international agreements to be finalized before we begin to exert the full force of the law against the terrorist menace. There are steps we can take right now, unilaterally, to expand our ability to protect our own citizens abroad.

Significant security measures have already been implemented at U.S. embassies and installations, and the new Overseas Security Advisory Council recently announced by Secretary Shultz should enhance the safety of corporate personnel in threatened areas throughout the world.

But there remains a critical gap in our arsenal against terrorism: murder of U.S. citizens outside our borders, other than of specially designed Government officials and diplomats, is not a crime under U.S. law.

I was stunned to realize that those responsible for murdering over 260 U.S. marines while they slept in their barracks in Lebanon are not guilty of any U.S. crime for their murder. Nor are those terrorists who cold-bloodedly shot two U.S. citizens during the hijacking in Kuwait. Existing law punishes only those who assault our diplomats. Under my bill, when a U.S. marine is killed or wounded in a bomb attack, an investigation can be initiated and the culprits can be brought to this country and prosecuted.

This act will in no way contravene or conflict with either international or constitutional law. While criminal jurisdiction is customarily limited to the place where the crime occurred, it is well-established constitutional doctrine that Congress has the power to apply U.S. law extraterritorially if it so chooses. (See e.g., United States v. Bowman, 260 U.S. 94, 98 (1922)).

International law also recognizes broader criminal jurisdiction. If an alleged crime occurs in a foreign country, a nation may still exercise jurisdiction over the defendant if the crime has a potential adverse effect upon its security or the operation of its governmental functions. This basis for jurisdiction over crimes committed outside the United States has been applied by the Federal courts in contexts ranging from drug smuggling to perjury. Clearly, then, the exercise of U.S. criminal jurisdiction is also justified to prosecute the terrorist who assaults or murders American personnel abroad. Such attacks undoubtedly have an adverse effect upon the conduct of our Government's foreign affairs, and potentially threaten the security interest of the United States as well.

But making terrorist murder a U.S. crime alone will not protect Americans abroad. We must also demonstrate our seriousness by applying the law with fierce determination. In many cases, the terrorist murderer will be extradited or seized with the cooperation of the Government in whose jurisdiction he or she is found. Yet, if the terrorist is hiding in a country like Lebanon, where the Government, such as it is, is powerless to aid in his removal, or in Lybia, where the Government is unwilling, more forceful intervention may be necessary.

This bill provides, in accord with constitutional and international law, the necessary subject matter jurisdiction to prosecute those who attack U.S. personnel abroad. But to obtain personal jurisdiction over the culprit himself, the suspect must first be seized or arrested and brought to the United States to stand trial. Under current constitutional doctrine, both U.S. citizens and foreign nationals can be seized and brought to trial in the United States without violating due process of law. See, for example, Frisbie v. Collins, 342 U.S. 519, 522 (1952); Ferr v. Illinois, 119 U.S. 436 (1886).

It may surprise some to hear that such methods are an appropriate way to bring criminals to trial. If someone is charged or chargeable with an offense and is at liberty in some foreign country, it is an accepted principle of law to take that alleged criminal into custody if necessary and return him to the jurisdiction which has authority to try him. That prosecution and conviction is sustainable and is proper under the laws of the United States and under international law.

This principle has been in effect for almost 100 years, going back to 1886, in the landmark case of Kerr versus Illinois, where the State of Illinois kidnaped a defendant in Peru, a man being charged with a crime in Illinois, and brought him back to Illinois for trial, where he was convicted. The case went to the Supreme Court of the United States and the Supreme Court of the United States said it was appropriate to try that man in Illinois and to convict him notwithstanding the means which were used to bring him back to trial in that jurisdiction.

No country in the world, no country in the history of the development of law, has more rigorous concepts of the due process of law than the United States of America and the U.S. Supreme Court. That doctrine was upheld in an opinion written by Justice Hugo Black, well known for his concern about defendants' rights, in the case of Frisbie versus Collins, handed down by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1952 and upheld in later decisions.

In the Frisbie case, Justice Black stated:

> This court has never departed from the rule announced in Kerr v. Illinois, that the powers of a court to try a person for a crime is not impaired by the fact that he had been brought in the court's jurisdiction by reason of a forceable abduction.

I would suggest to Senators that in dealing with the crime of terrorism, we ought to find the terrorists when we have some reason to believe we know who they are. It requires an investigation. It requires pursuit. It may know who require extradition or, where extradition is not possible, it may require abduction to bring these vicious criminals to trial.

Resort to such tactics will not ordinarily be necessary. The nation where the offender is found may prosecute that person itself or that nation may extradite him or consent to a seizure by U.S. agents within its territory. In the rare instance, however, where there exists in effect no government capable of arresting or prosecuting the offender—and I would suggest that that situation exists in a nation like Lebanon today where there is hardly a government capable of enforcing law and order—in that extreme situation or wherever the terrorists may be found in nations which flagrantly violate international law or harbor international terrorists, then the United States may be compelled to use forceful methods to bring a terrorist to justice. And I would suggest that on a balancing test, that is an appropriate course of conduct.

It is the kind of forceful, effective action that the United States must be in a position to employ where necessary to respond to terrorist attacks against our citizens abroad. The legislation will accomplish that result.

I shall proceed at this juncture to summarize the thrust of this amendment.

The thrust of this amendment would make it a violation of U.S. law for a terrorist to attack, maim, murder, or assault a U.S. citizen anywhere in the world. This amendment is based upon the established principles of international law, that the United States has a sufficient interest or nexus so that even if the act occurred outside the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, judicial jurisdiction would attach in the U.S. courts.

Strange as it may seem, Mr. President, the United States of America could not have proceeded against the terrorists who brutally murdered 240 U.S. marines in Beirut. Strange as it may seem, the United States could not have proceeded against the terrorists who murdered the U.S. citizens in the Vienna and Rome airports. This bill seeks to correct that deficiency and to authorize the prosecution of these terrorists by the courts of the United States.

Mr. President, there is a little-known decision by the Supreme Court of the United States, handed down exactly 100 years ago, in 1886, which sets forth a sound jurisdictional base for this approach. The case was Kerr against Illinois. It involved a situation where Kerr, charged with fraud, had fled to Peru. While he was in Peru, he was arrested by Illinois authorities. You might say that he was abducted or even a harsher categorization would have been kidnapped.

In any event, Kerr was brought back bodily from Peru to Illinois, where he was prosecuted and convicted.

Kerr then challenged his conviction in the Supreme Court of the United States and the conviction was upheld, the Court saying it was appropriate to prosecute Kerr in the courts of the United States of America regardless of how he was brought back for that prosecution.

Later, Peru acquiesced in the United States action but Peru did not do so at the time Kerr was taken into custody.

The Eichmann case is another illustration, where the State of Israel took Eichmann from Argentina without consent by the Argentine Government, without extradition proceedings, and tried and convicted him for heinous crimes and later executed him.

Mr. President, this approach has been the subject of extended hearings. Secretary of State Shultz has testified that under appropriate circumstances, it was his view that it would be appropriate for the United States to take terrorists into custody and bring them back to the United States for trial. Attorney General Meese has testified to a similar effect. Legal counsel Abraham Sofair of the Department of State has given similar testimony.

One illustration of the use of this kind of jurisdiction occurred when the hijackers of the Achille Lauro in the Egyptian airliner were intercepted by U.S. planes and forced down on Italian soil. At that time, there was a disagreement between United States and Italian authorities as to who would take custody of the hijackers. Unfortunately, the Italian authorities got custody.

Had that not been so, those hijackers might have been brought back to the United States for trial under provision 2334 of the omnibus crime control law which made it a crime for any person or group to hijack or take U.S. citizens hostages.

This provision I consider to be eminently sound. The matter of taking these terrorists into custody is a delicate matter, one which we will have to approach with care, caution, and discretion. But in a world where terrorism is such a major problem and the United States has utilized the kind of force which we did in response to Libyan terrorism, this is a much more moderated approach. This is an approach which focuses on individuals who are specifically identified for specific acts, where probable cause has been established, where a warrant of arrest has been issued, where grand jury indictments have been presented in accordance with established principles of law.

It may surprise some to know that at this very moment, there are outstanding indictments out of the U.S. Court for the District of Columbia against the terrorists who hijacked the TWA plane, these terrorists being subject to U.S. jurisdiction because of the 1984 enactment which deals with hostage taking.

Mr. President, I consider this to be a very significant step forward, acquiesced in by my colleagues when this bill received a 29-to-0 vote on February 19. I am joined in sponsorship of this bill by the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. DENTON] and the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY].

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. SPECTER, which incorporates the substance of S. 1429, the Terrorist Prosecution Act, a bill to amend title 18, United States Code, to authorize prosecution of terrorists and others who attack U.S. nationals abroad, a bill which passed the Senate on February 19, 1986, by a vote of 92 to 0.

Mr. President, in reviewing the subject of international terrorism, the Judiciary Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism, which I chair, collected sufficient evidence, through hearings, to conclude that there is more to terrorism than just a series of unrelated violent events perpetrated by several unrelated groups.

There is, for example, a clear pattern of Soviet-supported and equipped insurgencies seeking to destabilize, by revolution, whole regions such as southern Africa, to politicize established religion, such as in Nicaragua and the Middle East, and to export violence against the democratic governments of neighboring states.

The trends are clear. Cooperation among terrorist groups is increasing. In some instances drug money finances the violence. The lethality of the action is becoming greater as more powerful and more sophisticated weapons are employed. There is increasing disregard for the innocent. More diplomats and world leaders are targets. More innocent civilians are made into pawns. U.S. interests are the No. 1 target.

The pattern that emerges from studying the testimony obtained in more than 60 hearings before the Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism, and more recently in joint hearings with the Judiciary Committee and the Foreign Relations Committee, is that terrorism is the most widely practiced form of modern warfare. It is both a major force and a major trend in foreign affairs.

How successful have we been in dealing with terrorist warfare against our commerce, soldiers, diplomats, facilities, leaders, and private citizens? Not very. We in Congress sometimes adopt self-defeating, even contradictory, measures that often put us at odds with our friends and allies. Most people are outraged at the violence of terrorism as depicted by the daily news, but that rage is short lived.

We have come to a point that requires that we establish both a foreign and domestic policy for dealing with the obvious threat.

U.S. policy on terrorism is fragmented and only partially developed. I believe that it is essential that we determine the degree of the threat to our interests, set our goals and objectives, and then develop a policy and commitments. From there, we must explain our policy so that we can build a consensus that will enable us to persevere and to succeed over the long haul.

Terrorism must be dealt with on many fronts and a military response alone will not suffice. First, we must have laws that are sufficient to meet the threat. We must have a mechanism capable of enforcing these laws. We must pursue diplomatic initiatives and our allies must stand firm with us on this issue. We must in the end be prepared to employ a full range of sanctions: legal, diplomatic, economic, and military.

This amendment, which incorporates the substance of S. 1429, will allow for prosecution in the United States of individuals who commit terrorist murders against U.S. nationals abroad. I believe that S. 1429, with the amendments suggested by Senator LEAHY and myself, represents a step forward in our ongoing fight against terrorism.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

THE TERRORIST PROSECUTION ACT OF 1985

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am very pleased to be an original cosponsor of this important amendment. I want to commend Senator SPECTER for his initiative, and Senator DENTON, chairman of the Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism of which I am the ranking member, who worked closely with me on the final draft of this legislation which passed the Senate 92 to 0 on February 19, 1986.

The recent wave of terrorist attacks against Americans overseas has given new urgency to the debate over the proper U.S. response to international terrorism.

The United States needs a comprehensive counterterrorism policy. The cornerstone of that policy must be high-level, sustained diplomatic efforts which address the underlying causes of terrorism.

Part of that policy must be to improve our intelligence, so the discriminate use of force against terrorists who have committed or are about to commit violent acts becomes feasible and legitimate.

And, as this amendment demonstrates, our policy must include laws which provide for the criminal prosecution in the United States of terrorists over whom we can obtain jurisdiction through extradition and other means.

Remarkably, under current law, the murder of U.S. citizens outside our borders, other than of certain Government officials and diplomats, is not a crime.

The Terrorist Prosecution Act will close this serious gap in our arsenal against terrorists, by providing for long jail sentences for individuals who commit or conspire to commit terrorist assaults, murders or kidnapings against Americans abroad.

I am proud to have worked with Chairman DENTON and Senator SPECTER on this amendment which received the strong support of the State and Justice Departments and all members of the Judiciary Committee.

Terrorism will continue to plague us into the future. There are no simple solutions, but we should have every weapon at our disposal. The Terrorism Prosecution Act passed the Senate unanimously earlier this year, and I am confident that it will receive the same overwhelming support today.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations for his comments.

Mr. LUGAR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, as he has pointed out, came before this body in the form of legislation and received a 92 to 0 vote. That affirmation, I think, remains equally as strong presently, perhaps stronger, as we have come to realize the wisdom of the reasoning of the Senator from Pennsylvania and the piece of legislation that he introduced. It is certainly our pleasure to accept the amendment on our side and commend the Senator.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I would like to address the further question if I could to the Senator from Pennsylvania, and that is my recollection is several years ago there was a Chilean national in our country, Letelier, who was killed, assassinated by another Chilean terrorist on our own territory. As I understand this provision, it would mean that if the Chileans had the same law the assassin of Letelier could be tried under Chilean law just as we were able to try him under our law, if my recollection is correct. Is that correct?

Mr. SPECTER. I believe that if Chile has a law applicable within its own territorial jurisdiction, as a matter of international precedents they could assert jurisdiction over the Chilean who committed an offense in the United States against another Chilean, if they could gain custody of that individual, take him to Chile and prosecute him in Chile, entirely consistent with the principles of international law.

Mr. PELL. Following up the thought of taking custody, does that mean they would have to legally take custody, I mean extradite or would it be a question of kidnaping him like the fellow they took to Israel?

Mr. SPECTER. When you ask the question whether they have to legally take custody, that is like the rabbit in the hat. It is legal if the court says it is legal, and the courts have said it is legal regardless of how they gain physical possession of the individual. And that has a very solid legal precedent on moral and philosophical jurisprudential grounds because that individual is then afforded all the procedural protection as Kerr was in the State of Illinois, the right to confront his accusers, under the U.S. law a right to trial by jury, due process of law in the fullest sense of the word.

Now, I do not know what the law of Chile is, but Chile as a nation has the right to establish its own judicial system as it sees fit. The issue of how the defendant gets before the court in the United States is one which the Supreme Court has said is not germane or not determinative and once he is tried and convicted, the individual cannot complain about how he got before the court. But as a matter of basic justice, if we can put our hands on the hijackers of the Achille Lauro, who went to Italy and were let go and it was later decided they should have been prosecuted, if we could find any of these terrorists around the world where we are not constrained as in the circumstances of the Libyan raid to use the kind of force we did, how much wiser it would be to have a more moderate approach to find that specific individual.

When I was district attorney in Philadelphia—and a good many of these ideas come from the experience I had as the district attorney of a city and county—we frequently had people who barricaded themselves within buildings and we had to use force to take them into custody. Was it abduction? Was it forceful? Was it pretty tough? You bet it was. But a lot less tough than a bombing raid. And once you get that person into custody, you try him. You have evidence and you have witnesses and he gets plenty of justice through due process of law.

Mr. EAGLETON. Will the Senator yield for a question on the same point that Senator PELL raised?

Mr. SPECTER. I will.

Mr. EAGLETON. Does the Senator mind if I propounded a question to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PELL. I do not.

Mr. EAGLETON. I heard the Senator's answer to Senator PELL but I do not know that that is directly responsive. I think what Senator PELL has in mind and what I now have in mind is if we have, under Kerr v. Illinois, the right to go into any country in the world and kidnap an individual there who has been duly indicted in an American court and to put our mitts on him by whatever means we decide to do it, bounty hunters, U.S. marshals, with or without the cloak of the law, whoever it may be—that is what Kerr v. Illinois seems to say and that is how we got into Peru—then other countries can get into this same act and under a same kind of theory can come over here and do a little kidnaping of individuals to whisk them back to Chile.

Paraguay seems to like this a little bit. Iran might like this kind of business extraordinarily. Iraq would do a very good job at it. Syria would be no slouch at it. So my question is when you are devising a strong-arm law that gives global strong-arm powers to put the snatch on people, do not others then have the right to structure their laws if they so desire to play the same strong-arm game and to play it on the U.S. ball field?

Mr. SPECTER. I think the distinguished Senator from Missouri is raising a real issue, a real problem, a real concern. But I would say that that is a risk which is worth taking. At the present time, the strong-arm tactics are all on the side of the terrorists. They are not coming to the United States and taking U.S. citizens into custody, but they are taking Mr. Klinghoffer into custody on the Achille Lauro and they are brutally murdering him or they are finding U.S. citizens in the Roman airport and they are brutally murdering them there.

It is not determinative whether a U.S. citizen may be in the United States, in Pennsylvania or Missouri, or may be traveling abroad and is victimized by a terrorist there. We have to take a stand. Now, we have a pretty good defense in the United States if people come here and try to kidnap our citizens but it is not perfect. Within a few feet from where we are standing a bomb went off on November 7, 1983. It was a Monday night. It blew a big hole in the Republican cloakroom windows at that time. So we are subject to problems in this country. But it is similar, I say to the Senator from Missouri, to problems which he and I faced as prosecuting attorneys. I am sure the Senator had the experience many times of victims of crimes who did not want to prosecute because they were afraid that the defendants on bail would seek retribution and their families would be victimized. So that frequently when you seek to enforce the law and take tough actions against criminals, you face the possibility of reprisal.

But what I think we have to do is make a decision about what is appropriate treatment and what risks we are willing to take. I believe that if we could lay our hands on the terrorists who murdered Mr. Klinghoffer or if we could lay our hands on the terrorists who hijacked the TWA plane, we ought to take the chance.

Mr. EAGLETON. A brief rejoinder. I expect my colleague from Rhode Island would permit me to interrupt. I know we are all caught up in this business of terrorism, as we should be—horrible, dirty, filthy, atrocious business. Kerr versus Illinois did not relate to terrorism. It is a 19th century Supreme Court case; is it not?

Mr. SPECTER. That is correct.

Mr. EAGLETON. The person who fled, the fleeing fellow was not a terrorist? What was he?

Mr. SPECTER. Charged with fraud.

Mr. EAGLETON. Fraud. That could be a bum check. Anything on up.

□ 1600

So, if we are going to enunciate this doctrine as an American doctrine, we should be on notice—the people of Philadelphia should be on notice—that other nations could come in and send body snatchers into Philadelphia, into St. Louis, into Providence, RI, and grab people indicted for fraud; writing a bum check over $50—say, $51 in Missouri. It may have been upped to $100, so let us make it a $101 check. Say there is a $101 bum check from Iran on the bank of the shah; a $101 bum check on the Bank of Iraq; a $101 bum check on the Bank of Syria. They are indicted over there. They can come in and grab people out of restaurants, hotels, homes, whatever, in Philadelphia, whisk them back to those countries; and under the doctrine of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that would be legally permissible. That worries me.

Mr. SPECTER. The hypotheticals suggested by the distinguished Senator from Missouri, I would say, are not realistic, but the thrust of what he raises as his concern is, I think; and that is that if you are going to get tough with terrorists, you may be subject to reprisals. But I think that is something we have to be willing to risk, if we are going to be tough with terrorists.

I do not think they are going to come into cities in the United States and kidnap American citizens for bad checks.

Let me add to the distinguished Senator from Missouri the fact that the Kerr decision, an 1886 decision, does not stand by itself. It has been repeatedly upheld, as a matter of legal principle, by the courts in the United States; in a decision in 1950 written by Justice Hugo Black, one of the most noted civil libertarians in the history of the Supreme Court of the United States; and upheld in later decisions by the court of appeals. This approach articulated in the Kerr case is sound.

There is nothing to stop somebody from kidnaping an American citizen in the United States today and taking him to a foreign country, for fraud. That is something which could happen at any time. But I do grant that when we take strong action against terrorists, however we do it, we are going to be subject to risk of retaliation.

It is very much like the victim who testifies in a rape case, the victim who testifies in an assault case. If you want to bring those defendants to justice and be strong and tough it, they may seek to retaliate. But if we are going to have an orderly society, with law and order and justice, that is a risk we have to take.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I think there has been much benefit from this exchange, and we are being educated—I am, in any case. I know of no objection to this amendment on this side of the aisle, and I suggest that we vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EVANS.) Is there further discussion? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2188) was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HELMS and Mr. EAGLETON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HELMS. I yield.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Chair?

Is there still an informal rule that used to be in existence that there be alternating between Republicans and Democrats? I have been sitting here for a good part of an hour. There used to be, in the old days of comity, an unwritten rule that it went from one side of the aisle to the other. Has that been done away with?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no such rule. The rule of the Senate is that the first Senator seeking recognition and recognized by the Chair is the one to be recognized. Of course, a tie may occur. Unfortunately, this Senator just assumed the Chair, and this is my first recognition.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I will be delighted to defer to the Senator from Missouri. He and I have been waiting. I have three amendments which I understand will be accepted.

Mr. President, I defer to the Senator from Missouri, with the understanding that I will follow him.

Mr. EAGLETON. If the amendments will be accepted and can be handled quickly, I will wait.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I had intended to offer an amendment at this time to transfer $10 million from funds available to the United Nations Department of Public Information to fund a coordinated, carefully targeted Interagency Program of Counterterrorism Research and Development.

The Technical Support Group of the Interdepartmental Group on Terrorism, formed at the recommendation of the Inman Commission, has identified major deficiencies in development funding for new techniques to identify and counter potential terrorist attacks. Accordingly, the administration requested an urgent appropriation of $10 million to fund priority programs.

Because of the wide diversity of terrorist threats, as well as the traditional differences in the missions of various Federal agencies, there are significant gaps in technological programs which no individual agency now has responsibility for addressing.

For example, the Federal Aviation Administration is currently developing an explosive detection device for airport use to combat contemporary bombs that defy traditional airport x ray machines, such as that likely used in the recent TWA flight 840 tragedy in which four Americans lost their lives. With some modification, this same technology could be adapted for use in Federal buildings such as the White House, Capitol, State Department, Embassies, et cetera. Yet, FAA's responsibility is airport security, and no agency is charged with taking a broader perspective on interagency needs, so that this potentially life-saving explosive detection device is not being developed for other uses.

I recently wrote to Secretary of State George Schultz urging him to evaluate this technology and its potential application to Embassy security because it is my understanding this kind of advanced technology is not currently being pursued at the State Department, or any other agency outside FAA.

Funding of the counterterrorism research and development plan proposed in this amendment will provide for a focused and coordinated interagency effort to fill these kinds of gaps in combating terrorism.

The funds will be utilized by various agencies according to agreed interagency research priorities for advanced technology applicable to countering terrorism and I understand that $400,000 of the $10 million would go to fund development of a technical plan to meet interagency needs for explosive detection using demonstrated thermal neutron activation technology.

It is extremely important that we develop the ability to anticipate potential terrorist tactics and develop suitable countermeasures before serious incidents occur. The scientific and technical know-how exists, but we lack a funded interagency structure to coordinate these activities and assure that all major technological areas are being addressed. Without this central coordination, there is no certainty that technological evolutions in the terrorist threat will be adequately addressed, or that research areas currently being neglected will be identified and pursued.

I would have proposed that the offset for these urgently needed funds come from the United Nations Department of Public Information. A recent General Accounting Office report that I requested indicates that about half of the media pieces put out by the United Nations Department of Public Information [UNDPI] on topics designated by the Department of State to be important to U.S. interests took positions contrary to U.S. policies and contained biases against the United States. Only one of the items produced during 1983-85 which GAO studied supported our interersts. On May 2, 1986, I wrote Secretary Schultz urging him to withhold U.S. funding for UNDPI until the materials it produces and distributes are less biased against America.

Clearly, our national interests are better served by a coordinated counterterrorism R&D effort than by subsidizing anti-American publications.

International terrorist violence has been largely limited to Europe and the Middle East, but the threat of terrorism within the United States grows more serious each day.

Members of this body in 1984 will not soon forget the explosion that ripped through the wall of the Senate Republican Cloakroom in the Capitol late one evening. The Senate had been scheduled to meet late that night, but had unexpectedly adjourned early. As a result, no one was in the Cloakroom at the time of the explosion, but the near-miss provided dramatic evidence of the reality of the threat even in the U.S. Capitol and the need for more effective security.

I ask unanimous consent that copies of my letters to Secretary Shultz on the explosive detection technology (May 8, 1986) and on the UNDPI—May 2, 1986—be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, May 2, 1986.

Hon. GEORGE P. SHULTZ,
Secretary of State,
Washington, DC.

DEAR GEORGE: I am writing to urge the withholding of United States funding for the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) until the materials it produces and distributes more significantly represents American interests.

A recent General Accounting Office Report that I requested, entitled "United Nations: Analysis of Selected Media Products Shows Half Oppose Key U.S. Interests," has provided important evidence that our positions are being ignored in DPI's literature and productions. DPI is the principal U.N. body engaged in public information activities and is responsible for producing and distributing a variety of media around the world.

The Report indicates that about half of the DPI materials analyzed on areas identified by the Department of State as being important to U.S. interests opposed our interests because they took political positions contrary to U.S. policies and/or contained elements of bias against the United States. The Report also concludes that only one of the items the study used supported U.S. interests.

Given that the United States' contribution to DPI is roughly 25% of its budget, it is critical that our national interests be served by this investment. The GAO study has clearly shown that our interests are not being furthered by DPI and I strongly urge that all U.S. funding for this program be withheld until DPI produces unbiased and fair materials that do not undercut our vital interests.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, May 8, 1986.

Hon. GEORGE P. SHULTZ,
Secretary of State,
Washington, DC.

DEAR GEORGE: I am concerned that advanced technologies capable of comprehensive explosive detection are not being included in the State Department's Embassy Security program. I strongly urge you to investigate Thermal Neutron Activation (TNA) explosive detectors and incorporate them into this program.

As the Inman Commission concluded, security at many of our embassies overseas is very much in doubt, especially in high-risk areas of the Middle East, Europe and Africa. While the Federal Aviation Administration has made important advances in this field, the State Department currently has no in-house development program underway to study TNA technology for inclusion in a comprehensive system of embassy security.

In January of this year, I was able to view a TNA detector which has been demonstrated to be effective in detecting the presence of all known types of explosives in luggage at four major U.S airports. I understand from the Westinghouse Corporation, one of the companies presently engaged in TNA research, that this technology can be modified for embassy or car bomb detection and will serve as an effective deterrent against today's sophisticated terrorists.

I also understand from Westinghouse that the Physical Security Division of the State Department is aware of the capabilities of TNA in identifying explosive compounds, but there has been no effort to utilize this technology.

I strongly urge you to evaluate TNA and implement this potentially life-saving system into the State Department's plan to enhance embassy security.

My best.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I appreciate knowing of the Senator's interest in this issue. I will certainly keep his views in mind when we are in conference with the House of Representatives. As the committee stated in its report accompanying the urgent supplemental appropriations bill, we were concerned that much of this work is already being done in other parts of the Government. However, the Senator has made a good point about the need for interagency cooperation in the area of counterterrorism research and development. While I am not in a position to agree to a figure at this time, I fully expect funding will be made available for at least a portion of this request in 1986. At the same time, I understand his interest in pursuing research and development of explosive detection using demonstrated thermal neutron activation technology and I expect the interagency task force will give every consideration to a research proposal in this area.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire for indicating his support for funding of a program for interagency counterterrorism research and development and his expectation that at least a portion of the $10 million can be included in the urgent supplemental for fiscal year 1986. Moreover, I appreciate his positive statement about pursuit of demonstrated thermal neutron activation technology for interagency explosive detection needs. In light of these remarks, I am withholding this amendment.

Mr. President, this matter has been discussed between the staffs, and my only request of the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee would be to consider this matter in conference, with the request of this Senator that the Senator might accede to the higher figure. It is important for this research and development. But I shall not press the amendment at this time. I seek only to ask for that consideration by the distinguished chairman.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his consideration. We are sensitive to the argument being made and will give it every consideration.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the Senator from North Carolina for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. HELMS. I yield.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the flow of Senate activity.

This Senator was advised that at 4 o'clock this afternoon, no later than 4, we would be going about the business of setting aside the bill before us so that the Senate would have an opportunity to work its will on the urgent supplemental appropriation.

I have talked to the majority leader and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee about this. The supplement appropriations is a tremendously important bill, and in my opinion we must get it passed this evening sometime.

Important as the measure is before us, I am wondering if there is any information that could be imparted to this Senator as to when we will take up the urgent supplemental appropriation. Does the Chair have any knowledge of that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no agreement to take up the urgent supplemental appropriation at 4 o'clock. The Chair has no knowledge as to precisely when that will be taken up.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to assist the Chair by saying that we have had great cooperation from the majority leader and the minority leader, and we are not going to abuse that.

It appears that there are three amendments by the Senator from North Carolina which will be agreed to. The minority leader will have amendments, and I suspect that we will accommodate those rapidly. To my knowledge, that will end the amending process, and we can move to final passage. I am pleasantly surprised by events at this point.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Senator.

AMENDMENT NO. 2189

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] proposes an amendment numbered 2189.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. . (a) ESTABLISHMENT UNDER INSPECTOR GENERAL ACT.—(1) Section 2(1) of the Inspector General Act of 1978 is amended by inserting "the United States Information Agency," immediately before "the Veterans' Administration".

(2) Section 11 of such act is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1) by inserting "or the Director of the United States Information Agency" immediately before "as the case may be;" and

(B) in paragraph (2) by inserting "the United States Information Agency" immediately before "or the Veterans' Administration".

(b) Of the funds authorized to be appropriated to the United States Information Agency for the fiscal year 1987, not less than $5 million shall be available only for the operation of the office of the Inspector General established by subsection (a) of this section.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I will be brief. All three amendments that I shall offer have been cleared on both sides, I understand.

Last year, the Senate approved a measure creating an independent inspector general at the U.S. Information Agency under, of course, the Inspector General Act of 1978.

The USIA has been plagued with numerous difficulties, which I do not think need repetition here today. These difficulties have hampered American efforts to sell American foreign policy overseas. Some have argued that the Agency has become excessively politicized, but I would like to reiterate the Senate decision of last year by offering this amendment, to try once again to solve a problem that the Senate already identified at USIA.

The amendment earmarks a small amount of funds for fiscal year 1987 for startup costs for the new office. It is quite small in comparison with the total Agency's budget.

I emphasize that it is earmarking and not an additional expense. But it will provide a large return if it succeeds in identifying management problem at USIA. After all USIA and State are the only major agencies which do not have an independent IG. State has a mandate under law, but USIA does not even have a mandate. This amendment will correct this oversight.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, the amendment does indeed affirm Senate policy. On our side, we are prepared to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. LUGAR. I understand that the other side of the aisle is prepared to accept the amendment, so there is no further debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2189) was agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

□ 1610

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

AMENDMENT NO. 2190, AS MODIFIED

(Purpose: To provide for an independent Inspector General for the Department of State)

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send another amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] proposes an amendment numbered 2190.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 129, after line 3, add the following new section:

SEC. 702. INDEPENDENT INSPECTOR GENERAL FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

(a) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.—Of the funds authorized to be appropriated for the Department of State for the fiscal years 1986 and 1987, 2,000,000 for the fiscal year 1986 and 12,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987 shall be available only for the operations and activities of the Inspector General for the Department of State, appointed by the President under section 3 of the Inspector General Act of 1978, to conduct those activities specified in section 209(g) of the Foreign Service Act of 1980, as such section was in effect before the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) ABOLITION OF PROGRAM INSPECTOR GENERAL.—(1) Section 209 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 and section 150(b) of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1986 and 1987, are repealed.

(2) Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall reassign the personnel and dispose of the property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations which were used by or available for use by the office of the Program Inspector General before the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) PROHIBITION ON USE OF FOREIGN SERVICE MEMBERS.—(1) No member of the Foreign Service, as defined by section 103 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980, shall be appointed Inspector General for the Department of State.

(2) No career member of the Foreign Service may participate in the recruitment, selection, or recommendation of any individual to be appointed by the President as Inspector General for the Department of State.

On page 91, in the table of contents, after the item relating to section 701, insert the following new item:

"Sec. 702. Independent Inspector General for the Department of State.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, Congress mandated an independent—and I underscore the word "independent"—inspector general at the State Department last year despite objections from the Career Foreign Service who believe that nothing should ever be publicly known about certain activities.

Now, the fact is—and I regret to say it—that the State Department has dragged its feet for the past year and has declined to carry out the law. They are trying very hard to cripple the independent inspector general office which they have yet to establish after a year by limiting it to audits, and that certainly was not the congressional intent.

The GAO has reported time and time again showing the urgent need for an independent inspector general. I do not believe we should allow the State Department to go forward with this massive budget expansion for embassy security without protecting the taxpayer by getting in place the inspector general office that we mandated last year.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I wish to pose a question to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

It is my understanding that the amendment now has deleted three words in the language of lines 14, 15, and 16, and all of line 17.

Mr. HELMS. I would be ready to accept that, I say to my friend.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, we are prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, on this side, too, we accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I have agreed with the managers of the bill to remove a legislative prohibition from the amendment against the assignment of Foreign Service personnel to the IG office at the State Department. I have done so because it is in fact redundant. The independent IG at the State Department must be, under the IG Act of 1978, in complete control of the personnel in his office including their hiring, continued employment, and promotion. If those who are the subject to the audit and evaluation activities of the inspector general are in any way in charge of the hiring, firing, promotion, or any other supervisory authority over the personnel in the inspector general's office, it undermines the intention of Congress and the independence of the office under the 1978 act.

Nothing would prevent a member of the Foreign Service from serving in the office of the inspector general should that member be hired by the IG as an independent decision. That would require the IG to offer permanent employment in his office to that member of the Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Without objection, the amendment (No. 2190) was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2191, AS MODIFIED

(Purpose: To prohibit the use of funds for facilities in Israel, Jerusalem, or the West Bank, and for other purposes)

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send a third amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated. This amendment is cosponsored by the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. HECHT], the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS], and the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], for himself, Mr. HECHT, Mrs. HAWKINS, and Mr. BOSCHWITZ, proposed an amendment numbered 2191.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 129, after line 3, add the following new section:

SEC. 702. PROHIBITION ON THE USE OF FUNDS FOR FACILITIES IN ISRAEL, JERUSALEM, OR THE WEST BANK.

None of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this Act may be obligated or expended for site acquisition, development, or construction of any facility in Israel, Jerusalem, or the West Bank, except that $83,423,000 shall be available for site acquisition, development, or construction in Israel of a chancery and residence within five miles of the Israeli Knesset building and within the boundaries of Israel as they existed before June 1, 1967. "Provided, That nothing in this section shall require the construction of any facility if the Secretary of State determines and reports to the Congress that the physical security of personnel to be employed at that facility cannot be adequately guaranteed."

On page 91, in the table of contents, after the item relating to section 701, insert the following new item:

"Sec. 702. Prohibition on the use of funds for facilities in Israel, Jerusalem, or the West Bank.".

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, a brief background on this amendment and then we can put it to a vote.

As I stated earlier, I believe it has been agreed to, including the modification, by both sides.

The background is that the Diplomatic Security and Anti-Terrorism Act of 1986, which is H.R. 4151, includes a line item authorization of $857,800,000 for "acquisition and maintenance of buildings abroad" at 75 posts.

The State Department presentation to the Foreign Relations Committee proposes to spend $83,423,000 for the acquisition, development, and construction of a new U.S. Embassy complex in Tel Aviv and $41,083,000 for a new West Bank consulate in Jerusalem. The West Bank consulate is an independent representational office which, of course, reports directly to the Secretary of State and not to the U.S. Ambassador to Israel.

Mr. President, the construction of a new Embassy in Tel Aviv is an affirmative act which assumes that there will never be an outcome to the Middle East peace negotiations which acknowledges Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. Yet for historic, political, and religious reasons, it is inconceivable, at least for this Senator, that Israel would ever remove the key functions of its Government from Jerusalem. Nevertheless, once $142.5 million have been spent on new U.S. diplomatic buildings to set the status quo in concrete, it is no longer credible that the United States might one day recognize Jerusalem as the Israeli capital.

By building these complexes, we are saying to Israel that we can conceive of no outcome to the peace negotiations which would allow us to have our Embassy in Jerusalem. I do not think we want to say this, Mr. President. By constructing the new buildings, the United States will change the status quo, and put the United States firmly on the side of those who do not recognize the right of Israel to exist, and who will not accept U.N. Resolution 242.

But unless Congress acts now, the State Department will proceed with site acquisition in Tel Aviv in October. H.R. 4152 gives the State Department the authority to proceed.

Previously, representatives of the State Department have always held that any change in the status quo would prejudge the outcome of negotiations. Thus the consulate in what was formerly East Jerusalem under Jordanian occupation was to be maintained as a separate entity to demonstrate that the United States was neutral as to the outcome of peace negotiations. Similarly, it was held that to move the Embassy to Jerusalem would be recognition of Israel's proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, and would prejudge the future status of Jerusalem. But by acquiring new sites for the West Bank consulate in Jerusalem and the Embassy in Tel Aviv, the State Department upsets the fiction that the present locations are contingent upon the outcome of peace negotiations. By changing contingency to permanency, the whole character of the status quo is changed.

My amendment is carefully drawn to overcome previous objections. It provides the following:

First, it prohibits construction of a new West Bank consulate, since such construction would change the status quo, and would be redundant when a new Embassy is built in Jerusalem.

Second, it prohibits construction of a new Embassy in Tel Aviv, for the same reasons.

Third, it makes available $83,423,000 for the construction of a new Embassy complex, provided the site meets the following criteria: first, it is 5 miles from the Knesset building, and second, it is within the boundaries of Israel as they existed before June 1, 1967.

By adopting this formula, the amendment avoids mandating that the Embassy actually be in Jerusalem, and it avoids situating the Embassy in any site that would recognize the territorial changes that resulted from the 1967 war. The Knesset building itself is in a new part of the city, and well within the pre-1967 line. Thus only those who deny the right of Israel to exist could object to the United States action.

In the past, Mr. President, it was argued that the congressional proposals on moving the Embassy to Tel Aviv would trespass upon the constitutional prerogative of the President to conduct foreign policy and that the move itself would adversely affect the security of our other Embassies in the Middle East. Neither of these objections pertain to this amendment now pending.

The administration itself has raised the issue and sent it to Congress for action.

Moreover, my amendment is not mandatory. It merely restricts construction in Israel to the appropriate site if the administration chooses to act.

Finally, the security objection itself cannot be sustained in view of the fact that this bill itself is intended to raise security at all of our Embassies at a level sufficient to withstand terrorism.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the State Department program submission for Jerusalem and Tel Aviv be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ACQUISITION AND MAINTENANCE OF BUILDINGS ABROAD (REGULAR)

1986 SECURITY SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES—1987 CAPITAL PROJECT SUMMARY/OUTYEAR COSTS

Project: New Chancery Compound.
Location: Israel, Tel Aviv.
Funds: Total, $83,423,000.
Post Profile: Chancery/Annex Occupancy.

	Americans		Foreign nationals		Total

Existing facilities	81,000	58,000
Proposed facilities	120,000	78,000
Difference	39,000	20,000

Narrative Description: The Embassy in Tel Aviv is faced with continued substantial security threats. The present Chancery is located in the center of the congested commercial district of the city with no security set-back from the surrounding streets. The building is now extremely vulnerable to terrorist or mob violence.

The Chancery does not have adequate space for requirements of all the U.S. agencies now in Israel. To adequately consolidate all U.S. Government offices into one Chancery compound to meet space program demands and security and structural designs objectives, it will be necessary to acquire an alternate site in Tel Aviv of 10-acres for construction of a 120,000 square foot office building compound. The new building will include space for additional staff, Marine Guard Residence (11,000 sq. ft.) and the personnel currently housed in leased properties.

Narrative Description: The Consulate General in Jerusalem is faced with continued substantial security threats. The Consulate General is in two compounds, West Jerusalem and East Jerusalem. None of the Consulate buildings meets current security standards primarily due to the total lack of setback from streets.

To consolidate all Government offices into one compound to meet security and structural design objectives, it will be necessary to acquire a new site of 5 acres and construction of a 33,500 square foot building. The projected space requirements includes a Marine Guard Residence and USIA offices presently located in leased properties.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I would like to address a question to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina. In the amendment as he presented it to us and I think indicated it was modified were the words "providing nothing in this section shall require the construction of any facility unless the Secretary of State determines and reports to the Congress physical security of personnel employed at the facility cannot be adequately guaranteed."

Mr. HELMS. I say to the Senator he is absolutely correct, I would accept that modification.

Mr. LUGAR. I thank the Senator, and we are prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, this side of the aisle has no objection. We are glad to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, in interest of time again, just for the record, I ask unanimous consent to be able to extend my remarks in connection with this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this modification makes no change in my amendment. My amendment does not require the construction of any new facility anywhere. It merely prohibits the construction of an embassy in Tel Aviv. It makes funds available to construct an embassy near the Knesset building if the State Department wishes to.

I presume, Mr. President, that the State Department would not build any embassy or consulate in which our diplomats would be unsafe. I doubt that it is the intention of the distinguished chairman to suggest that a new embassy near the Knesset, built with modern antiterrorist construction, would be less secure than our old Embassy in Tel Aviv, situated as it is in an ordinary office building on a busy street.

It should be noted that the State Department did contemplate spending $41 million on a new West Bank consulate complex in Jerusalem. If a 41-million-dollar building in Jerusalem would be safe, then certainly an 83-million-dollar building would be safe. It would be very extraordinary indeed if the Secretary of State gratuitously declared that it would be unsafe to build a facility in Jerusalem after having submitted plans to build a smaller facility there. It would be very cynical indeed to try to pretend that we could not protect our diplomats in Jerusalem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment (No. 2191) was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, let me extend my gratitude to the managers of the bill for their excellent cooperation.

Mr. LUGAR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HELMS. I thank them very much.

NOMINATION OF DANIEL A. MANION, OF INDIANA, TO BE U.S. CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I have been in the Senate now for close to 18 years and today has been one of the strangest of those 18 years.

Whether anyone knows it or not, we are in the midst of a filibuster, Mr. President.

A filibuster is where a Senator or group of Senators get up and speak at an unusual length on a given issue, talking on and on and on, and those who think they have talked too long file a thing called cloture to cut off that inordinate extended debate. Then at a time certain there is a vote on cloture and if 60 Senators vote to cut off the debate, that ends it, more or less, subject to the ad nauseam Allen-type amendments.

The purpose of my remarks at this time, Mr. President, are not to talk about the Senate rule, not to talk about the filibuster, but just to alert the country that we are in one, and it is most unusual that those who would normally be considered to be the filibusterers, those who are against the elevation from obscurity of Daniel Manion of South Bend, IN to the court that is right below the Supreme Court of the United States, the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals, those who are considered the filibusterers do not have any time to speak with respect to Manion. We are going to vote tomorrow to cut off debate without any debate having occurred.

There is a reason for it, Mr. President. There is a reason for it.

The Daniel Manion record as an attorney cannot withstand the focus of public attention and cannot withstand the focus of television attention.

□ 1620

You see, Mr. President, after we return from our July recess, if we are still on the Daniel Manion matter, we are off the air. We are off the air and all we will have are some live bodies in the gallery and a few sleepy-eyed reporters up there in the box that really do not write anything down. They are just serving their time up there from 9 to 5 pretending to write things down, But we are off the air.

And that's fine with those who are in favor of Mr. Manion going to this court, which, as I say, is right below the Supreme Court of the United States. They want it off the air. They want the Manion nomination to be kept as the most tightly guarded secret in America, next only I guess to star wars or some other top secret item that might be before the Intelligence Committee or the Armed Services Committee.

I am not gleefully happy to talk here today about Daniel Manion, attorney at law, from South Bend, IN, but I have to. I have to. Let me tell you why.

I had not been focusing an enormous amount of attention on the Manion nomination until about 2 weeks ago. I read, I think, two editorials that had been written about him. One of them I remember was in the New York Times. I cannot remember where the second one was. I do recall the New York Times editorial.

Mr. Daniel Manion sent word that he would like to see me. I thought, as a courtesy, it would be fine if I saw Mr. Manion. We had an interview. He is a pleasant man. He seems to be, in terms of civility and demeanor, a rather nice gentleman. We had a rather pleasant, if at times innocuous, conversation.

But I remembered reading in that New York Times editorial about some briefs he had written while practicing law. So I asked him about those briefs. He did not seem to want to pursue that part of the conversation very much. But as we parted, I said, "Well, Mr. Manion, I have not read those briefs but I'm going to read them and if I think they ought to be read by some other people, I'm going to send them to other people for their evaluation." And that is how the meeting ended. As I say, that took place a couple or so weeks ago.

Mr. President, I now have read those briefs and I sent those briefs to some of the most distinguished attorneys in the United States. I must say, in all sadness, but in all candor, the evaluation of those five or six briefs is that they are somewhere between awful and deplorable. My own personal evaluation, for what it is worth, is that I would give about three of them an outright F, meaning flunk; and I would give three maybe a friendly D-minus, hoping to encourage the student to do a little better the next time.

I have sat on moot courts in various law schools in this country, Mr. President—and I am sure other Members in this body who are attorneys have also sat on moot court competition or moot courts at Harvard Law School, St. Louis University, or Washington University.

A moot court competition, which is for freshmen law students at the end of the first year, goes something like this: A topic is thrown up for grabs and one of the young students takes the plaintiff's side, the other takes the defendant's side, and they write up the briefs and they argue before you. They submit the briefs in writing, of course and they orally argue the case and use the briefs as part of the oral argument.

Had those Manion briefs, to which I will make some reference now, been submitted to me in any of these moot court endeavors, I would have had to say to the student, the freshman law student:

> Young man or young lady, you have got to go back to the drawing board on this brief. You haven't got the right message. You haven't delivered it in the right way. You don't seem to have a grasp of the law. You don't seem to understand the legal issues that are involved in this case.

But my opinion is not all that important. It is pretty important to me; it is going to determine how I vote. But the opinion of some other people, Mr. President, is a lot more important.

I would like to share with you—and I will put the full letters in the RECORD—excerpts from the letters of some very distinguished attorneys to whom I sent the Manion briefs with a request they evaluate them and tell me what they say about Mr. Manion's qualifications to serve on the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

I will just read some excerpts. As I say, I will put the letters in their entirety in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

I will start with this one from Sheldon Elsen. Sheldon Elsen is a professor of law at Columbia University, and he is chairman of the committee on Federal courts for the Association of the Bar of the city of New York. He also was a member of the President's Commission on Enforcement and the Administration of Justice, back in 1967. Here is what Professor Elsen, who is the chairman of this committee on the Federal courts for the New York City bar, said about the Manion briefs:

> These briefs vary in quality, depending in part on the complexity of the issue. None are better than mediocre and those which are relatively more complicated, that is, where the issues are not immediately apparent, are quite bad, indeed, opaque, confused, and rambling.

Next, I received a letter from Mr. Cyrus Vance. Cyrus Vance was the Secretary of State in the Carter administration, a nationally recognized attorney, general counsel for the Defense Department in earlier years, the senior partner of one of the most prestigious law firms in the United States, Simpson Thacher, at One Battery Park Plaza, NY. Here is what Cy Vance had to say after reading the Manion briefs:

> Individually and collectively, these briefs are barely adequate. They are far below the standard of legal analysis and writing required of a federal appellate judge. Two of the briefs (Lindower and State of Indiana) are poorly organized, wordy, and hard to follow. Their arguments do not match. All of the briefs suffer from inadequate attention to spelling, grammar, and syntax.

Continuing with Mr. Vance:

> The generally flaccid reasoning in the briefs does not put the client's case in the strongest favorable light and frequently fails to address the important arguments to the contrary.
>
> These briefs, in sum, do not display the learning, intellectual rigor or persuasive power which should characterize the work of a federal appellate judge.

So writes Mr. Vance.

The next evaluation comes from Mr. Archibald Cox. Mr. Cox, as most people know, is a professor at Harvard Law School, served as Solicitor General of the United States and also served as the Watergate prosecutor for a while—I wish he had served a longer while.

But, in any event, the office of Solicitor General is that office in the Department of Justice that presents the Government's appellate briefs to the Supreme Court of the United States and then makes the oral arguments before the Supreme Court based on those briefs. No one would be in a better position to evaluate the quality of legal briefs than would individuals who served as either the Solicitor General or worked in that office. Here is what Mr. Cox says after reading the Manion briefs:

> Yet even though the five cases were undemanding, the briefs, taken as a group, exhibit none of the skills in accurate legal analysis and clear and precise expression required to serve usefully as a judge on a U.S. Court of Appeals. On the contrary, the briefs contain much evidence of muddiness of both thought and expression.

Then another paragraph from Professor Cox's evaluation.

> The briefs as a group leave me—as I have said—with the conviction that Mr. Manion is not qualified to be a judge in the United States Court of Appeals. They evidence little capacity for pulling the key legal questions out of even rather simple facts, and for then stating clearly both the question and the disposition that he advocates. They accordingly suggest that he would be quite incapable of dealing effectively with the far more complex factual situations and issues of law that come before a U.S. Court of Appeals.

The next letter, Mr. President, is from Prof. Lawrence Tribe, one of the most highly recognized constitutional scholars and appellate advocates on the current seat; Harvard Law School professor, author of American Constitutional Law, and other treatises on the law. Here are the Tribe excerpts, again critiquing the Manion briefs.

> I have read the five briefs you submitted. I had in fact read several of them before, and could hardly believe that any one would submit them as evidence of legal ability.

I will insert parenthetically that Mr. Manion submitted these briefs to the Judiciary Committee as examples of his best legal work. He was asked to send in five of his best briefs. He was free to pick them out. Mr. Manion sent in five of these as his best. A sixth brief came to the Judiciary Committee surreptitiously, that is, over the transom in the dark of the night, anonymously, no fingerprints, no lettering. But it was not one of Manion's best. I will have a little more to say about it. It has to be the worst of the worst.

71-059 O-87-20 (Pt. 11)

Returning to Professor Tribe's letter:

> Learning that Mr. Manion regards them as his best work leaves me with a particularly sad feeling about the qualities of mind and scholarship that they reflect.

Continuing from Professor Tribe:

> • • • the burden should be on the President and on the nominee to persuade the Senate that it is not being asked simply to rubberstamp a purely ideological choice by the Chief Executive. But, in Mr. Manion's case, one unfortunately does not even reach the issue of excellence, since the briefs he has written provide convincing evidence of pervasive mediocrity and, to be quite frank, legal ineptitude of the first order.

I am a pretty blunt person, Mr. President. But I do not think I have ever been as blunt as that—"to be quite frank, legal ineptitude of the first order."

Continuing further with Professor Tribe:

> • • • the briefs are characterized by so shallow a command both of legal doctrine and of argumentation as to suggest a virtually complete absence of significant legal capacity.

How about that? "A virtually complete absence of significant legal capacity."

The next evaluation I have, Mr. President, is from Mr. Lloyd Cutler, senior partner of one of the biggest law firms in Washington, DC, maybe even the whole country, Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering. Here is what Mr. Cutler has to say about Mr. Manion's briefs:

> But based on my review of the briefs he submitted to the committee, I do not believe he possesses the capacity for legal analysis and exposition or the degree of carefulness required for appointment to the Federal bench, especially the Federal appellate bench. If these briefs had been submitted to me by an applicant for a junior position in our law firm, I would have voted against offering him a place. If these briefs fairly reflect Mr. Manion's capacities, I believe he falls well below the minimum standards of eligibility for an Article IV judge. Since it has been suggested that opposition to Mr. Manion's appointment is based on his conservative views, I should perhaps add that I have no knowledge or opinion concerning any such views, nor do I regard them as grounds for disqualification. I would not oppose any well-qualified nominee such as Justice Rehnquist or Judge Scalia on such a ground. My partner, John Pickering, former President of the District of Columbia Bar and the District's current State Delegate to the American Bar Association, has also reviewed the briefs, and he shares my opinion.

Next, Mr. President, former Dean Irwin Griswold, Harvard Law School, former Solicitor General of the United States, practicing Republican, and in the opinion of many lawyers the finest appellate lawyer in the United States. I asked a professor over the phone just the other day, I said, "Who is the John W. Davis of America today? I want to send these briefs to the modern John W. Davis." John W. Davis was the 1924 Democratic Presidential nominee. He had been Solicitor General in the Cabinet of President Wilson, and then later founded the firm of Davis & Polk. He was one of the finest appellate lawyers this country has ever known, as my colleague from Mississippi, Senator STENNIS, well remembers and well acknowledges. So this professor said, "Well, I guess Irwin Griswold is probably the closest we have today to being the modern John W. Davis."

So I packaged up the Manion briefs and sent them down to Dean Griswold. I still call him dean. I said, "Give me your evaluation." Here is what he writes back, just a few excerpts, on the Manion briefs.

> Turning to the substance of the briefs, the thing that strikes me is that they are all quite without distinction in organization, in clarity of expression, or in the effective use of authorities. I do not think that I can say they are bad briefs, but I can say that in my judgment they are not very good. Using law school terminology, I would say they were all "C" work. They would merit a passing grade, but they would not approach even the moderate distinction of being a "B" rank.

Another paragraph from Dean Griswold:

> In view of the finality of nearly all courts of appeals decisions, a good case may be made for the proposition that the same standards should be used in the confirmation of courts of appeals judges as is used with respect to appointments to the Supreme Court. At least there should be a considerable showing of experience and ability well above the ordinary. This seems to me to be entirely lacking with respect to Mr. Manion.

To repeat:

> This seems to me to be entirely lacking with respect to Mr. Manion.

Mr. President, there are some very strong words in those letters, strong words written by some very, very distinguished scholars, distinguished appellate lawyers and distinguished members of the bar. It takes a great deal of courage for one practicing the law to put these words on paper realizing that the Jimmy the Greek odds are that somewhere along the line Daniel Manion will squeak through with 52 to 53 votes and then serve the rest of his natural life on the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals out there in the Midwest.

Many of these lawyers have a national practice, have offices in Chicago, Los Angeles, and Texas, and Lord knows where, have matters that will in time come before the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals out there in Chicago. And, hence, it takes a great deal of courage for a legal practitioner, knowing that he and his firm may be before a court, to speak with such directness and such bluntness about the intellectual incapacity of one to serve on the appellate court.

□ 1640

I very seldom take the floor, Mr. President, to give a speech. Senator STENNIS remembers in my first couple of years I guess I was over here twice a day, speaking on Vietnam—at least twice a day, 5 days a week. We took the weekend off. Then the rest of my time was devoted to an attempt to cut the Pentagon budget. But it took so many years to get out of Vietnam and it was such a futile attempt to cut the Pentagon budget that in my later years I did not frequent the Senate floor as much as in my more ebullient younger days.

But I felt with respect to this issue that I had to.

There are 60 lawyers in the U.S. Senate. Each and every one of them takes an oath when he or she becomes a member of whatever State bar it is, that he or she is going to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. And even the 40 nonlawyers in the Senate, all of us, all 100 of us, take an oath when we become Members of this body to support and defend the Constitution of the United States.

The way the Constitution of the United States is defended and the way it is protected is by men of great wisdom, men and women of great wisdom, serving on our courts, our trial courts, our appellate courts, in this instance the court of appeals, and then the ultimate of ultimates, the Supreme Court. We rely on their intellect, their capacity, and their wisdom to render judgments on the laws and on the Constitution, sometimes to render unpopular opinions, sometimes to exhibit the most extraordinary of courage against the currents of the time, whatever those political currents might be.

So those jobs must only go to the best and the brightest. That should be the test. We have never adopted the Roman Hruska mediocrity test. It was offered at one time in a debate with respect to Judge Carswell, the elevation of Carswell to the Supreme Court of the United States back in 1970.

Senator Hruska, of Nebraska, said on March 17: "Well," speaking of Carswell, "even if he were mediocre, there are a lot of mediocre judges and people and lawyers, and they are entitled to a little representation, aren't they? We cannot have all Brandeises, Frankfurters, and Cardozas."

We rejected the Hruska mediocrity test. We said, there may be a lot who are mediocre. Yes, there are. There are too damn many of them, Mr. President. There are a lot of mediocre lawyers. There are a lot of awful lawyers, too damn many of them.

This May and June, 39,000 law students have graduated to enter the practice of law, more than the profession can absorb, more than the profession needs, and probably half of them with less than the talent they need to practice law.

So, yes, there are a lot of mediocre lawyers around. But we do not say that the mediocre lawyers are entitled to their proportionate share of slots on the Supreme Court of the United States and the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals. If half of the lawyers in this country are mediocre, and one could have a debate on that, then are we to preserve four of the nine slots on the Supreme Court of the United States for the mediocre and five for the superior?

We would have to have two confirmation proceedings. The President would have to nominate saying, "I hereby nominate Mediocre Joe for a mediocre slot and use the mediocre test when you confirm."

Then when he has somebody who is good, like Scalia, who is really good, he would say, "I hereby nominate him for one of the superior slots."

We do not want such a system.

The Federal court should have the highest test in terms of talent, integrity, background, capacity, skill. If you heard those quotes I read from those very distinguished scholars and attorneys, Daniel Manion flunks the test by every measure.

This is no small job we are talking about. This nomination may not make headlines in Los Angeles or in Miami or in Fairbanks, AK. But a lifetime appointment on the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals is a very, very important position for life.

One thing about judges, when they put on a black robe: They live forever. There is something about a black robe that is good for the blood flow.

So Daniel Manion, who is in his early forties—44—will probably be on the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals when some grandsons of current Members of the U.S. Senate are first elected to the U.S. Senate. These guys go a long time.

If you make a mistake, it is a lifetime mistake. There is no "Oops."

When you see these opinions that he has written and the problems he has with the English language and grammar, or more importantly, with pursuings a clear line of thought, you have to think what kind of judge he'd be.You cannot go back once the decision is made and say, "Hey, we would like to have a second chance."

These briefs, upon which I have laid great emphasis, are the closest thing we have to judge the quality of this man and to determine what kind of appellate judge he would be if confirmed. A legal brief marshals the facts, marshals the law, and lays it all out in a clear analytical way to guide the court in coming up with a decision.

A brief reflects how a lawyer thinks. It reflects how he analyzes. It reflects how he approaches the law. It reflects how he fits the facts with the law. It reflects how he reasons. It reflects how he writes.

By all of these tests, by all of those reflections, Daniel Manion of South Bend, IN, a nice gentleman, is a gentleman who does not belong on the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

I do not know the precise legal system out in South Bend, IN. I presume they have a trial court, and then an intermediate appellate court, and probably a Supreme Court of Indiana, whatever they call it.

As I read the Manion briefs, and, indeed, as these other gentlemen have read the Manion briefs, Daniel Manion is what is called in the legal trade a small claims lawyer. There is nothing wrong with that. There are a lot of small individuals, small corporations, that have small claims, and require legal representation. There is nothing wrong with that. It is a necessary function of American society.

But that has been the sum total of Daniel Manion's practice of the law. That is the limit of his legal knowledge and his legal competence.

That is not the requisite knowledge and not the record of experience that is demanded for service on the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

□ 1650

Some of Manion's supporters have said, "Well, he will learn. He will learn." They argue that if confirmed as a member of the court of appeals, Mr. Manion will learn about Federal law while deciding cases and that his writing will, in time, improve.

My lord, what a testimonial. It says, confirm this man, confirm this man and let him learn later the law that he will need to know as a Federal judge in a Federal court. Then he will learn how to write so that people can read his opinions and try to figure out what it is that the opinion holds.

Not good enough, Mr. President, not good enough.

I conclude with a true story. It happened in this body before JOE BIDEN was here, before DAN EVANS was here, but while RUSSELL LONG and JOHN STENNIS were here.

We had a marvelous one-term Senator in this body named Williman Spong of Virginia. He served one term. Bill Spong and I, and as I recall, FRITZ HOLLINGS, sat over there, sort of in left field, near the foul line, right up at the wall.

We had the Carswell nomination before the Senate, one of the most hard-fought battles that I can remember. It was back in 1970. It was a tough, tough fight.

Carswell was from the South. Bill Spong was from Virginia, obviously below the Mason-Dixon line. As this debate went on, Bill Spong, marvelous legal scholar that he was—when he left here, he later became the dean of William and Mary Law School—became very concerned. He said to me one day, "You won't see me for a week." I said, "Yes, what gives with you?"

He said, "I have gotten hold of every opinion that Carswell has written as an appellate judge."

Carswell made it to his court of appeals and he was being promoted. When you get on a court of appeals, it isn't necessarily the last stop—you can get promoted upward. Carswell made it to whatever that court of appeals is down South. So there were some printed decisions.

Bill Spong got hold of every typewritten decison or memorandum that Carswell had entered as a Federal district judge, Not all of those were printed. Some were typewritten. But he got all of them. A big batch of stuff.

He went away for a week. And I remember it as if it were yesterday. I was in my chair in the Senate. Spong came through those double doors over there and sat down next to me.

I said, "Bill, tell me, what do you know? What are you going to do?"

In his quiet, cryptic way, Spong answered, "Tom, he is not fit. Tom, he is not fit."

That is all he said. He had read all those opinions, read all those memorandums of opinion. And, as a first-rate lawyer, he made a judgment that G. Harold Carswell was not fit for a lifetime on the Supreme Court. In so doing, Bill Spong, with knowledge aforethought, committed political suicide.

He knew, as the only Mason-Dixon Senator to vote against G. Harold Carswell—and he was the only one—that he was committing political suicide.

They talk about "Profiles in Courage." As far as I am concerned, Bill Spong's vote was the highest profile in political courage I have ever seen.

Mr. President, if Bill Spong can give up a seat in the U.S. Senate because he thought keeping an unqualified person off the Supreme Court was important to the Republic, then I hope that my 99 colleagues at least will take a look at the Manion nomination for the court out there in Chicago, IL., another lifetime position.

You do not have to be a profile in courage on this one. All you have to be is a profile in good judgment, a profile in prudence, a profile in intellectual integrity. That is what a Senator has to do on this nomination.

Mr. President, before yielding, I ask unanimous consent that the following items be printed in the RECORD: First, I would like to have printed in the RECORD appendix A of the minority report, pages 29 through 34. That is an analysis by the Chicago Council of Lawyers of the Manion briefs in such minute detail—down to commas, misspellings, syntax, misparagraphings and substance—that I do not want to bother the Senate with it at this time, but I hope my colleagues will read that.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Appendix A

THE CHICAGO COUNCIL OF LAWYERS,

May 20, 1986.

Senator PAUL SIMON,
Dirksen Senate Building, Washington, DC.

Attention: Ms. Laurie Westley.

DEAR SENATOR SIMON: Pursuant to your request, the Chicago Council of Lawyers has reviewed the following briefs written by Daniel Manion:

1. Brief of Daniel Manion in State of Indiana v. Sumney;

2. Brief of Daniel Manion in Culver Educational Foundation v. Indiana Civil Rights Commission;

3. Appellee's Petition for Transfer to Supreme Court in Bearman v. University of Notre Dame;

4. Memorandum in Support of Appellee's Petition for Rehearing in Bearman v. University of Notre Dame;

5. Brief of Daniel Manion in Hassing v. Insulated Panel Co. of Indiana, et al.

1. Brief of Daniel Manion in State of Indiana v. Sumney

The brief is poorly written. It is riddled with spelling errors, typographical errors and grammatical errors. The author seems to have no knowledge of when to use an apostrophe to make a noun possessive. Disagreement between subject and verb is rather common. It appears that very little attention or care was given to finalizing this brief for the Indiana Court of Appeals.

In addition to the more mechanical defects noted above, the brief is stilted and rigidly follows the form of the appellant's brief. Sentence structure is frequently convoluted and awkward. Redundancies are common. A great many sentences unnecessarily begin with "But" or "And" as if to take the place of logical connections. The brief frequently slips into colloquialisms for no good reason, e.g., "Norm Henry", "didn't" or Henry would testify "on most any subject." (The last phrase appears three times in the brief.)

The brief is neither clear nor forceful. It repeatedly speculates on what a witness "possibly" would have said had testimony been allowed. See, e.g., pp. 14, 15. The argument is unnecessarily hard to follow. A C– job, at best.

2. Brief of Daniel Manion in Culver Educational Foundation v. Indiana Civil Rights Commission

The task of a federal court of appeal, as the tribunal of last resort for most litigants, is to interpret the law of the circuit for district court judges, the bar, and the public in cogent written opinions. Accordingly, the ability to write clearly and convincingly is a prerequisite for any judge or attorney who aspires to serve on a court of appeal. Daniel A. Manion's brief in Culver Educational Foundation v. Indiana Civil Rights Commission indicates that Mr. Manion's writing ability falls substantially short of the minimal requirements for the position.

Mr. Manion's brief in the Culver case reflects some aptitude for analyzing a legal issue and developing a reasonable argument concerning that issue. However, the brief thoroughly fails to communicate Mr. Manion's arguments in any effective manner. The brief is poorly organized and contains numerous syntactical, spelling, and punctuation errors. Informal, even colloquial, language is not uncommon in the brief.

A. Organization. Mr. Manion's brief is extremely difficult to follow because it lacks both an initial summary of Mr. Manion's overall argument and internal summaries of his principal points. As a result, the reader cannot discern the gist of an argument by Mr. Manion until after completing the entire section of the brief devoted to that argument, if then.

B. Syntax. Mr. Manion's syntax is frequently awkward and sometimes even tortured. Consider the following examples:

Page 6: "When these issues are taken into consideration, the chain reaction resulting from the hearing officer's erroneous finding is immense."

Page 6: (introductory sentence for section of brief) "This can be taken even further once this major error is acknowledged.

Page 8: "(In fact, a corrected version of Bernauer's proposal, which is likely identical, should have been substituted for what is in the transcript)."

Page 11: "Not only has the Commission required an undue burden on Culver that is contrary to law, more significantly, it has made an erroneous finding without which its judgment cannot stand."

Page 15: "In her own testimony Ms. Bernauer has referred several times to her own attitude problems than how she was becoming discouraged or disappointed or frustrated or whatever with the various operations of the academy and how they affected her."

In one instance, on page 13 of Mr. Manion's brief, his sentence structure becomes so tangled that he states the exact opposite of what he intends: "These attitude changes, as revealed in the final evaluations or addendums thereto of Mr. Walker and Mrs. England, weighed heavily against her not receiving a new contract."

C. Spelling. The following words are misspelled in Mr. Manion's brief:

"perponderance" (pages 4, 9 (twice), 10 (twice), 22).
"evidentary" (pages 7, 8).
"verbatum" (page 8).
"proferred (page 10).
"language" (page 11).
"despository" (page 14).
"accomodating" (page 14).
"liabilty" (page 20, four times).

D. Punctuation. Mr. Manion appear to have some difficulty in correctly using the possessive form of nouns and in using commas to separate independent clauses in compound sentences. An apostrophe was omitted from possessive nouns on at least three occasions in Mr. Manion's brief. Clauses in compound sentences were not properly set off by commas on at least seven occasions.

When considered separately, these criticisms might seem picayunish. Taken together, however, they demonstrate Mr. Manion's unfitness to sit on a court that depends upon clearly written communications to do its job.

3. Appellee's Petition for Transfer to Supreme Court in Bearman v. University of Notre Dame.

4. Memorandum in Support of Appellee's Petition for Rehearing in Bearman v. University of Notre Dame

These comments address the substance and form of briefs submitted by Daniel Manion in Bearman v. University of Notre Dame. Mr. Manion's name is listed first on each of these briefs. "Memorandum in Support of Appellee's Petition for Rehearing" was submitted as an attachment to "Appellee's Petition for Transfer to Supreme Court."

Bearman involved an assault at a University of Notre Dame football game. Mr. and Mrs. Bearman left the game shortly before it ended. As they were walking through a parking lot toward their car, they observed two men who appeared to be drunk. The two were fighting. A few moments later, one of them fell into Mrs. Bearman from behind, breaking her leg. There were no ushers or security people in the area.

With respect to substance, these briefs appear to be average. They argue the strengths of the University's position, but they fail to confront its weakness.

The case turns on Comment (f) to the Restatement of Torts (Second) § 344 (1965). That Comment, quoted in the Bearman opinion, 453 N.E.2d at 1198, states:

If the place or character of his business, or his past experience, is such that he should reasonably anticipate careless or criminal conduct on the part of third persons, either generally or at some particular time, he may be under a duty to take precautions against it, and to provide a reasonably sufficient number of servants to afford a reasonable protection.

The key basis for the court's opinion is the first clause of this sentence. The court held that the University should know that alcoholic beverages are consumed on the premises at tailgate parties and at its football games. The fact that such beverages are regularly consumed, by itself, supports the inference that the University had a duty to take reasonable precautions to protect its patrons from intoxicated persons. Implicitly, the court found it irrelevant that no assaults involving intoxicated persons had actually occurred in thirty years; knowledge could be inferred from "the place or character of his business."

Mr. Manion's briefs did not directly confront the court's analysis. They did not discuss the "place or character of his business" clause. Instead, they focused on the following clause, "or his past experience." The briefs do an adequate job of arguing that the University's past experience did not warrant providing additional protection. But by failing directly to confront the court's reasoning, the briefs do not give the court any convincing rationale for changing its result.

The briefs rely too heavily on distinguished Indiana law. Sports, Inc. v. Gilbert, 431 N.E.2d 534 (Ind.App. 1982), for example, involved an accident that occurred off the premises of a speedway following the speedway's eviction of an intoxicated person. The cited section of the Restatement did not apply, since the injured person was not an invitee of the speedway.

The briefs would have been more convincing if they emphasized the law from other states. Two cases, Warner v. Florida Jai-Alai, Inc., 221 So.2d 777 (1969) and Gill v. Chicago Park District, 85 Ill.App. 3d 903, 407 N.E.2d 671, 673 (1980), are much more favorable to the University. Those cases involve closer fact patterns and have results that favor the defendants. Mr. Manion's briefs would have been stronger if these cases were given more emphasis.

The style of the briefs is poor. The Supreme Court brief is particularly awkward in spots. The sentence and paragraphs do not flow. (See, for example, the end of paragraph B and Paragraph C on page 2.) There are also several spelling errors. These include "insurer" and "erroneously" on page 2 and "petition" on page 4 of the Supreme Court brief, along with "Court's" and "possessor" on page 3 of the Court of Appeals brief.

The two briefs do not represent outstanding advocacy and do not articulate in the most effective fashions the reasons for reversal of the Bearman court's opinion. These briefs are, at best, average in quality.

5. Brief of Daniel Manion in Hassing v. Insulated Panel Co. of Indiana, et al.

The major issue in Mr. Manion's brief is whether a promissory note and guaranty received by plaintiffs from Insulated Panel Co. constituted the sale of securities under Indiana law.

A. Form. There are a few typographical errors, but not a significant number. More important is Mr. Manion's convoluted syntax, repetition of points he wishes to make, use of the vernacular, and even an occasional misspelling. For example, on one occasion he spells "germane" correctly (p. 2) and on another "germaine" (p. 19).

He occasionally uses incomplete sentences (p. 3, "IA).

He sometimes changes tense in the same paragraph (p. 4).

On page 4, he states "without question, Mr. Bell had no intention for anything other than a short term loan."

It is sometimes difficult to determine the antecedents of words such as "this" or "it".

On page 8, he states that "in this case the parties pretty much agreed that the promissory notes were securities, but in determining whether or not a security was involved, the court followed a quadruple test . . ."

For an example of confusing syntax, see the top of page 9.

On page 10, he writes "the question has been raised, by the Plaintiff and their attorney . . ."

In sum, Mr. Manion's writing is pedestrain and often difficult to follow.

B. Analysis of the Issue. The brief does a fairly good job of setting out the factual and legal basis for Mr. Manion's client's position that the note and guaranty were not "securities" under Indiana law. However, the issue is not a complex one, and a major portion of the argument is devoted to quotations from depositions.

Mr. Manion's writing is less than persuasive partly because his brief is not very well organized and the confusing syntax often makes his arguments difficult to follow.

Mr. Manion appears to have done a modest amount of research but does not always use the case law effectively to mount a persuasive argument.

The above evaluations of Mr. Manion's briefs were each written by a different member of the Council's Federal Judicial Evaluation Committee. We proceeded in this manner in order to obtain a number of views concerning Mr. Manion's writing ability. The evaluations speak for themselves; they support the Council's conclusion that Mr. Manion has not demonstrated the level of legal skill necessary for appointment to the Seventh Court of Appeals.

Very truly yours,

THOMAS F. GERAGHTY,
Chair,
Federal Judicial Evaluation Committee.

Mr. EAGLETON. Next, I ask unanimous consent that the full letters that I quoted from, from the various scholars and attorneys, be printed in the RECORD, including a cover sheet that has background notes on letter writing.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Re: Confirmation of Daniel Manion for the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

Hon. THOMAS F. EAGLETON,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR TOM: I have your letter of June 16th. I have read carefully the four briefs by Mr. Manion which were enclosed with your letter (Lindower; State of Indiana; Bearman; and Culver Educational Foundation). I understand that these briefs were chosen by Mr. Manion as examples of his best appellate briefs. I note that none of these briefs involved an action in the federal courts.

Individually and collectively, these briefs are barely adequate. They are far below the standard of legal analysis and writing required of a federal appellate judge. Two of the briefs (Lindower and State of Indiana) are poorly organized, wordy, and hard to follow. Their arguments do not march. All of the briefs suffer from inadequate attention to spelling, grammar, and syntax.

The generally flaccid reasoning in the briefs does not put the client's case in the strongest favorable light and frequently fails to address the important arguments to the contrary.

These briefs, in sum, do not display the learning, intellectual rigor or persuasive power which should characterize the work of a federal appellate judge.

Please feel free to use this letter as you wish.

Sincerely yours,

CY VANCE.

Hon. THOMAS F. EAGLETON,

Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR EAGLETON: I am glad to reply to your inquiry of June 18 with respect to the quantity of Daniel Manion's appellate briefs. I have read the five briefs you submitted to me. I had in fact read several of them before and could hardly believe that anyone would submit them as evidence of legal ability. Learning that Mr. Manion regards them as his best work leaves me with a particularly sad feeling about the qualities of mind and scholarship that they reflect.

As you may know, I submitted a letter, jointly signed by Professor Philip Kurland along with me, describing to the Senate Judiciary Committee my strong belief in the need for excellence in federal judicial appointments. As we explained in that letter, when evidence of legal distinction is not apparent on the face of a nomination, the burden should be on the President and the nominee to persuade the Senate that it is not being asked simply to rubber-stamp a purely ideological choice by the Chief Executive. But, in Mr. Manion's case, one unfortunately does not even reach the issue of excellence, since the briefs he has written provide convincing evidence of pervasive mediocrity and, to be quite frank, legal ineptitude of the first order.

Quite apart from the sloppiness with which the briefs are prepared—with lapses in spelling and syntax so pervasive as to insult any judge's intelligence and sense of craft—the briefs are characterized by so shallow a command both of legal doctrine and of argumentation as to suggest a virtually complete absence of significant legal capacity. If they were submitted in just about any law school by a second-year student, these briefs would not receive much credit. The thought that they are representative of the best work of someone being seriously considered for a life-tenured post on the federal judiciary is little short of astonishing.

You should feel free to make whatever use you wish of these remarks. I am not at all reluctant to have them made public, since I believe it is the Senate's constitutional duty to withhold its consent from the Manion nomination.

Sincerely,

LAURENCE H. TRIBE,
Tyler Professor of Constitutional Law.

Re: Nomination of Daniel Manion.

DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with your request, I have read and sought to judge impartially the five briefs prepared by Daniel Manion, who has been nominated to be a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Mr. Manion appears to have no experience whatever in a U.S. Court of Appeals and very little experience with any questions of federal law. This is an important deficiency. All fives briefs deal with simple facts and fairly simple questions of State law. All are very much less demanding of legal capacity than the complex situations and questions of statutory and regulatory law that form the bulk of the docket of a U.S. Court of Appeals. Yet even though the five cases were undemanding, the briefs, taken as a group, exhibit none of the skills in accurate legal analysis and clear and precise expression required to serve usefully as a judge on a U.S. Court of Appeals. On the contrary, the briefs contain much evidence of muddiness of both thought and expression.

The poorest of the briefs, in my opinion, was filed in Lindower v. City of South Bend. Plaintiff had filed an action seeking a declaratory judgment to the effect that the City had no "right, contractual or otherwise, to install such meters" as would measure the water supplied to Plaintiff by the City in order that the Plaintiff could be charged for the use. The trial court entered a summary judgment for Defendant to the effect that the City had a right to install the meters. Plaintiff, who was represented by Mr. Manion, appealed. Mr. Manion's brief is confused and confusing from the outset. The Summary of Argument begins with the surprising statement that, "the trial court may have lacked jurisdiction to rule in this case . . ." [emphasis supplied]. The statement is surprising both because it is equivocal and because the reader wonders why the plaintiff who filed the action should be challenging the court's jurisdiction. The latter question goes largely unanswered, although one later learns that the controlling statutes had been revised. As for the former question, Point I shifts from equivocation to the categorical statement that "the Trial Court Lacked Jurisdiction over the Subject Matter." Eventually one gets the impression that Mr. Manion's true position is that the trial court had jurisdiction to decide only whether the City had a contractual right to install the meters and therefore should not have drawn upon other sources of the right; but nowhere does the reader get a clear statement concerning other sources of the right. Furthermore, Point I of the brief concludes with the statement that: "The trial court arguably had jurisdiction under the old statute. When that statute was repealed, the more general jurisdiction of the PSC, under 1.C.8-1-2-54 and others, probably took over."

Despite the previous assertions that the trial court had no jurisdiction and this assertion that it "probably" had lost all jurisdiction, the conclusion of the whole brief asks a remand for trial.

In Point II, Appellant's brief argues that summary judgment should not have been entered for Defendant because there were genuine issues concerning material facts. The brief cites as an example an apparently unresolved dispute over whether certain rules and regulations were in fact distributed to users. The brief then very properly goes on to argue that this question was material because, if the rules and regulations were not distributed, there was no valid contract. The ensuing argument is divided under two headings, but the difference between them is nowhere clearly explained. The second heading is a gem of incomprehensibility: "If The "Rules and Regulations" Were In Fact A Contract Between The Utilities And The User, By Not Being Distributed As Required, An Agreement Was Impossible And Thus Not Enforceable As A Contract."

The brief is also filled with minor errors of spelling, syntax, and choice of words. One might put them down to the pressure to meet a short deadline if the same mistakes were not common in the other briefs and if there were not the same evidence of confused or careless thought. Given their pervasiveness they seem to me to confirm the other evidence of a low level of capacity for legal exposition or argument.

The Petition for Transfer and Brief in Bearman v. University of Notre Dame are also of poor quality. The case was a simple action to recover from Notre Dame University damages for personal injuries suffered by a patron at a football game when a drunk fell upon her. The trial court directed a judgment for the defendant University. The Court of Appeals then reversed, holding that the question whether the University was negligent in failing to take greater precautions to protect football game patrons against such injuries was for a jury to decide, even though no evidence had been offered to show that similar incidents had occurred at previous Notre Dame athletic events to give Notre Dame warning that the duty of reasonable care would include taking precautions against such incidents. Mr. Manion's papers seeking further review repeatedly assert that the Court of Appeals had held that the University was an insurer absolutely liable for such injuries. The opinion of the Court of Appeals makes it entirely clear that it made no such ruling. The Petition and Brief are directed to an issue that simply was not in the case.

Conceivably, the decision of the Indiana Court of Appeals might have been attacked by arguing that the jury's general knowledge about drunks at football games and about their conduct is an inadequate basis on which to conclude that "reasonable care" would require greater precautions than Norte Dame took against a drunk injuring one of its patrons. In the course of making that argument one might even say that to allow a jury to enter into such speculation on the basis of the juror's own knowledge, without some evidence, goes too far in the direction of imposing an insurer's liability. But by presenting an entirely false issue counsel gave up whatever small chance there was of prevailing on this ground.

The brief in Culver Educational Foundation v. Indiana Civil Rights Commission also seems seriously inadequate. The brief never presents with clarity the content of the order that the Academy is challenging through Mr. Manion. Neither does it state exactly what relief the Academy seeks.

The substance of the brief is divided under headings "Liability Argument" and "Damages Argument." Perhaps this is no worse than inartistic; but surely it is poor advocacy to commence the argument that there was no evidence to support the Commission's findings that Culver engaged in sex discrimination with the categorical assertion that "Federal Law Applies." The assertion is obviously unsound. Indiana law applies. All Mr. Manion means is that federal precedents should be persuasive with respect to Indiana law—a point that surely an experienced advocate would have made along the way in a sentence or two preceding his citation of the federal decisions and his argument showing how the principles there laid down govern the case.

In many contexts the distinction between applying federal law and looking to federal precedents has fundamental and critical importance, especially in the federal courts. That Mr. Manion fell into confusing the two, even if out of carelessness rather than ignorance, is a mark of very inferior work.

The argument is confused through much of the brief. Technical terms are apparently misused. The style is clumsy. The basic difficulty, however, is that the brief contains at the outset no clear and precise statement of the principal argument or arguments that counsel will develop.

I find less to criticize in the two remaining briefs, but neither is an example of persuasive advocacy. The brief in Hansing v. Insulated Panel Company leaves me with considerable misgiving because one gets the sense that not all the relevant facts appear; but, having none of the papers, I cannot tell whether that is in fact the case.

The briefs as a group leave me—as I have said—with the conviction that Mr. Manion is not qualified to be a judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals. They evidence little capacity for pulling the key legal questions out of even rather simple facts, and for then stating clearly both the question and the disposition that he advocates. They accordingly suggest that he would be quite incapable of dealing effectively with the far more complex factual situations and issues of law that come before a U.S. Court of Appeals.

It is a pleasure to be in touch with you again, Tom. I hope that we may have another chance to get together before you leave the Senate. Your retirement will be a major loss to all of us.

All the best.

Sincerely,

ARCHIBALD COX.

THE ASSOCIATION OF THE BAR OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK,

Senator THOMAS F. EAGLETON,
United States Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR EAGLETON: I am writing in response to your letter of June 19, with which you enclosed five briefs written by Daniel Manion, Esq., a nominee for the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. You have asked me to read these briefs and comment on their quality, with respect to Mr. Manion's legal ability to serve on the Seventh Circuit. You also asked for permission to make my views public.

I have considered it my duty to read and comment on these briefs, both as a citizen and as a lawyer, and because I chair the Committee on Federal Courts of The Association of the Bar of the City of New York. Accordingly I have read the briefs over the weekend and I would be happy to have you make my views public. I of course address only their qualities as legal writing; their contents are irrelevant.

These briefs vary in quality, depending in part on the complexity of the issues. None are better than mediocre and those which are relatively more complicated, that is, where the issues are not immediately apparent, are quite bad indeed, opaque, confused and rambling. The briefs are characterized by jarring mistakes in grammar and spelling. The phrasing of legal issues lacks precision and the statements of facts lack clarity.

Since Federal cases in general tend to be more complex than the cases treated by these briefs, I would anticipate that the nominee's writings as a Federal judge would be like his treatment of the relatively more complex parts of his briefs, that is, very unsatisfactory.

In my opinion the writer of these briefs has not demonstrated his qualifications to serve as a Federal judge and certainly not as a Federal appellate judge.

Very truly yours,

SHELDON H. ELSEN.

Re: Confirmation of Daniel Manion for the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals

DEAR SENATOR EAGLETON: I am writing in reply to your letter of June 16th, with which you enclosed copies of several briefs written by Daniel Manion in cases in which he was counsel in Indiana State courts. In your letter, you refer to five briefs, however, only four briefs were enclosed. These are the briefs in the cases of Lindower v. City of South Bend, State of Indiana v. Robert E. Sumney, Culver Educational Foundation v. Indiana Civil Rights Commission, and Bearman v. University of Notre Dame.

I have read each of these four briefs carefully. However, I should point out that I have not seen the opposing briefs, so that I have no way to know how Mr. Manion dealt directly with the arguments made against him. Nor do I know how the cases were decided in the Indiana courts. Finally, I have no way of knowing how far these briefs are the product of Mr. Manion's own work, or were written with the help of associates in his office. I understand that he has submitted three of them, and that he accepts responsibility for them.

Others have pointed out numerous typographical and grammatical errors in these briefs. I do not refer to these further. I do not think that they are of first importance, except as they show a carelessness in preparing the briefs, and a failure to measure up to the standards that one would expect from a first-class law office.

Turning to the substance of the briefs, the thing that strikes me is that they are all quite without distinction, in organization, in clarity of expression, or in the effective use of authorities. I do not think that I can say that they are bad briefs, but I can say that, in my judgment, they are not very good. Using law school terminology, I would say that they were all "C" work. They would merit a passing grade, but they would not approach even the moderate distinction of "B" rank.

Another thing that I note is that these briefs are all in state courts, and they deal with what might be called "run of the mine" questions. They do not show any background in or ability to handle the types of complex questions in the fields of constitutional law, administrative law, or other areas involving the interpretation and application of complex federal statues. Such questions are the grist of the work of the federal courts of appeals.

In our system, as it has developed, the thirteen federal courts of appeals are, for most practical purposes, the courts of last resort in our federal judicial system. It is a fact not as widely known as it should be that less than one percent of the cases decided by the courts of appeals are actually reviewed by the United States Supreme Court. Thus, it is important to have judges of the highest caliber and experience on the courts of appeals. In view of the finality of nearly all court of appeals decisions, a good case may be made for the proposition that the same standards should be used in the confirmation of courts of appeals judges as is used with respect to appointments to the Supreme Court. At the least, there should be a considerable showing of experience and ability well above the ordinary. This seems to me to be entirely lacking with respect to Mr. Manion.

In particular, I am concerned that none of the briefs submitted by Mr. Manion was filed in a federal court, and that he appears to have had no experience in the federal courts. By and large, and except for diversity cases, the type of cases which come to the federal courts, both civil and criminal, are quite different from those in the state courts, and often, or usually, involve much more complex questions than those ordinarily heard in the state courts, and, in particular, than any of those dealt with in the briefs submitted by Mr. Manion.

I am reminded of a situation which arose some fifty years ago when President Roosevelt appointed as Solicitor General a fine and kindly man who had never had a case in the federal courts. His lack of experience soon became apparent, causing concern not only in the Executive Branch, but in the Supreme Court. He was replaced by Stanley Reed, who was, of course, an excellent Solicitor General, and later a distinguished Supreme Court Justice. But, a judge of the court of appeals, once confirmed and appointed, has life tenure, and cannot be replaced. The time to make a distinguished appointment is now.

You are free to use these views and my name during the debate on Mr. Manion's nomination.

Very truly yours,

ERWIN N. GRISWOLD.

WILMER, CUTLER & PICKERING,
Washington, DC, June 24, 1986.

Senator THOMAS F. EAGLETON,
United States Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR TOM: I have your letter of June 16 about Daniel Manion, and I have reviewed the briefs you enclosed.

I do not know Mr. Manion. I have no opinion as to his character, integrity, or judicial demeanor. But based on my review of the briefs he submitted to your Committee, I do not believe he possesses the capacity for legal analysis and exposition or the degree of carefulness required for appointment to the federal bench, especially the federal appellate bench. If these briefs had been submitted to me by an applicant for a junior position in our law firm, I would have voted against offering him a place.

The issue is not merely whether there are better qualified lawyers in the same state or circuit who satisfy an incumbent President's political criteria and are willing to serve. If these briefs fairly reflect Mr. Manion's capacities, I believe he falls well below the minimum standards of eligibility for an Article III judge. When the Senate receives such a nomination, Senators should perform their constitutional function by refusing their advice and consent.

Since it has been suggested that opposition to Mr. Manion's appointment is based on his conservative views, I should perhaps add that I have no knowledge or opinion concerning any such views, nor do I regard that as grounds for disqualification. I would not oppose any well qualified nominee, such as Justice Rehnquist or Judge Scalia, on such a ground.

My partner John Pickering, former President of the District of Columbia Bar and the District's current State Delegate to the American Bar Association, has also reviewed the briefs and shares my opinion. You may use our names if you wish.

Sincerely,

LLOYD N. CUTLER.

Mr. EAGLETON. Finally, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a brief, one of these six briefs that I have mentioned, this one brief filed by Mr. Manion in the independent court of appeals in the case of Lindower v. City of South Bend be printed in the RECORD as typed, with misspellings and other unusual markings, but without any penciled notes.

There being no objection, the brief was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[In the Indiana Court of Appeals, No. 3-384 A 73, Appeal from the St. Joseph Superior Court, The Honorable William C. Whitman, Judge]

JASON D. LINDOWER, ET AL. APPELLANT, PLAINTIFFS, vs. CITY OF SOUTH BEND, APPELLEE, DEFENDANT

Brief of appellant:

ISSUES PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

I. Whether the trial court lacked jurisdiction over the subject matter.

II. Whether there were genuine issues as to material facts concerning whether or not the city had the right to install water meters, and whether summary judgment should have been denied.

A. Whether the failure by the city or its predecessor, South Bend Federal, to distribute the "rules and regulations" to the existing customers and new applicants as required by PSC regulations made that "contract" unenforceable.

B. Whether the "rules and regulations" was in fact a contract between the utility and the user, and by not being distributed as required, an agreement was impossible and thus not enforceable as a contract.

C. Whether the "contract" (i.e. the rules and regulations), had it been distributed, accomodates a flat rate as an alternative to the metered rates when the contract is taken as a whole.

D. Whether the application for water, sewer and trash service, when given to and signed by some of the river commons users, was done so through misrepresentation of purpose and content by the representatives of the city, thus rendering it unenforceable.

E. Whether the city has waived its right to install meters under the provisions of a written contract, if any did exist, and under the facts of this case.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is an appeal from the Trial Court's granting of the defendant City of South Bend's Motion for Summary Judgment. (Tr. p. 138-143). On May 24, 1982, the plaintiffs, officers and/or directors of the River Commons Homeowners Association, filed a complaint for Declaratory Judgment and Injunction, to, among other things, prevent the City from installing water meters and to determine if the City had a right, contractual or otherwise, to install such meters. (Tr. p. 38-53). Responsive pleadings were filed and the City ultimately filed a Motion for Summary Judgment. (Tr. p. 58). Hearing on said Motion was held on September 19, 1983, (Tr. p. 129), and the court issued a summary judgment for the defendant City and against the plaintiff homeowners on November 18, 1983. (Tr. p. 130).

Judgment: "Now, therefore, the Court hereby declares and adjudicates:

1. That the City has a legal right to install meters in River Commons;

2. That the City has not waived its right to install water meters in River Commons;

3. That the City's installation of meters was not an attempt to generate additional revenue with which to pay for additions and extensions for the benefit of users in Laurel Woods;

4. That the City utility has the right to designate the kind of meter that is installed so long as the meter is of "standard manufacture"; and

5. That the health and safety of River Commons users is not threatened by the addition of users in Laurel Woods."

Date: November 18, 1983.

/s/ ——— ———, Judge,
St. Joseph Superior Court.

Plaintiffs filed a Motion to Correct Errors and Memorandum in Support thereof (Tr. p. 151-172), and the defendant filed a Memorandum in Opposition to said Motion. (Tr. p. 187-191). After hearing the trial court denied the Motion to Correct Errors. (Tr. p. 193).

"Hearing is held upon plaintiff's Motion to Correct Errors. Said motion is denied." (Tr. p. 193).

Upon denial of that motion the plaintiffs filed their praecipe for the Record of the Proceedings (Tr. p. 203) and submitted this appeal.

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

River Commons is a subdivision located in St. Joseph County, Indiana, outside of the city limits of South Bend, Indiana. (Tr. p. 38). On July 24, 1978 a lease agreement was entered into between the City of South Bend (City) and South Bend Federal Savings and Loan Association for the management and lease—purchase of the water system which was owned by South Bend Federal and which was serving River Commons. (Tr. p. 38). During the time South Bend Federal owned and operated the water system the customers paid a $7.50 minimum monthly charge or flat rate, and water usage was not measured by meters. (Tr. p. 65).

Under I.C. 19-3-11.5-5 (now repealed) the City had the burden of proving to the Public Service Commission that the rates previously approved by the PSC (Tr. p. 67) were sufficient to meet certain statutory requirements. (Tr. p. 65).

At the hearing before the PSC on September 19, 1979 (Tr. p. 73) the City presented several witnesses. The Director of Utilities for South Bend testified that the City had not comtemplated increasing the rates above the $7.50 level. (Tr. p. 180). CPA Michael Smith testified that the River Commons customers were paying $7.50 per month (Tr. p. 182), that his projections for the City's ability to pay the 10 year lease—purchase were based on the $7.50 figure, and that the City represented to him, when preparing his projections, that the $7.50 rate would be maintained through 1989. (Tr. p. 184). He testified he was told by the City that there would be no rate increase. (Tr. p. 185).

The City abided by their sworn testimony until 1982, when, by a letter to the water customers in River Commons, dated April 2, 1982, Michael L. Vance, Director of Utilities for the City of South Bend, Indiana, notified the customers that if they did not give permission to install water meters in their home, the City would install a meter pit and meter in the public right of way at a charge of $475.00 per installation. (Tr. p. 49). The customers objected to the City's claim that it had a right to install meters, and as a consequence filed their Complaint for a Declaratory Judgment to determine inter alia the City's right to install meters and to enjoin the forced installation threatened by the City. (Tr. p. 38).

The customers were objecting for two primary reasons. First, because of the representations made at the hearing in Indianapolis before the Public Service Commission. Such testimony gained PSC approval of the lease-purchase, and the customers felt the City should be bound by those assertions until changed by the PSC.

The second reason for the customer's objection to the installation of the meters and really the only issue over which the trial court had jurisdiction is the lack of contractual authority by the City to unilaterally install meters.

The factual controversy focuses on four particular documents, those being the schedule of rates (Tr. p. 67), the Order approving the lease—purchase (Tr. p. 73), the Application for Water, Sewer and Trash Service (Tr. p. 101), and the General Rules and Regulations for Water Service (Tr. p. 92). The facts are uncontroverted that the rates as shown, including a minimum "flat" rate of $7.50, were approved by the PSC in 1977 (Tr. p. 63) and were incorporated in the PSC order of October 4, 1979. (Tr. p. 44). In addition, Utilities Director Michael Vance has asserted that the day to day operations of the River Commons water distribution system is subject to the General Rules and Regulations for water service to River Commons. (Tr. p. 87). The opening paragraph, those Rules and Regulations states that "the following general rules shall be a part of the contract with every person . . . who uses water service . . ." (emphasis added). (Tr. p. 92). Yet the homeowners have claimed that they never received this or any similar document (Tr. p. 103-127) and the distribution of such a pamphlet is required by PSC regulation 170 IAC 6-1-18.

The other part of the contract referred to in the Rules and Regulations apparently is the Application for Water, Sewer and Trash Service, and the customers' affidavit testimony (Tr. p. 103-127) indicates a major discrepancy from Michael Vances assertion in his affidavit that all 131 users who have applied for service have signed the application. (Tr. p. 89). Some never signed (Tr. p. 106, 108, 122); some signatures were unauthorized (Tr. p. 110, 114); others signed because the document was misrepresented by the City as a deposit receipt (Tr. p 116, 118, 120, 126).

In spite of the many genuine and controverted issues of material fact which were presented in the pleadings, affidavits and exhibits thereto, the trial court granted summary judgment. (Tr. p. 145).

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The trial court may have lacked jurisdiction to rule in this case since much of its decision was concentrated on issues which are in the exclusive jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission. Also, the statute under which the plaintiffs alleged jurisdiction has since been repealed.

If the trial court invoked jurisdiction under contract law, which is usually outside the PSC jurisdiction, the granting of summary judgment was certainly improper. The two written contracts under consideration which supposedly gave authority to the City to install meters were not enforceable. One, known as the "Rules and Regulations" had never been given to the users as was mandated by PSC regulation. Also, its terms, when taken as a whole, clearly gave the alternative of providing water at a flat rate, which is precisely what the City has been doing for years. Since the City claimed that the contract governed the day to day operation of the utility, the court, even if it found no ambiguities or conflicting terms, should have examined extrinsic evidence to determine the contract's validity and enforceability. How could it even be a contract if the people most affected never saw it? Even when carefully examined, however, the contract did not give the City absolute power to install meters.

The other necessary part of the contract was an "application" for water service, which was executed under all sorts of questionable circumstances. the affidavits by both parties set forth numerous genuine issues as to material facts which the court erroneously disregarded. The conflicting facts should have prevented summary judgment and mandated a proper hearing at trial.

Also, the City may well have waived any right it may have claimed to install meters. The evidence and testimony presented by the City before the PSC when seeking approval of the lease—purchase of the River Commons water system very definitely promised a continuing flat rate with no meters. And its actions after it leased the system when it provided water at a flat rate agreement fulfilled those promises. Later the City reneged on its prior policy and attempted to force the meter installation.

The Court may not have had jurisdiction over the subject matter. By granting summary judgment, however, the court not only considered matters possibly outside its jurisdiction, but also disregarded numerous genuine issues as to material facts presented by both sides in affidavits and exhibits thereto. This summary judgment should be set aside and the case given a full hearing before the fact finder.

ARGUMENT

The essential thrust of this appeal is contractural—whether the City of South Bend, in accordance with its own contracts, had the absolute right to install water meters or whether there was a material fact issue in the balance thus precluding summary judgment. However, the issue of jurisdiction was primarily raised by the City as part of its Memorandum in Support if its Motion for Summary Judgment. (Tr. p. 68). The issue of subject matter jurisdiction, when in question, can and should be raised in the Court of Appeals, and is therefore presented as the first argument. Also, this issue is now relevant since the City and the Court in its ruling have ventured outside the issues of contract and into concerns reserved to the purview of the Public Service Commission.

I. The Trial Court lacked jurisdiction over the subject matter

Jurisdiction can and should be raised at any time, and although it was the City's Motion (Tr. p. 68) (to Dismiss for Lack of Jurisdication) that the Court overruled, the plaintiffs included the issue as part of its Motion to Correct Errors and as part of its appellate brief for the reason that the statute and the case law cited may bestow exclusive jurisdiction with the PSC.

". . . it is well established that when there is a lack of jurisdiction of the subject matter in the trial court, the question may be raised at any time and in any manner before final decision and, if not raised in trial court or by a party to the appeal, then it is the duty of the appeal court, sua sponte to raise and determine it." Indiana Bell Telephone Co., Inc. vs. Frieland (1978) 175 Ind. App. 622, 373 N.E.2d 344, U.S. Cert. Den. 440 US 916.

The jurisdiction of this court over at least some of the issues raised in this cause of action was challenged by the City in its Motion for Summary Judgment. Some background is necessary to show why the case was filed. Originally the plaintiffs had filed an injunction against the City in Circuit Court to prevent the City from forcing the installations of meters at a cost of $475.00 per household. (Tr. p. 49). At the suggestion of the City Attorney and by agreement of the parties, the plaintiffs withdrew the injunction action and refiled this Declaratory Judgment Complaint in Superior Court. Jurisdication was never questioned or discussed at that time.

However, at the hearing for the City's Motion for Summary Judgment and as a part of her argument that the Court lacked jurisdiction, (Tr. p. 68), the City Attorney referred to I.C. 8-1-2-54 which does give 10 persons the right to file a complaint before the PSC for the reasons that:

". . . any of the rates, tolls, charges or schedules or any joint rate or rates in which such petitioner is directly interested are in any respect unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory, or that any regulation, measurement, practice or act whatsoever affecting or relating to the services of any public utility, or any service in connection therewith, is in any respect unreasonable, unsafe, insufficient or unjustly discriminatory, or that any service is inadequate or can not be obtained, the commission shall proceed, with or without notice, to make such investigation as it may deem necessary or convenient. But no order affecting said rates, tolls, charges, schedules, regulations, measurements, practice or act, complained of, shall be entered by the commission without a formal public hearing." 8-1-2-54, Wests Annotiated Indiana Code.

An Indiana case interpreting this statute does raise a threshold question of whether a trial court may entertain subject matter jurisdiction before a plainfiff or customer of a utility has first established that it is without access to an administrative remedy before the Public Service Commission. Indiana Forge and Machine Company, Inc. vs. N.I.P.S.C.O. (1979), —— Ind. App. ——, 396 N.E.2d 910. This and other casses involving PSC jurisdiction give exclusive jurisdiction to the Commission of the issues raised in the case at bar with the possible exception of breach of contract.

". . . The question submitted to the trial court involved the breach of a voluntary contract. The construction and breach of such contracts are matters for judicial determination. The Public Service Commission does not have jurisdiction of such matters. "Indiana Telephone Corp. vs. Indiana Bell Telephone Co., Inc. (1976) 171 Ind. App. 616, 358 N.E.2d 218. Ind.

The Indiana Telephone case is a narrow distinction between the PSC's role in rulemaking to be applied thereafter and the enforcement by the Courts of liabilities presumed to already exist, future as opposed to past. However, Indiana Forge, supra, indicates that where there is an overlap of jurisdiction, the remedies before the administrative agency must be exhausted.

"Forge argues that the PSC has no jurisdiction over the construction of or the breach of contracts and that it cannot be awarded damages. However, these factors will not deprive the agency of jurisdiction if the claim is otherwise committed to agency review." Indiana Forge and Machine Co., Inc. Supra P.

The case goes on to adopt a concept from Davis on Administrative law:

"On the question whether the doctrine [primary jurisdiction] applies to problems of relief which are beyond administrative jurisdiction, the theory seems reasonably clear. The test is not whether some parts of the case are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts; the test is whether some parts of the case are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the agency. Because of the purpose of the doctrine—to assure that the agency will not be bypassed on what is especially committed to it—and because resort to the courts is still open after the agency has acted, the doctrine applies even if the agency has no jurisdiction to grant relief sought. 3 Davis, Administrative Law Treaties § 19.07 at 39 (1958)." Indiana Forge and Machine Co., Inc., supra, at p. 913.

Both the Indiana Forge and the Indiana Telephone cases give a thorough examination of the issue of jurisdiction.

Originally, when the plaintiffs filed the complaint on May 24, 1982, they alleged in pleading paragraph 12 that the trial court has subject matter jurisdiction.

"12. That this Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter at bar for the reason that I.C. 19-3-11.5-8 limits any challenge to the terms and conditions of the lease, and since any jurisdiction of the Indiana Public Service Commission for this matter falls under 19-3-11.5-1 and following, there are no administrative remedies available, and equitable relief is the only legal means available to the Petitioners." (Tr. p. 41 & 42).

I.C. 19-3-1.5-8 established a 30 day time limit to petition the PSC in order to challenge the lease. The City's attempt to force meter installation came long after the lease was approved without formal opposition.

Effective January 1, 1983, I.C. 19-3-11.5-1 et seq. was repealed and replaced by I.C. 8-1-5-2-27 et seq. Although the new statute retained some similarities, it was a substantial departure from the original very detailed and restrictive I.C. 19-3-11.5. Thus, when the water customers alleged jurisdiction in 1982 the original statute was still in force. When the City moved for summary judgment in 1983, the same statute had been repealed.

The trial court arguably had jurisdiction under the old statute. When that statute was repealed, the more general jurisdiction of the PSC, under I.C. 8-1-2-54 and others, probably took over.

II. There were genuine issues as to material facts concerning whether or not the city had the right to install water meters and summary judgment should not have been granted

The primary question before the trail court, and the only issue over which it may have had jurisdiction, is the question of whether the City has the right to install meters. This question focuses on the document referred to as the "General Rules and Regulations for Water Service" (herein referred to as "Rules and Regulations") for the River Commons Subdivision (Tr. p. 92-100). This document was filed with and received by the Public Service Commission on March 10, 1977, apparently in connection with the PSC order under Cause No. 34737 which also established a schedule of rates and charges (Tr. p. 63). The October 4, 1979 PSC Order under Cause No. 35797 states that the rates and charges approved in 1977 shall remain in full force and effect (Tr. p. 44-48).

Numerous fact questions and conflicts were raised in the affidavits and exhibits thereto filed by each party. Yet, the trail court granted summary judgment (Tr. p. 145). A summary judgment may be granted only if:

". . . the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits and testimony, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Rule 56(c), Indiana Rules of Trial Procedure.

A recent Indiana case involving a municipality summarizes the standards that must be met before a summary judgment can be granted.

Initially, a survey of the appropriate ground rules in the appellate review of an appeal involving a summary judgment is appropriate. Summary judgment may be granted only if all the material on file shows that there was no genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. (cites omitted) A fact is material if it is decisive of either the action or a relevant secondary issue. (cites omitted) It cannot and should not be used as an abbreviated trial. (cites omitted) The trial judge may not weigh the evidence in a summary judgment proceeding. Even where the facts are undisputed, the ability to draw from them conflicting inferences which alter the outcome, will make summary judgment inappropriate. (cites omitted) In reviewing the propriety of a summary judgment, the facts alleged by the party opposing the motion must be taken as true. Consolidated City of Indianapolis vs. Cutshaw (1983), —— Ind. App. ——, 443 N.E.2d 853, 856.

The following issues, any one of which would be sufficient grounds for denial of a summary judgment motion, clearly show that there were genuine issues of material fact that should have been heard and resolved at trial.

A. The failure by the city or its predecessor, South Bend Federal, to distribute the "Rules and Regulations" to the existing customers and new applicants as required by PSC regulation made that "contract" unenforceable

As a matter of law the summary judgment motion should have been denied. 170 IAC 6-1-2 of the Indiana Administrative Code as it applies to the Public Service Commission of Indiana states:

"SEC. 2. Application of Rules. These rules shall apply to any public water utility subject to the jurisdiction of the commission pursuant to the provisions of the Public Service Commission Act, or any other statute of the State of Indiana, which is now or may hereafter be engaged in the production, sale or distribution of water service (herein called "utility" or "water utility")."

170 IAC 6-1-18 specifically requires that the customer and applicants be provided with certain information.

"SEC. 18. Information Provided by Utilities to Applicants and Customers. (A) All utilities except Class D Water utilities must publish and distribute, without request, to all applicants for service and to all current customers, a comprehensive phamplet which, in clear language, easily understandable to a layman, fully describes the rights and responsibilities of the customers. For Class D utilities it shall be sufficient to distribute a copy of Rules 11 to 16.2 [170 IAC 6-1-11-170 IAC 6-1-18] of these rules to their customers and applicants for service. (emphasis added).

(B) A utility shall supply free of charge a copy of the rate schedules applicable to the types of service available to new applicants for new and existing customers of residential service, upon request by the applicant or customer.

(C) Each utility, whenever it petitions the Commission for a change in any of its base rate schedules must furnish to each customer within forty-five (45) days of such request and prior to the date of the public hearing a notice which fairly summarizes the nature and extent of the proposed changes.

In its affidavit in support of summary judgment by the Director of Utilities for South Bend, the City has proclaimed that the "day to day operation of the River Commons water distribution system is subject to the General Rules and Regulations for water service for the River Commons Subdivision . . ." (Tr. p. 87).

The affidavits from the users, presented in opposition to the Motion for Summary Judgment, unanimously state that the "General Rules and Regulations for Water Service" were never distributed. (Tr. p. 103-128). Yet, it is precisely these rules—a self described "contract" that the City is attempting to enforce and which the Court, by its Declaratory Judgment, (Tr. p. 141) is condoning. The utility, both before and after the 1979 Order, has not complied with this regulation requiring distribution, and thus the pamphlet which supposedly describes the rights and responsibilities of a customer is not in force. The only contract in force is a current ongoing agreement to supply water for $7.50 flat rate. There is no agreement, as is required by regulation (and by the City's own document), for metered measurement of water use.

". . . (A) written instrument cannot take the place of and supersede a parol contract until the writing has been mutually adopted by the parties as an instrument embodying the terms of the agreement." 17 A C.J.S. Contracts § 381 (1963), Foster vs. United Home Improvement Co., Inc. (1981), —— Ind. App. ——, 428 N.E.2d 1351, 1356.

The only contract affecting the water users in River Commons which has been mutually adopted is the flat or minimum rate. The utility has provided water and the users have paid as billed.

Although it is not always necessary to prove a written or oral modification of a contract since modification of a contract can be implied from the conduct of the parties, (See Gorbette vs. Estelle (1982), —— Ind. App. ——, 438 N.E.2d 766), the conduct of the parties here clearly shows that there was no modification since the City has not properly notified the users. Clearly, as a matter of law, since the facts are undisputed, the City's violation of the PSC regulation makes unenforceable its own "Rules and Regulations" which they rely on as authority to install meters. And if there is still some question of whether or not the Rules and Regulations were distributed, the question surely raises a genuine isse of material fact that precluded summary judgment.

Mr. Lindower's Affidavit accompanying the Motion to Correct Errors also indicates that there was no 45 day notice in 1977 when the rates were changed. (Tr. p. 173) That too is a violation of 70 IAC 6-1-18(c) that could render the rates unenforceable now that they are attempting to apply them, but that is more likely an issue for the Public Service Commission and is not within the jurisdiction of the trial court.

B. If the "Rules and Regulations" Were In Fact A Contract Between the Utility and the User, By Not Being Distributed As Required, An Agreement Was Impossible and Thus Not Enforceable As A Contract.

The fact that the City did not distribute the Rules and Regulations not only violates the PSC regulations, but that failure also makes the enforcement of that document very questionable if not impossible.

"While as a general rule, the identity of the parties to a contract is ascertained from an examination of the written instrument (cites omitted) it is also true that mere reference to a more formalized contract does not void the presently existing agreement, whether that agreement is oral or an informal writing. Greenfield Builders and Erectors, Inc. vs. Fellure (1982), —— Ind. App. ——, 443 N.E. 2d 87.

The Rules and Regulations asserted by the City in its affidavit (Tr. p. 87) as authority for installing meters state at the outset that "the following general rules shall be a part of the contract with every person . . . who used water service . . ." (emphasis added). (Tr. p. 92) The testimony in the affidavits from Mr. Lindower also indicates that there were oral agreements made by the utility both when it initially supplied water service and when it sought approval of the lease—purchase agreement by the PSC.

Indiana recognizes the validity of a contract resting partly in writing and partly in parol, but such a contract is a mere oral contract. Where it is necessary to resort to oral evidence to establish the terms of the contract, the whole contract is oral. Fellure, id at p. 90.

Because the contract was not distributed, it is questionable that any of the agreement between the utility and the users is in writing, but there is no question from the written language that the Rules and Regulations document is not complete in and of itself. Even the City acknowledges the necessity of an additional contract in the form of the "Application for Water, Sewer and Trash Service", a copy of which is attached to Mr. Vance's supplemental Affidavit (Tr. p. 101) and is referred to in several of the Affidavits of the River Commons customers. (Tr. p. 106, 108, 110, 112, 114, 118, 122, 124, 127). These affidavits stress the gross misrepresentations made by the utility when demanding signatures.

An ambiguity as to the rights and obligations of the parties exists, and there is an absolute necessity to bring in extrinsic evidence to determine what agreements have or have not been made between and among the parties for the delivery and payment of water services, and with the necessity of such extrinsic evidence, there exists a genuine issue as to material facts, and summary judgment cannot be awarded as a matter of law.

C. The "Contract" (i.e. the "Rules and Regulations"), Had It Been Distributed, Accomodates A Flat Rate As An Alternative To the Metered Rates When the Contract Is Taken As A Whole

Assuming, arguendo, that the Rules and Regulations had been distributed and the document was able to stand alone as the enforceable contract between the utility and the users as is asserted by Michael Vance in his supplemental affidavit (Tr. p. 87), the "contract" is nevertheless subject to more than one interpretation.

In interpreting or construing a contract it is in the court's purpose to effect the intent of the parties. (cites omitted). Such intent is established, however, as of the time the contract was made and as reflected by the language used. (cites omitted). Courts must consider all of the provisions of a contract to ascertain meaning, not just individual words, phrases, or paragraphs, and must accept a construction which harmonizes the provisions rather than one which views the provisions as conflicted. (cites omitted). . . . Moreover, in order to apply rules of construction favoring the non-drafter of contract terms respecting (insurance), the language must be ambigous or of doubtful meaning. Loving vs. Ponderosa Systems, Inc. (1983), —— Ind. App. ——, 444 N.E.2d 896, 903.

The users are not here attempting to create an ambiguity, nor are they asking the court to rewrite the contract simply because there is a controversy. Rather, the users are asking the court to examine the langugage of the contract (Tr. p. 92-100, 101) taken as a whole. This is precisely what the trial court did not do as it selected language from only two of fourteen paragraphs to justify its decision. A complete examination of the whole contract will show that under some circumstances the contract provided for flat rate as an alternative to the metered rate.

Assuming, as stated by Michael Vance in his supplemental Affidavit, that the day to day operation of the utility is subject to the Rules and Regulations as filed with the PSC on March 10, 1977, (Tr. p. 87 para. 4), we must consider the whole contract. First, as stated above, the opening paragraph states that the rules "shall be a part of the contract with every person . . . ." (Tr. p. 87). Thus, it is a mandatory part of an intended contract. It is not simply a PSC mandate. It is a contract that implies all of the contract principles referred to herein, including mutuality or a meeting of the minds.

Paragraph 2 states that a written application shall be required. (Tr. p. 92). This refers to the "Application for Water, Sewer and Trash Service" presented by Utilities Director Vance as an exhibit to his affidavit (Tr. p. 101). Presumably the application is the rest of or certainly an integral part of the "contract" referred to as the "Rules and Regulations" (Tr. p. 87-100). Thus the wording in that document, the manner it was presented and the questionable circumstances under which it was signed are extremely important. So too is the fact that many of the users, as stated in the affidavits, (Tr. p. 106, 108, 110, 112, 114, 122, 124), never received or signed this part of the contract known as the "Application for Water, Sewer, and Trash Service". (Tr. p. 101). If the City has such a requirement prior to providing water, it is certainly a genuine issue as to a material fact of whether the requirement was met.

Paragraph 4 (Tr. p. 93) requires the execution of a contract and the installation of a meter unless a water utility representative turns on the water. Presumably in that instance a signed contract is not needed if the authorized person turns on the water. That is the situation with almost every user in River Commons including those signing affidavits. The last sentence also indicates that a contract must be executed and a meter installed. (Tr. p. 93). If no contract is signed, which is certainly a contested issue, then no meter could be installed.

Paragraph 5 (Tr. p. 93) contemplates a metering procedure before water service is delivered and presumably after the contract referred to in paragraph 4 is signed. Thus, water service now being delivered is without the meter and is outsidce the language of paragraph 5.

Paragraph 6 (Tr. p. 94) referring to metering, states "unless otherwise specified in the contract between the utillity and the customer or by the rate on file, the water supplied will be measured by a meter . . . . " Many if not most of the contracts between the utility and the customer by previous agreement have specified a flat rate. There are no written contracts in effect which call for meters, unless the City claims that the "Application" fulfills that requirement, and as shown by the affidavits, that signing process is very defective and in many cases nonexistent. The individual contracts of the River Commons customers are valid ongoing flat rate contracts, and they are accomodated by these Rules and Regulations (even if they had been distributed) and should continue to be honored by the City until the City follows its own "contracts" and the PSC regulations and properly amends or updates them.

Paragraph 9 (Tr. p. 96) most graphically illustrates the acknowledgement of a flat rate by these Rules and Regulations. "If a customer on a flat rate is found using water in excess of the flat rate contract or permits leaks on premises or wastes water . . . the utility may require the customer to provide a suitable place for the installation of a water meter and thereafter supply service in accordance with an applicable metered tariff." (Tr. p. 96). Thus, in order to force a customer to change from a flat rate contract to a metered tariff, the utillity must show that the flat rate customer is using excess water or is allowing leaks or otherwise wasting water. Such excess use is a fact question and the burden of proving the fact is upon the utility for each customer.

Other than a general indication by Mr. Vance in his first Affidavit (Tr. p. 60) that the "average" usage in River Commons is nearly double that of average use in South Bend, there is no showing of excess use or waste by a specific customer as is required by paragraph 9. Nor is there any indication of the difference in use before and after the City acquired the utility. Also, River Commons consists of larger homes with larger yards. There is no indication that the comparison is made with comparable neighborhoods in South Bend. Rather, it is apparent that the comparison is with the City as a whole which likely consists of numerous smaller households which would naturally use much less water, thus making the comparison irrelevant and invalid. Under any circumstance this is clearly a genuinely controverted issue as to a material fact, and summary judgment is inappropriate as a matter of law.

This issue concerning the contract interpretation is extremely important in this case. As was cited above, the Public Service Commission has jurisdiction over the operation of utilities, but it does not have jurisdiction over issues involving construction or breach of a contract between a utility and a customer. Indiana Telephone Corp. vs. Indiana Bell Telephone Co., Inc. supra. If this is not a contract case, the court should have refused jurisdiction. If it is a contract case, the court should have considered the contract language as a whole, not just two paragraphs. And it should have considered the vital question of fact raised rather than granting summary judgment.

The distinction between contract and utility issue is sharply focused in the case at bar. In its summary judgment (Tr. p. 138-143) the court cited two main reasons for its conclusion that the City had the right to install water meters. The first reason was based on an interpretation of the wording in an order of the Public Service Commission. Since the commissions order incorporated a schedule of rates and charges that included both non-metered and metered rates, the court concluded that the City and its prior owner had the right to install the meters. (Tr. p. 141). A conclusion on that basis is clearly within the sole province of the PSC. Indiana Telephone Corp., id; Indiana Forge and Machine Company, Inc. vs. N.I.P.S.C.O., supra.

The second basis for the trial courts ruling was the interpretation of the so called Rules and Regulations, a self described contract. The court cites the reference to meters in paragraph 6 and 7 as additional authority for the City and the utility's prior owner to install meters. (Tr. p. 141). While the court does have authority to interpret such a contract, Indiana Telephone Corp., supra., in the process the trial court, as argued above, has completely disregarded the contract as a whole, the ambiguities, the conflicting terms, the "application" as an integral part of the contract, the misrepresentations made regarding the application, and above all the failure of the City to distribute the Rules and Regulations as required by the PSC rules.

The court lacks jurisdiction to interpret and enforce the Public Service Commission order. When turning to the contract, the surrounding circumstances involve numerous genuine issues of material fact that make summary judgment completely inappropriate.

D. The Application For Water, Sewer and Trash Service, When Given To and Signed By Some of the River Commons Users, Was Done So Through Misrepresentation of Purpose and Content By the Representatives of the City, Thus Rendering It Unenforceable

As has been shown above, paragraph 2 of the Rules and Regulations requires, as one part of the overall contract, a written application for service. The City has apparently admitted, through its actions and affidavits, that the signed application is a necessary authorization and a condition precedent to its installation of a meter for an individual customer. In his supplemental Affidavit Michael Vance goes so far as to say that all 131 users who applied for service after the October 4, 1979 approval of the lease-purchase have signed this application. (Tr. p. 89). His affidavit admits that at least 53 customers have no such contract, which contract is necessary for the enforcement of the Rules and Regulations. That uncontroverted fact alone disallows the utility to force meters on at least 53 customers.

More significant, however, is the issue of the other 131 customers. As is indicated by the affidavits submitted by the users, there is a serious question of fact as to whether those contracts were signed by all of the users. (Tr. p. 103-127). Someone not authorized to sign executed the document for Kenneth and Mary Farwig (Tr. p. 110) and for Christine Etzel. (Tr. p. 114). To their recollection, the document was never signed by Daniel and Judith Kloc, (Tr. p. 108), Arvid Patel, (Tr. p. 106), and Richard Ringhofer. (Tr. p. 122). The City acknowledges that it needs these documents properly signed, yet there is a genuine issue as to a material fact whether they were properly signed or signed at all.

In addition, the document was misrepresented to some of the customers who executed the document. The water works employee told Patrick Conroy that the application was a verification of his deposit and the fee was the same even if he didn't have a meter. (Tr. p. 120). Therefore he signed the document. Pamela Ward signed the application because she was told that it was a receipt for her deposit. (Tr. p. 118). Marvis Pillman told the water works employee he wanted no meter and she said he was to sign a receipt for his deposit. (Tr. p. 116). Jennifer Lahey said she didn't want a meter, and that she and her husband were leasing the property. She was told the form was a receipt for deposit and service charge. (Tr. p. 126).

In interpreting a written contract the court must attempt to determine the intent of the parties from the language of the contract. R.R. Donnelley & Sons, Co. vs. Henry-Williams, Inc., (1981), —— Ind. App. ——, 422 N.E.2d 353. But if the contract is ambiguous and the meaning is to be determined by extrinsic evidence, it is a question of fact. R.R. Donnelley & Sons, Co., id.

Under certain conditions, to knowingly misstate the contents of a writing and to purposely misstate the facts which would cause signing the same as fraud. Fleetwood Corp. vs Mirich (1980) 404 N.E.2d 38.

"A party to a contract may rely on the representations of fact where the exercise of reasonable prudence does not dictate otherwise. The mere occurrence of a false representation does not necessarily require the other party to ascertain the truth of the representation." State Farm Mutual Auto Insurance Co. vs. Price (1979), —— Ind. App. ——, 396 N.E.2d 134.

The customer had no reason to believe otherwise. The service was and has been provided at the flat rate just as the utility employee said, the "application" notwithstanding. There are many material facts which must be examined in detail. Summary Judgment is proper only if there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Middelkamp vs. Hanewich (1977), —— Ind. App. ——, 364 N.E.2d 1024. To find by summary judgment that the City has the legal right to install meters without examining these material facts is contrary to law and the Court of Appeals should reverse the summary judgment of the trial court and order a trial on the contractual issues over which the lower court has jurisdiction.

E. The City Has Waived Its Right To Install Meters Under the Provisions of a Written Contract If Any Did Exist, And Under the Facts of This Case

It remains the position of the appellant water users that the trial court did not have jurisdiction over the issues exclusively in the province of the PSC. However, since part of the two-fold reason for authorizing the City to install meters was based on interpretation of the PSC order, the water customers contend that, based on documents and evidence presented to the PSC, the City waived its "right", if any, to install the meters.

The customers, by all accounts, are presently on a flat rate of $7.50 per month. This has been the case both before and after the lease purchase was approved by the PSC on October 4, 1979. The two written documents that have been introduced into evidence by the City are the Rules and Regulations (Tr. p. 92-100) and the "Application for Water, Sewer and Trash Service" (Tr. p. 101) (hereinafter referred to as "Application"). As has been discussed above, the Rules and Regulations provide for a flat rate as an alternative to the metered rate under some situations. The Applications seem to require a meter before delivery of water service.

In its Declaratory Judgment, the Court has defined waiver as 'the intentional relinquishment of known right, claim or privilege". (Tr. p. 141). We have no quarrel with that definition. The facts presented to the Court in the form of affidavits and in the form of a transcript of the hearing before PSC (as was stipulated by both parties) very clealy raise the fact issue of waiver as defined by this Court.

The law in Indiana on waiver focuses strongly on actions of the parties to a contract. In Rembold Motors, Inc. vs. Bonfield (1973), 155 Ind. App. 422, 293 N.E.2d 210, the Court ruled that if the lessor accepted late payments that it constituted a waiver, regardless of the written contract. The City has obviously waived the provisions of the written "contracts" by providing water service without meters for the $7.50 flat rate. A contractual provision may be implied waived by the knowing and willing acquiscence of a party for whose benefit the provisions were inserted. Terry vs. International Dairy Queen, Inc. (D.C. Ind. 1983) 554 F.Supp. 1088.

"Once a contract condition has been waived and the waiver has been acted upon, the failure to perform the condition cannot be the basis for breach of the contract. Furthermore, waiver may be implied by the acts, omissions or conduct of one of the parties to the contract. Integrity Ins. Co. vs. Lindsey (1983), —— Ind. App. ——, 444 N.E.2d 345.

(The Court, in that case, upheld a denial of a Summary Judgment motion because of the existence of material issues of fact regarding the waiver).

At the September 19, 1979 hearing before the PSC then Director of Utilities for South Bend, John Stancati, testified that there were no meters in River Commons (Tr. p. 178), that the City at the time did not contemplate changing existing rates (Tr. p. 179) and that the City did not contemplate increasing the rates above the $7.50 level. (Tr. p. 80). The objective of the line of questioning by the Public Counselor was to ascertain if the City intended to install meters to generate additional revenue to pay for the Laurel Woods extension. The City steadfastly stood by the sufficiency of the flat rate. That is clearly a waiver made before the PSC in order to insure approval of the lease purchase.

Accountant Michael Smith, CPA, testified at the hearing that the River commons customers were paying $7.50 per month (Tr. p. 182); that is assumpton and projections were based on "present" rates ($7.50) through 1986, really 1989 (Tr. p. 183); that in his opinion the rates presently established for the River Commons utility would be sufficient (Tr. p. 183); that the City represented to him, as a basis for his projections, that the $7.50 flat rate would be maintained through 1989 (Tr. p. 184); and that he was instructed, when forming his conclusions, that there would be no rate increase. (Tr. p. 185).

The October 4, 1979 order approving the lease purchase set forth explicit limitations restricting the City from assessing the River Commons customers with additional charges to pay for Laurel Woods extensions. (Tr. p. 73-80). To gain that approval, the City testified through its two key witnesses that it did not contemplate anything but the $7.50 flat rate through 1989. Such action is the "intentional relinquishment of a known right". It certainly presents a genuine issue as to a material fact, and the Court's disregard for that fact issue makes the summary judgment contrary to law.

Also, since waiver may be derived by the acts or omissions of a party, the City's providing water service at a flat rate when its "contracts', especially the application, provide otherwise, is a strong basis for waiver. As shown above, the manner in which signatures for the Application were (or were not) obtained and the failure to distribute the Rules and Regulations are further evidence that the City waived its "Right" to install meters.

CONCLUSION

The court has no jurisdiction over Public Service Commission matters, especially with the repeal of I.C. 19-3-11-5. In confining itself to contractual issues only, the court is not only obligated to consider the writing as a whole, but also to resolve ambiguities by considering extrinsic evidence. Rather than granting summary judgment the court should have considered at trial the ambiguities, the conflicting terms, the "application" as an essential part of the contract.

Mr. EAGLETON. I ask unanimous consent that the evaluation of this Lindower brief, as done by the Chicago Council of Lawyers, be printed in the RECORD immediately following the Lindower brief.

There being no objection, the evaluation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CHICAGO COUNCIL OF LAWYERS,
Chicago, IL, April 29, 1986.

Hon. PAUL SIMON,
Dirksen Senate Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SIMON: The following is the Chicago Council of Lawyers' evaluaton of a brief written for the Indiana Court of Appeals by Daniel A. Manion, in the case of Jason D. Lindower, et al. v. City of South Bend, No. 3-3841473. We provide this evaluation pursuant to your request. You have also told us that you would like us to review additional briefs written by Mr. Manion. We understand that you received those additional briefs last Saturday. Please keep in mind that our comments below pertain to only one brief written by Mr. Manion.

In perusing this brief for the purpose of evaluating Mr. Manion's qualifications, the Council took into account the position for which he seeks consideration. As we noted in our letter to you of April 9, 1986 concerning Mr. Manion:

"The Chicago Council of Lawyers believes that in order to be found qualified for appointment to the United States Court of Appeals, a candidate must have outstanding intellectual qualifications as demonstrated by performance in practice or scholarship. The most outstanding candidates should have established an exemplary record in both areas."

Assuming this brief to have been a recent product, rather than one drafted by him early in his career, it demonstrates a low level of competency compared to the excellence to which the judiciary and the public are entitled.

The brief contains numerous typographical errors, including:

Page 2: Contract is misspelled "contrct" in heading E.

Page 5: "Customer's" should be "customers'".

Page 6: The word "of" is missing between "the opening paragraph" and "those Rules".

Page 8: "Definitely" is misspelled "definately".

Page 9: "Memorandum in Support if its Motion".

Page 10: "Its Motion" should be "their Motion".

Page 11: "Casses" should be "cases".

Page 26: "Commissions" should be "commission's".

Numerous grammatical and syntactical errors similarly reflect adversely on Mr. Manion, viz.:

Page 5: "The City, abided by their sworn testimony" should read "the City abided by its sworn testimony". In the phrase "over which the trial court had jurisdiction is the lack of contractual authority", the "is" should be "was".

Page 5: The sentence "First, because of the representations made at the hearing in Indianapolis before the Public Service Commission." is incomplete.

Page 6: In the phrase "a major discrepancy from Michael Vance's testimony", the word "from" should be "in".

Page 12: In the phrase "the Indiana Telephone case is a narrow distinction", the word "is" should be "draws" (or some other suitable verb).

Page 19: The word "part" is incorrectly emphasized. If any word deserves emphasis, it is the word "every".

Page 25: In the sentence "the distinction between contract and utility issue * * *.", either the word "a" or "the" should appear after the word "between", or the word "issue" should be plural.

Page 29: The sentence "Under certain conditions to knowingly misstate the contents of a writing and to purposely misstate the facts which would cause signing the same as fraud." is obviously garbled.

Page 31: In the phrase "the Court rules that if the lessor accepted late payments that it constituted a waiver", the second use of the word "that" is incorrect.

Page 33: In the phrase "since waiver may be derived by the acts", the word "by" should be "from".

The numerous typographical errors, grammatical mistakes, and syntactical errors in the brief raise concerns about Mr. Manion's ability to write, a key qualification for a judge of the Court of Appeals.

Moreover, in addition to the errors noted above, the brief lacks precision in its expression and argument. Putting aside the grammatical and syntactical errors, many of those who reviewed this brief for the Council commented that the quality of its content fell far below what one should expect from a candidate for the Seventh Circuit.

Very truly yours,

THOMAS F. GERAGHTY,
Chair, Federal Judicial Evaluation Committee.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, the Lindower brief is the one that came over the transom. The other five were the ones that Mr. Manion submitted as his best briefs. This is the one that came to the Judiciary Committee anonymously. Mr. Manion acknowledges it, though, as being his brief.

Mr. BIDEN and Mr. JOHNSTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. THE Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I shall be very brief.

There are three judges currently in the news. There is Mr. Justice Rehnquist, lately nominated to be Chief Justice; there is Judge Scalia, nominated to be Justice; and there is Daniel Manion.

Justice Rehnquist is so conservative that when first nominated to the court, his staffers awarded him a little statue of the Lone Ranger. That is because he was a majority of one, time and time again, and the office joke was that Mr. Justice Rehnquist was the Lone Ranger because he was so conservative that nobody else on the court would go with him.

Mr. President, when the President of the United States nominated Justice Rehnquist, I, along with most of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, said, "There is a man of quality, of intellect, of proven capacity, with all of those qualities that a Supreme Court Chief Justice ought to have."

I, for one, said, "I am for him. Send him up, Mr. President, and I will vote yes."

□ 1700

When Judge Scalia came up, they also said he is a man who is extremely conservative. He is a man also of great intellectual energy, of charm, of mental capacity, of integrity, of all of those other things which go to make up a fine judge. My reaction, when I heard of Judge Scalia was, if he appears at the committee hearing as he is talked about in the press, I also am enthusiastically for him, because he will certainly improve or be up to the standards of the Supreme Court when it comes to capacity, intellect, competence, and those other qualities of a judge that generally go with what we expect of the standards of the Supreme Court.

The third judge, Mr. President, is Daniel Manion, and to utter his name in the same breath with Judge Rehnquist and Judge Scalia is almost to make a joke. We are told that we ought to accept this third-quality or fourth-quality lawyer for the second highest court in the land because he is conservative. Because he is conservative, we ought to accept any judge that is sent up to us.

Mr. President, I say that is so much bunk. We in this Senate will not measure up to our own standards of integrity if we do not exercise some independent judgment and require some standards of quality when it comes to the second-highest court in the land.

Mr. President, I have read these briefs. Why, in one of these briefs there are six different errors on one page, not simple errors. Some are misspellings. They are generally the mark of a sloppy lawyer, not just a lawyer of medium quality but a sloppy lawyer. They are so bad, Mr. President, that you would have to say to make that many mistakes in any brief turned into any court of record disqualifies that judge for this kind of position.

Now, I do not say that Mr. Manion should be disbarred. I do not say that Mr. Manion should be dishonored. I do not say that Mr. Manion would not be a perfectly competent attorney in a whole range of endeavors, small claims, whatever it is. He would probably do an excellent job. But for the second-highest court in the land, the court of appeals, Mr. President, the fact that he is conservative is not enough. The fact that he might have voted right on right-to-life—and I think I have an unblemished record on right-to-life, but do not tell me Mr. President, that I have to vote for every judge that is sent up here if he happens to agree with me on the right-to-life issue. If that is the standard, why, send up my wife; she is probably stronger on right-to-life than I am, if that is possible.

Mr. President, we ought to have some quality, and we ought to have something better out of the White House than these veiled threats about trying to identify Senators as being part of the liberal claque around here if they do not approve every judge of whatever quality that is sent to us. I think that is offensive to this body, Mr. President, and I think the President of the United States ought to retract his statement and look at his nominee, and if that nominee is as poor in quality as all these law school deans say, as a thousand lawyers out of Chicago say, as commentator after commentator says, then I think the President ought to rethink his criticism of this body and withdraw his name and send us up, if he likes—and I am sure he would—a strong conservative, a strong right-to-life person but someone with a little judicial competence. This man has none.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we are within about 5 minutes of completing a very important bill, the Diplomatic Security and Antiterrorism Act of 1986. But now we are hearing speeches on the Manion nomination. I do not object to that. Last night nobody wanted to talk. Tonight I think others do. But I hope that we complete action on the pending bill. I understand we are 5 or 10 minutes away from final passage, there are two amendments by the distinguished minority leader which would be accepted and the bill will end. Then I am proposing we have 2 hours of debate yet this evening on Manion, equally divided, and tomorrow have another 2 hours equally divided and then vote on the Manion nomination at 1 o'clock, at least on cloture. But I think what we see here is a little judicial assassination, not even giving the man the right to have an up-or-down vote. It has been a policy decision apparently, political decision, that we are going to take care of this guy and not going to invoke cloture, and therefore he will never have a chance to have a vote up or down of whether or not he should be confirmed. I believe that is unfortunate. I hope that is not the case. But I sort of sense that it is starting to boil on the other side. I hope that we would treat this nomination as we have many in the past. I can recall after the election in 1980, a candidate by the name of Stephen Breyer, a Carter nonimee, and there was a cloture motion filed. I voted with those who wanted the Breyer nomination voted up or down. It seems to me that is the least we can do for someone who comes before this Chamber.

So, Mr. President, until we work out some agreement, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1710

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DIPLOMATIC SECURITY AND ANTITERRORISM ACT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 2192

(Purpose: To coordinate further the international war on terrorism)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for himself and Mr. DIXON, proposes an amendment numbered 2192:

On page 129, after line 3, add the following new section:

SEC. 702. COORDINATION OF INTERNATIONAL WAR ON TERRORISM.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) international terrorism is and remains a serious threat to the peace and security of free, democratic nations;

(2) the challenge of terrorism can only be met effectively by concerted action on the part of all responsible nations;

(3) the major developed democracies evidenced their commitment to cooperation in the fight to save terrorism by the 1978 Bonn Economic Summit Declaration on Terrorism; and

(4) that commitment was renewed and strengthened at the Tokyo Economic Summit and expressed in a joint statement on terrorism.

(b) POLICY.—It is the sense of the Congress that in order to concert action and increase information sharing in the international war on terrorism, the President should propose to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) the establishment of a standing political committee to examine all aspects of international terrorism, review opportunities for cooperation, and make recommendations to member nations.

On page 91, in the table of contents, after the item relating to section 701, insert the following new item:

"Sec. 702. Coordination of international war on terrorism.".

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no reason for the United States to go it alone in the war on state-sponsored terrorism. The President's decisive action against Libya left residual bitterness in the minds of many Americans when they learned that our allies had refused to support the raid.

This administration has been accused of a unilateral policy of not consulting or including our closest allies until too late in the planning of major actions affecting them, or only after the fact. We need to regularize our discussions on areas of mutual interest. Nowhere is that need greater than in the face of the challenge of global terrorism.

I offer an amendment today that will encourage such cooperation by building upon antiterrorist commitments undertaken by heads of the developed democracies and expressed in the Bonn summit declaration against terrorism, and the recent Tokyo summit statement.

My amendment expresses the sense of the Congress that the President should propose that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization should establish a permanent political committee to deal with the subject of terrorism. NATO has been reluctant to exceed its mandate of cooperation against the Warsaw Pact threat. But the new international terrorism has targeted NATO interests, as well as those of individual member states.

The North Atlantic Assembly has established a working group on terrorism, and the NATO military structure has made strides toward better information sharing. However, a political committee of NATO would provide an important forum for government-to-government cooperation and policy discussions on terrorism. Such a committee could help in building a consensus for joint action, and in weighing options on a case-by-case basis.

Given the rise of state-sponsored terrorism, it is all the more important that like-minded governments share in planning a response.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, the able Democratic leader has made an excellent contribution to this legislation. Our side is prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the Democratic side is delighted to accept the amendment of the Democratic leader and recommends its immediate adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2192) was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the able chairman and the able ranking member of the committee for their acceptance of the amendment.

□ 1720

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I believe it is a good amendment. I thank the Senate for adopting it.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DANFORTH). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. DOLE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AGENDA

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have an amendment to the bill, an amendment on Afghanistan. I would like to discuss that amendment. It will take a little while, not very long. I think the amendment deserves some little bit of time, 30 minutes, 35 minutes, or 40 minutes, at least.

Some of my colleagues want to discuss the Manion nomination. Tomorrow there will be a vote on the cloture motion. That does not give my colleagues a great deal of time in which to discuss that nomination.

I would hope that they could discuss the nomination this afternoon and evening as much as they desire to do so. I would hope that the distinguished majority leader would allow them to do that.

I know that the distinguished majority leader wants to get on with finishing this bill, and I am perfectly agreeable to doing that.

However, I am agreeable to delaying my amendment, because the cloture vote is coming up on us under the rule, and there is no way of delaying that except by unanimous consent.

Those of us on this side who are opposed to the Manion nomination do want some time to discuss it before we have to vote on cloture.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, I yield for a question.

Mr. BIDEN. As I understand it, we have a bill before us to be finished. We have a supplemental to be finished. Yet we have a cloture vote set for tomorrow at 11 o'clock. Is that the minority leader's understanding?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there has been no order entered with respect to setting the cloture vote at a time outside the requirements of the rule. The rule would be that if the distinguished majority leader brings the Senate in at 10 o'clock tomorrow, then the cloture vote would occur a little after 11 o'clock. Whatever hour the distinguished majority leader brings the Senate in would determine the hour when the Senate would vote on cloture, because under the rule there is only 1 hour for debate on that cloture motion.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield for another question?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, I yield.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator from Delaware is under the understanding that the purpose of the cloture vote was to end debate. The assumption is that there was going to be debate before you move to end the debate. I know that we have the bill before us. There is the supplemental, which the majority leader indicates is important, and I agree with him on that, to deal with when the House sends it over, if it is not already here. I am confused as to how we can be accused of wanting to extend the debate, therefore, requiring a cloture motion to cut off the debate before we are allowed to engage in the debate.

The majority leader said last night that he was bringing it on last night. But I was told as I stood up to speak that the majority leader wanted to take us out by 6:30 p.m. I stood on the floor in response to a question. The majority leader said it was the intention to end by 6 or 6:30 p.m. The Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Massachusetts were prepared to go ahead. Instead, I gave an 8-minute statement last night to accommodate the Senate, thinking we had a chance to debate it today.

My question to the Senator from West Virginia is how can there be a motion to cut off debate that has not begun?

Mr. BYRD. Well, the distinguished Senator poses a very appropriate question. If the debate has not begun, it cannot be cut off. The Senator's observation is correct. I must say, of course, that the distinguished majority leader is acting within the rule. He may go to a matter in executive session without any debate on the motion—which he did. He may then immediately offer a cloture motion thereon, which he did, and he can do all that within the rule. Then, on the following day but one—in this situation, the cloture motion having been entered on Tuesday, the Senate will vote on the cloture motion on Thursday, 1 hour after the Senate convenes and following the establishment of a quorum.

So the majority leader is doing what he can do within the rules.

On the other hand, my colleagues who wish to debate the nomination are not being given much of an opportunity to do so. Once the Pastore rule had run its course today, of course, debate did not then have to be germane. An executive nomination can then be debated during legislative session, and that is what my colleagues were undertaking to do.

A quorum was suggested earlier a short time ago. I take it that the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Massachusetts wanted to discuss the nomination, but the distinguished majority leader would not let the quorum call be called off.

I called the quorum off for the purpose of calling up an amendment to the bill. But I do want to take the opportunity, while I have the floor, to state that I think our colleagues should have had more time today and tomorrow to discuss this nomination.

It would require unanimous consent on tomorrow to extend the cloture vote beyond the time allowed by the rule, and the majority leader has proposed a request which is being checked out on this side. That request would allow for 2 hours tomorrow for debate rather than 1 hour.

I have not given my approval to the request, and that request would have to be run on our cloakroom lines as is the normal course.

□ 1730

However, if there is objection, then we are faced with the hard fact that we only have 1 hour for debate of the nomination under the rule.

Mr. DOLE. Will the distinguished minority leader yield?

Mr. BYRD. Yes; I yield without losing my right to the floor to the distinguished majority leader for a question or for a statement.

Mr. DOLE. Probably more in order of a statement, maybe with a question at the end.

Mr. BYRD. I yield for that purpose, Mr. President, with the Chair protecting my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the minority leader.

I would just say, in trying to recollect, I think on Monday I was asked by the minority leader what the schedule might be for the week, because we start a recess on Friday, and what we had to do this week, what we would like to do this week. I believe, I have to check the RECORD, that I prepared in writing some information. I think I even handed it to the distinguished minority leader after I had used my leader's time.

Obviously, in that list, there might have been one or two things that are not going to get done. But, in that list was the supplemental, the housing bill, the Embassy Security Act, the Manion nomination, the Commodity Futures Trading Act, the Terrence Scanlon nomination, and I think a couple of other items.

The only point I suggest is now we are trying to figure out if we can squeeze that all in and complete action by Thursday evening. I have discussed this with this distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator HATFIELD. He reluctantly agreed to take the supplemental up tomorrow so we can debate the Manion nomination this evening. And that is a very important bill.

As I look at coming in at 11 o'clock tomorrow, by unanimous consent, having 2 hours of debate, we would vote on cloture on the Manion nomination—unless there should be some agreement to vote up or down on the nomination, which I think would be the best course of action to follow—then we hope to have three treaty votes following that and we would be on the supplemental by about 2 p.m. tomorrow.

It is my understanding that the House will be in session until we pass an adjournment resolution, but they plan on going out at 5 or 6 o'clock. That would leave 3 or 4 hours on the supplemental.

As I understand it, there are 60-some amendments in disagreement. We understand that there may be record votes requested for some of them. So it is on that basis that we are trying to finish this bill.

I certainly am prepared, if they want to debate it this evening, that is no problem, except the distinguished chairman of the committee is not here this evening. But, again, we can find another member of the committee on this side if they want a dialog or want an exchange to ask questions back and forth.

So there is no effort on the part of the majority leader to deny anyone the right to debate the Manion nomination. I think I asked the distinguished Senator from Delaware last evening what he would do if he were in my shoes and he said, "I think I would sort of proceed the way you are proceeding by filing a cloture petition," at least by inference.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, that was last night.

Mr. DOLE. That is when I stated.

So I think we ought to debate the Manion nomination. I think it ought to be on both sides. I do not believe we ought to be trying to defeat him by cloture. But, again, that is a judgment that can be made. We hope to discuss the precedent for that tomorrow on this side.

But, in any event, I would like to finish the pending legislation. It could be done in 5 minutes, or maybe 30 minutes with whatever the minority leader said he might take on that.

Then I would be perfectly happy that the Senator from Delaware, the Senator from Massachusetts, or any other Senator speak on either side. But they were suggesting that we stay until 10 or 11 o'clock tonight. I would rather not do that. I want to hear the distinguished Senator from Delaware, but not for 5 hours.

It seems to me there really is not any problem. If we could finish this bill then I will ask that we lay before the Senate the nomination. I do not have anything to say on it. I would be happy to yield the floor to anyone who wants it.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the minority leader yield?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Delaware with the same understanding as when I yielded to the majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. I say to my friend from Kansas, through my friend from West Virginia, that there are—it must be an interesting exercise to the American people to watch how we talk to one another—but I say indirectly to my friend, the majority leader, that we have 13 Senators on the Democratic side who wish to speak and have all along wished to speak on the Manion nomination. That ranges from people who wish to speak a few minutes to people who wish to speak an hour or so.

I assume, although I have not found them, that there are probably about 13 people who want to speak for Manion. This Senator is anxious to engage someone in debate—anxious to engage one of the proponents of the Manion nomination in debate on the merits of this argument. I am here and waiting for that. I am ready to do that, as my colleagues are.

So, I assume there would be at least 13 people who are willing to carry the nominee's water on the other side, or some requisite number. There must be somebody for him over there who is willing to speak for him.

And just counting the 13 we have, plus, I assume, the number that is going to come from the Republican side, I do not see how this can be done in a couple of hours.

I further would state that I do not know what the hurry is. If the distinguished majority leader wishes to move on these other matters and the clock is running against us in terms of the recess, then he could vitiate the order for the cloture vote and we could take up the Manion nomination when we come back.

But to vote now or after 2 hours tomorrow morning, or a total of 4 hours today, with all the people who wish to speak to this important nomination, it seems to me to be a little inappropriate.

I want to make it clear that there is no intention on our part to not deal with the substance of this issue; that is, the qualifications of the gentleman from Indiana. So we are ready to talk.

My reluctance in finishing this bill and then starting the discussion on Mr. Manion is twofold: one is the point that the majority leader made, that the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the man who is carrying the case for Mr. Manion, is not here to debate. That is No. 1. No. 2, that it is not likely that others will come to the floor to make the case for Mr. Manion. Although I would love to hear my colleague from Massachusetts, and I am sure he is equally enthralled with my voice, we get to talk to one another a lot on this. I just do not want to be here talking with like-minded people. I would like to find out where I am wrong on this nominee, and it seems to me that we are not going to get much debate.

The Senator from Kansas, which is his right, might very well, after 2 hours, say, "Let's go home" He can, you know. That is possible; right?

So that is my concern, I say to my friend from West Virginia, the Democratic leader. I am anxious to debate. Thirteen of my colleagues are anxious to engage in debate. It is a matter of substance. It is a very important matter, as are these other matters.

I believe we could work out an accommodation in time. But I just tell my friend from West Virginia, the Democratic leader, that I do not see how that can be done with a 4-hour period, 2 hours on a side.

I thank my colleague from West Virginia for allowing me to speak to my colleague from Kansas through my colleague from West Virginia.

Mr. DOLE. Will the minority leader yield just for a comment without losing his right to the floor?

Mr. BYRD. I yield for a comment.

Mr. DOLE. Just let me put it on the table. I am going to be here Friday. It does not make any difference to me whether we meet on Friday or not. I am prepared to devote all day tomorrow to Manion, get a unanimous-consent request that we come in at 11 o'clock and vote on cloture at 6 tomorrow evening. That is fine with me.

What we are going to do with the supplemental at that point—if we do not pass an adjournment resolution, the House will be here on Friday.

□ 1740

I do not have any problem. I am here. But I have already had, I must say very honestly, I think two Members from each side saying "When can we leave on Thursday? My plane is at 4 o'clock."

So I just suggest in trying to accommodate the wishes of Members who have important engagements outside of Washington starting late tomorrow we try to arrange a schedule. I do not have any problem with being here on Friday. If it takes that for an important nomination, then Members ought to stay here.

Beyond that, if we can finish the pending legislation, I do not want anybody cut off tonight. I have no intention of doing that as long as somebody is speaking. But if the Senator is looking for an exchange, then we will try to provide that.

Mr. BIDEN. I say to my friend from West Virginia, if he will yield, that is fine with me.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, did the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts wish me to yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I am not quite sure. How is this left, Mr. Leader? I have been wanting to speak on this for the last 3 or 4 hours. How are we leaving this now? I am quite prepared to speak on it. Also I am glad to see the process of the Senate working its will. Where are we?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the question is a good question. If I might make a suggestion respectfully to the distinguished majority leader, it is his call to make. The millstone is grinding very hard against those who want to debate this nomination. As I have already stated, I do not need to say it again, the distinguished majority leader has acted within the rules. The rules are pretty hard. It is a decision for the majority leader to make as to whether he wants to allow some debate for a day or two or whatever before he offers a cloture motion. He elected to offer it immediately. I have done that myself in the past.

So I have to concede that a majority leader has to make that judgment based on the circumstances as he sees them at the time. But I must also say to the distinguished majority leader, for his consideration I hope, that the minority allowed the Embassy security legislation to come up today without any objection. The minority could have objected, in which case the majority leader then could have moved, to it but there would have been debate on the motion to proceed in that event. But the minority did not seek to object to that request.

Second, I share the distinguished majority leader's feeling and that of the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. HATFIELD, that it is very necessary that the Senate act quickly on the conference report on the supplemental appropriations bill. But I must say for the record for all Senators that, if cloture is invoked tomorrow, then it will take unanimous consent to go to the supplemental appropriations conference report because, under the rule, once cloture is invoked, the Senate can go to no other business, except by unanimous concent, until the matter that has been clotured is disposed of.

So if cloture were to be invoked tomorrow, I am afraid we might not get to the supplemental appropriations bill at all, since it would require unanimous consent.

I wonder if the distinguished majority leader would consider, and I think he has shown great understanding and reason in suggesting that the debate go on on cloture until 6 o'clock tomorrow evening. I wonder if the distinguished majority leader would consider—and he may not wish to so indicate at this point—delaying the cloture vote until Friday. Meanwhile, we could go ahead and dispose of the supplemental appropriations bill, as well as the Embassy security bill this evening, and then the Senators would have all day tomorrow, if the leader would agree, to talk about the Manion nomination. Up to this moment, I should point out, that the Senate has formally debated the Manion nomination 39 minutes—only 39 minutes.

So I have tried to lay it out as well as I know how, saying that the majority leader is certainly within his rights. He has operated within the rules, But I also say that my colleagues who wish to say something about the Manion nomination—and that includes this Senator—it seems to me we are not going to have adequate time to do so in the time that is left this evening and tomorrow.

I hope that my suggestion will be considered by the distinguished majority leader.

Second, I ask the distinguished majority leader if he would not object to a quorum being called off so Senators who want to, can speak on the Manion nomination. They cannot even speak on it if a quorum cannot be called off.

Mr. DOLE. If the Senator will yield.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. I think we sort of had an indirect agreement there. I suggested and I think the Senator from Delaware indicated he has no problem with that, that we go ahead and complete the pending business, that I would call up the nomination and yield the floor. Then they can debate. If it takes 2 hours, it will take 2 hours. If it takes 3 hours, it will take 3 hours. Then we could come in tomorrow still a couple of hours before the cloture vote and dispose of the supplemental business by tomorrow evening. I would hate to drag it into Friday because there are some Members who may be opposed to the nomination who do not want to invoke cloture but they do not want to miss the vote. Plus to be very candid, already I know I am going to lose a couple of votes Friday. They already have their tickets in their hands, so to speak. So, I thought the Senator from Delaware indicated he had no problem with completing this bill within 5 minutes, and he could speak.

Mr. BIDEN. If I may—

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Delaware to respond to the distinguished majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection.

Mr. BIDEN. I say to the majority leader, "I did not realize the supplemental was here already and was a privileged matter." It seems to me the suggestion made by the minority leader makes a lot of sense. If we can, I am willing to go to the bill before us now, finish it, bring up the supplemental, debate that, vote on that tonight, since everyone has to be here anyway and then tomorrow set a reasonable time to debate the Manion nomination until whatever appropriate time the majority leader would set for the cloture vote because then the Senator from South Carolina would be back. We would then be in a position to debate the issue. Other Senators who want to speak in favor of Mr. Manion will be here.

I am not being facetious when I say this. We can have hopefully an illuminating debate for our benefit and for the benefit of the public. That is fine by me.

Mr. DOLE. If the Senator will yield, if the minority leader will yield, now we are talking about something else totally different. I would prefer not to do that. I would like to leave it like it is and try to work out our problem if there is a problem.

We could have finished this bill 40 minutes ago, and the Senator would have had his speech partly made by now.

Mr. BYRD. If the distinguished majority leader would have let the Senator call off the quorum.

Mr. DOLE. It is just a test of wills of whether we are going to pass this bill before Senator BIDEN speaks. We can play that game all evening. I thought he wanted to speak on the nomination. Senator PELL and Senator LUGAR have been on the floor most of the day. I assume they are willing to wait, if necessary. It seems to me it is a little bit too much here to suggest we cannot complete action on the bill, let Senator BIDEN speak, and Senator KENNEDY, whoever, and we will have someone on this side in the absence of Senator THURMOND to come so they can have a little debate. By the time we find that person, maybe they will be ready to talk. But I would rather not inject a third element into it now.

Mr. BIDEN. If I may, for the last time, I have no objection to going to this bill, finishing the bill, and then going to the Manion nomination. The only reason I raised the alternative was that I am concerned that if, in fact, cloture is invoked, then are we now going to be put in the position of those of us who want to then conduct the debate under the rule—so that we have a full debate on Mr. Manion—to be put in the position to be told we are stopping the supplemental from coming up because once cloture is invoked, as the able Democratic leader pointed out, that is a matter that we cannot move from until we end. Are we not into Friday or Saturday? But if the majority leader will give me a gentleman's agreement that while the Senator from Delaware, after he invokes cloture, if he does invoke cloture, is operating under the rules, he will not repeatedly stand on the floor and tell America that those folks on the Manion nomination are really just driving the supplemental out of reach of the American people, et cetera? That is the only thing I am concerned about, to be fairly blunt about it, I say to the majority leader.

□ 1750

But if that will not happen, then I am delighted to do it the way the majority leader would like to proceed.

I did not hear his answer, but I am curious.

Mr. DOLE. I would be happy to work it out. If we invoke cloture, I would certainly try to get the 8-hour agreement I thought we were going to get earlier this week on the nomination; 4 hours on each side. that is what we hoped would happen. We did not think there would be this backdoor approach to kill the nomination.

Mr. BIDEN. The backdoor approach?

Mr. EXON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the distinguished Senator for a question. I ask unanimous consent that I may yield for the purpose of the Senator from Nebraska's asking a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, early last week sometime the majority leader and I had a little colloquy on the floor wherein we stipulated the tremendous importance of the urgent supplemental. At that time, we could not act on it because it had not passed the House of Representatives. I thought we had an agreement at that time that we would give it priority or immediate consideration when it came over. It is now here.

This Senator came on the floor at 4 o'clock today prepared to engage in debate and move along on the urgent supplemental for a number of good reasons, not the least of which is farmers throughout the United States have not gotten their money that they are entitled to for signing up for the farm bill, mainly with regard to deficiency payments, and they are busted.

As important as the Manion nomination is, and as important as the security legislation before us is, would it be out of order for this Senator to suggest that maybe we could put aside both of those and dispose of them after we pass the urgent supplemental?

I am asking the majority leader.

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee was here at 4 o'clock. He was advised that if we would complete action on this bill by 4:30, he was ready to go with the supplemental. I suggest that other Members felt compelled to speak on the Manion nomination. The Senator from Missouri made an excellent speech. Others would still like to speak on the Manion nomination.

At about 5:20 or 5:30, I believe it was, the Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the manager of the supplemental appropriations bill, departed. He did not see any opportunity, and I do not know whether there is one now. I told him, "You may want to place a phone call."

I mentioned the conversation with the Senator from Nebraska. We had a conversation last week and today. We are aware of the Senator's desire. We are trying to balance three things in the air. There are those who want to complete everything by no later than 4 o'clock on tomorrow. I doubt that that can be done.

Mr. EXON. Is it possible that we could get an agreement right now to set aside both the pending business and the debate on the Manion matter so we can take up the urgent supplemental?

Mr. DOLE. If the distinguished minority leader will yield, let me indicate that we are shopping for a time agreement on the supplemental right now. We are not losing time. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee felt if he could get this narrow time agreement, which is being worked on by both sides, we would still be ahead by several hours by doing what we are doing now. We can show that to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Is there any objection by anyone presently on the floor to my suggestion to the majority leader, to setting aside the two matters that we have talked about, No. 1, the Security Act, and, No. 2, the Manion nomination, to move expeditiously and now to the urgent supplemental?

Mr. BYRD. If I may respond, the Manion nomination is not before the Senate to be set aside. That is what my colleagues are concerned about.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. BIDEN. I have no objection to that. I do not want to be in the way of this urgent supplemental at all.

Mr. EXON. I would add, if I could, Mr. President, that I also talked with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and that is one of the reasons I was here at 4 o'clock. He must have come in just after I left. I was here until about 4. He also assured me that he assumed we would take it up at 4 o'clock. Is there no way we can propound a request now, that the majority leader could not propound a request now, to set aside the pending business so we could go to that supplemental appropriations bill? If there is objection to that on the part of the majority leader, then I recognize that is his prerogative.

Mr. DOLE. Again, I would like to discuss it with the Senator from Nebraska, but I would say, if the minority leader will yield for that purpose, it is privileged matter. I would want the chairman of the committee to be present, of course.

Again I get back to the most ridiculous point of this bill before us which is very important, which concerns security. We can still pass that by 6 o'clock. That would eliminate one of the problems. Then we could go ahead with debate on Manion while we are trying to get a time agreement on the supplemental. We are not really losing any time. I think the chairman of the Appropriations Committee would rather have a time agreement for 2 hours than spending all day tomorrow on the supplemental. I believe we are making some progress on that one.

I would be happy to discuss it with the Senator from Nebraska. I know of his interest, and I know of the discussions we have had on the floor and privately.

Mr. EXON. I thank the majority leader.

DIPLOMATIC SECURITY AND ANTITERRORISM ACT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 2193

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Congress on United States policy toward Afghanistan)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia for himself, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. PELL, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. MELCHER, Mr. SASSER, Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. KASTEN, proposes an amendment numbered 2193.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 129, after line 3, add the following new section:

SEC. 702. POLICY TOWARD AFGHANISTAN.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the Soviet Union invaded the sovereign territory of Afghanistan on December 27, 1979, and continues to occupy and attempt to subjugate that nation through the use of force, relying upon a puppet regime and an occupying army of an estimated 120,000 Soviet troops;

(2) the outrageous and barbaric treatment of the people of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union is repugnant to all freedom-loving peoples as reflected in seven United Nations resolutions of condemnation, violates all standards of conduct befitting a responsible nation, and contravenes all recognized principles of international law;

(3) the Special Rapporteur of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, in his November 5, 1985, report to the General Assembly, concludes that "whole groups of persons and tribes are endangered in their existence and in their lives because their living conditions are fundamentally affected by the kind of warfare being waged" and that "[t]he Government of Afghanistan, with heavy support from foreign [Soviet] troops, acts with great severity against opponents or suspected opponents of the regime without any respect for human rights obligations" including "use of antipersonal mines and of so-called toy bombs" and "the indiscriminate mass killings of civilians, particularly women and children";

(4) the Special Rapporteur also concludes that the war in Afghanistan has been characterized by "the most cruel methods of warfare and by the destruction of large parts of the country which has affected the conditions of life of the population, destabilizing the ethnic and tribal structure and disrupting family units" and that "[t]he demographic structure of the country has changed, since over 4 million refugees from all provinces and all classes have settled outside the country and thousands of internal refugees have crowded into the cities like Kabul";

(5) the United Nations General Assembly, in a recorded vote of 80-22 on December 13, 1985, accepted the findings of the Special Rapporteur and deplored the refusal of Soviet-led Afghan officials to cooperate with the United Nations, and expressed "profound distress and alarm" at "the widespread volations of the right to life, liberty, and security of person, including the commonplace practice of torture and summary executions of the regime's opponents, as well as increasing evidence of a policy of religious intolerance";

(6) in a subsequent report of the Special Rapporteur of February 14, 1986, the Special Rapporteur found that "The only solution to the human rights situation in Afghanistan is the withdrawal of the foreign troops" and that "Continuation of the military solution will, in the opinion of the Special Rapporteur, lead inevitably to a situation approaching Genocide, which the traditions and culture of this noble people cannot permit.";

(7) the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan caused the United States to postpone indefinitely action on the SALT II Treaty in 1979, and the presence of Soviet troops in that country today continues to adversely affect the prospects for long-term improvement of the United States- Soviet bilateral relationship in many fields of great importance to the global community;

(8) the Soviet leadership appears to be engaged in a calculated policy of raising hopes for a withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan in the apparent belief that words will substitute for genuine action in shaping world opinion; and

(9) President Reagan, in his February 4, 1986, State of the Union Address promised the Afghan people that "America will support with moral and material assistance your right not just to fight and die for freedom, but to fight and win freedom * * *".

(b) POLICY.—(1) It is the sense of the Congress that the United States, so long as Soviet military forces occupy Afghanistan, should support the efforts of the people of Afghanistan to regain the sovereignty and territorial integrity of their nation through—

(A) the appropriate provisions of material support;

(B) renewed multilateral initiatives aimed at encouraging Soviet military withdrawal, the return of an independent and nonaligned status to Afghanistan and a peaceful political settlement acceptable to the people of Afghanistan, which includes provision for the return of Afghan refugees in safety and dignity;

(C) a continuous and vigorous public information campaign to bring the facts of the situation in Afghanistan to the attention of the world;

(D) frequent efforts to encourage the Soviet leadership and the Soviet-backed Afghan regime to remove the barriers erected against the entry into and reporting of events in Afghanistan by international journalists; and

(E) vigorous efforts to impress upon the Soviet leadership the penalty that continued military action in Afghanistan imposes upon the building of a long-term constructive relationship with the United States, because of the negative effect that Soviet policies in Afghanistan have on attitudes toward the Soviet Union among the American people and the Congress.

(2) It is further the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of State should—

(A) determine whether the actions of Soviet forces against the people of Afghanistan constitute the international crime of Genocide as defined in Article II of the International Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, signed on behalf of the United States on December 11, 1948, and, if the Secretary determines that Soviet actions may constitute the crime of genocide, he shall report his findings to the President and the Congress, along with recommended actions; and

(B) review United States policy with respect to the continued recognition of the Soviet puppet government in Kabul to determine whether such recognition is in the interest of the United States.

On page 91, in the table of contents, after the item relating to section 701, insert the following new item:

"Sec. 702. Policy toward Afghanistan.".

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, last week I met with leaders of the Afghan resistance, as well as the Pakistani Foreign Minister's to solicit his views on the Afghan question. It is clear to me that, despite Soviet claims of progress at the recent U.N-sponsored peace talks, the situation in that sad country remains very grave. Despite the brutality of the Soviets—and the acceleration of Soviet warfare against the people of Afghanstan—the resistance fighters tell me that the spirit of the people remains unbroken.

Mr. President, the United States ratification of the Genocide Convention will permit the United States a much stronger hand in confronting the Soviet Union on the vital matter of its activities in the nation of Afghanistan. The reality of Soviet behavior in Afghanistan seems to amount to the crime of Genocide as defined in that Convention. Now that the United States will shortly become a full party to that treaty, we can operate with a more credible and stronger hand in bringing the case against the Soviet activities in that country before the world community.

The President, despite the public relations blitz by the new Gorbachev leadership to portray itself as reasonable and flexible in its approach to the West, and despite hints and indications given here and there that Mr. Gorbachev is on the verge of making a major change in Soviet policy toward Afghanistan, no substantial change in Soviet policy or practices has yet appeared. Sooner or later, flashy new Soviet imagery must give way to practical changes in policy leading to a more constructive, humane, and productive path.

Mr. President, I think it is important to give the Soviets every opportunity to meet us halfway on the outstanding issues which divide our two nations. I have made very effort to do what I can to help produce a better atmosphere and mechanisms for reducing misunderstandings and for developing arrangements and agreements on arms control matters and regional disputes where our interests clash with those of the Soviets. I led a bipartisan Senate delegation to meet with Mr. Gorbachev last September. I have proposed that Mr. Gorbachev be invited to address a joint session of the Congress when he visits this Nation, provided that an address by President Reagan to the same joint session be televised unedited to the Soviet people.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, we must continue to impress upon the Soviets how repugnant their activities in Afghanistan are to us.

Most recently, General Secretary Gorbachev took the opportunity provided by his address to the 27th Communist Party Congress to say, "We should like, in the nearest future, to withdraw the Soviet troops stationed in Afghanistan at the request of its government." He went on to claim that there was agreement with the puppet regime in Kabul on a schedule for that withdrawal, and to remind his audience that, "It is in our vital national interest that the U.S.S.R. should always have good and peaceful relations with all its neighbors."

It is difficult to cultivate good relations when you are engaged in the wholesale massacre of unarmed civilians. I look forward to the day when the glimmers of hope for a change in Soviet policy raised by Mr. Gorbachev's words are translated into action, into reality, into military withdrawal. So far, unfortunately, only expectations have been raised.

The action by the Senate to approve the Genocide Convention for ratification, then, provides the United States with the opportunity to raise, for the first time as a signatory, the issue of Soviet violations of the Genocide Convention in Afghanistan. In his report of November 5, 1985, to the U.N. General Assembly on the "Situation of Human Rights of Afghanistan," the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights described the situation during the fifth year of Soviet occupation of Afghanistan in these words:

> The Government, with heavy support from foreign troops, acts with great severity against opponents or suspected opponents of the regime without any respect for human rights obligations . . . It appears that in the course of operations, all kinds of sophisticated weapons, in particular those that have a heavy destructive and psychological effect, are being used. The target is primarily the civilian population, the villages, and the agricultural structure.

The report continues,

> As a result, not only individuals, but whole groups of persons and tribes are endangered in their existence and in their lives because their living conditions are fundamentally affected by the kind of warfare being waged.

The report cites "the use of antipersonnel mines and of so-called toy bombs" and "the indiscriminate mass killings of civilians, particularly women and children." The report notes that the war is characterized by > the most cruel methods of warfare and by the destruction of large parts of the country which has affected the conditions of life of the population, destabilizing the ethnic and tribal structure and disrupting family units. The demographic structure of the country has changed, since over 4 million refugees from all provinces and all classes have settled outside the country and thousands of internal refugees have crowded into the cities like Kabul.

This independent account by the United Nations conforms to the Genocide Convention's definition of that crime in article II, as the willful act of destroying in whole or part a national, ethnical, racial, or religious group by:

First, killing members of the group;

Second, causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;

Third, deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part;

Fourth, imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group; and Fifth, forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.

The U.N. Report substantiates the fact that the Soviet Union and its Afghan puppets are engaged in acts which seem to satisfy the elements of this definition of the crime of genocide. In fact, the report demonstrates that the Soviets in Afghanistan are engaged in many practices which, under the Convention, appear to amount to the crime of genocide.

The amendment I am offering today recognizes that the Soviet actions in Afghanistan may constitute the crime of genocide against the Afghan people, and calls upon the Secretary of State to investigate whether the Soviets are in fact violating their obligations under the Genocide Convention by virtue of their cruel warfare against the Afghan people.

In addition, it urges the Secretary of State to review the U.S. policy that affords diplomatic recognition to the puppet regime in Kabul. There may be sound reasons for this, but I believe it is time for the Secretary of State to conduct a thorough review of whether a continuation of this policy is appropriate. The Soviet Government is at war with the people of Afghanistan, and the so-called Government of Afghanistan is nothing but a Soviet sham.

I do recognize that we are looking forward to the possibility that the Soviets will pull their military forces out of Afghanistan and the Afghan Government that comes to power in the wake of that withdrawal will be the beneficiary of guarantees by both superpowers—and that that government will be independent and neutral and truly represent the whole of Afghan people. Obviously, an American presence is needed for such guarantees, and one might argue that a continued presence such as the one that now exists is therefore appropriate to that long-term goal.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, the entire concept of diplomatic relations in the context of Afghanistan today strikes me as questionable. I believe the question should be thoroughly reassessed by the executive branch on an expedited basis.

Mr. President, the amendment also states that the United States should take every opportunity to increase the visibility, internationally, of what the Soviets are doing in Afghanistan. This should be done in international meetings and fora of all kinds; it should be done by increased media coverage and the use of our programming capabilities.

I have reference to the Voice of America, Radio Free Europe, and other mechanisms available to the Department of State. It should be done by continuing to press the Soviets to allow journalists into Afghanistan so they can report freely on events there. The Soviet invasion and occupation of Afghanistan has been invisible too long. That means for the entire second half of the 7 years it has been going on.

The Soviet Union is getting a good return on the rumors it is floating about its desire to pull out of Afghanistan. As I told General Secretary Gorbachev last year, he has it in his power to end the war in Afghanistan. All he has to do is bring his troops home.

Finally, the amendment recognizes the need for material support for the people of that war-ravaged country, a renewed effort to encourage Soviet withdrawal and a political solution to the stalemate, and a renewed commitment to informing the world of the situation in Afghanistan.

I believe this amendment is entirely in keeping with the President's State of the Union promise to the people of Afghanistan that "America will support with moral and material assistance your right not just to fight and die for freedom, but to fight and win freedom." In 1984, I introduced the first successful Senate resolution calling for essential food and medical assistance for the people of Afghanistan. I believe that this amendment is an appropriate outgrowth of that earlier effort.

I point out, Mr. President, that this will be the first action to be taken by the United States in regard to the terms of the Genocide Convention. I can think of no more appropriate subject for the first action to follow ratification of the convention than the plight of the heroic people of Afghanistan.

When I led the first Senate delegation to meet Soviet General Secretary Gorbachev last September, we found the subject of Afghanistan to be the most contentious and emotionally volatile issue in our discussions. Since that time, we have heard persistent stories of increased Soviet willingness to reach an accommodation on the Afghanistan question. It would be a mistake for the Soviet leadership to believe that talk about solutions will reduce the outrage of the world community. As long as Soviet troops commit atrocities against the Afghan people and continue to occupy that long-suffering country, freedom loving peoples will decry these actions and will be moved to help the Afghan people.

As participants in the Genocide Convention, we are now in a much better position to join in condemning Soviet actions which, as described in the report to the United Nations General Assembly, amount to a calculated effort to destroy the Afghan people. This amendment will permit the Senate to make an appropriate statement on this matter.

The meeting that I had with Mr. Rabbanni and his group renewed my sense of admiration for the people of Afghanistan. They are courageous and determined in their struggle against a superpower war machine. I believe that we should stick with them for the duration of their long struggle, until they achieve what they so truly deserve—their national independence.

Mr. President, I ask the managers of the bill especially if they feel they have any objection or if it can be accepted.

Mr. HUMPHREY addressed the Chair.

Mr. BYRD. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Democratic leader for proposing this important amendment. I am pleased to join with him in urging our colleagues to accept it this afternoon.

The situation in Afghanistan is outrageous. The Soviets have committed every known barbarity in their invasion and continued occupation and bludgeoning of that poor country. Before the Soviets moved in some 6½ years ago, there were 15 million residents, citizens of Afghanistan. In the intervening years, somewhere between one-half of 1 million and 1 million have been killed as a result of the war.

I am not talking about combatants alone, Mr. President; indeed, they probably make up a small part of those who have suffered casualties. I am talking about men, women, children, and elderly persons who have been deliberately singled out and butchered by the Soviet occupiers and their puppets in Afghanistan. Out of 15 million, something approaching a million have been killed or wounded and some 4 million have fled Afghanistan altogether to Iran or, principally, to Pakistan.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia is timely. I want to focus on two provisions of the "Resolved" section of the resolution. The resolution states:

Resolved that the United States, so long as Soviet military forces occupy Afghanistan, should support the efforts of the people of Afghanistan to regain the sovereignty and territorial integrity of their nation through—

And it lists a number of things among which are:

(E) vigorous efforts to impress upon the Soviet leadership the penalty that continued military action in Afghanistan imposes upon the building of a long-term constructive relationship with the United States, because of the negative effect that Soviet policies in Afghanistan have on attitudes toward the Soviet Union among the American people and the Congress.

The Senator from West Virginia is calling upon the United States to impress upon the Soviets the penalty they will pay if they continue with this occupation. I point out to my colleagues that if the United States Government undertakes what he has proposed here, it will represent a new departure, because we are not doing today anything that this Senator is aware of in the area of diplomatic relations or economic relations to impress upon the Soviets that there is any penalty at all for their continued bludgeoning of the people of that country. We have listed all of the important sanctions imposed by the last administration. They are all gone now. Aeroflot is flying into the United States, Pan American is flying into Moscow. Everything is cozy once again.

I point out that in this year alone, two Cabinet Secretaries have journeyed to Moscow—the Secretary of Commerce back in January, I think it was, or perhaps it was December of last year, with a party of over 100 American businessmen and women seeking new commercial contacts with the Soviet Union. That is a mighty poor way, is it not, to impress upon the Soviets the penalty they pay for their continued barbarities in Afghanistan, a Cabinet Secretary off to Moscow seeking new commercial contracts?

Just this past week, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development was off to Moscow likewise to seek information on housing.

Mr. President, I am not suggesting that we should pursue a course of belligerence against the Soviet Union. I am saying our relations should be correct, neither warm nor cold, and we should begin to do the things that the Senator from West Virginia suggests—finding ways to impress upon the Soviet Union that there is a penalty for their continued military action in Afghanistan. We are doing nothing today.

It would represent a departure if we did what the Senator from West Virginia suggests. Indeed, it is business as usual today between the Soviet Union and the United States. I regret to say that. I regret to have to point that out, but it is an important point, one that should not go unnoticed in this debate.

One other point on which I want to focus, Mr. President, again in the "Resolved" section, laying out the things that the United States should do as long as Soviet forces continue to occupy Afghanistan. Section 2(B) says that we should review United States policy with respect to the continued recognition of the Soviet puppet government in Kabul to determine whether such recognition is in the interest of the United States.

Mr. President, this week, much to his credit, the President of the United States entertained leaders of the Afghan freedom fighters in the White House. That was a significant step forward in advancing the standing of the freedom fighters of Afghanistan. It was long overdue, may I say.

But what kind of mixed signal does it send, what kind of inconsistent policy is shown, when the President on the one hand invites the Afghan leaders of the freedom fighters to the White House and, on the other hand, every single day of the year, the American flag is raised at an Embassy in Kabul, the seat of the very government against which those freedom fighters are struggling, with our encouragement in a material sense and a moral sense?

Here we are, encouraging these people to lay down their lives to free their society and we have an American Embassy at the seat of the government against which those people are struggling. Not only that, perhaps which is worse, that criminal puppet government has representatives here maintaining an Embassy in Washington. That is a classic case of sending mixed signals, that is a classic case of inconsistent policy. When you are trying to send a message to Moscow, the last thing you want to do is send mixed signals.

Mr. President, we cannot have one foot on one side of the fense and one foot on the other side of the fence when we are dealing with the Soviet Union and with this ghastly situation in Afghanistan. If we mean what we say, if the President means what he says and the Secretary of State means what he says and all of the other government officials who periodically make these lofty and inspiring statements about support for the freedom fighters of Afghanistan, then let us have a consistent policy. Let us send meaningful signals of the kind the Senator from West Virginia seems to imply so that the Soviets will understand the penalty that they will pay for continued military occupation of Afghanistan.

Let me just close with this observation, Mr. President. The Senator from New Hampshire has made a priority issue out of this matter of Afghanistan. I have looked at it closely now for 2 years. If there is one lesson to be learned, if there is one bottom line observation to be made about our efforts with respect to Afghanistan, it is this: There is nobody in charge, and that is why we have all these problems. That is why we have these inconsistencies. That is why we are sending mixed signals. That is why there is so little cooperation and coordination between the executive departments of this Government in implementing policy and turning into policy the lofty rhetoric of the President and the Secretary of State.

Truly, within the entire executive there is not one high-level official with any clout who spends full time on Afghanistan, making sure that all of the executive departments pull together. There is no such person. The management of our Afghanistan effort is part time and conducted by committees who meet from time to time and hash things other. That is no way to run an operation of this kind, especially when the stakes are so very high, not only for the people of Afghanistan but for the American people and for people everywhere who love freedom.

Mr. President, I and others have urged the administration to put someone in charge, to create a special office, if that is necessary, to catalog the opportunities that are available to us to send these kinds of signals. We are not calling for belligerence toward the Soviet Union but there are opportunities to bring additional military pressure to bear, additional economic pressure to bear, additional diplomatic pressure to bear, additional pressure of international public opinion to bear, opportunities that are being missed because there is nobody in charge.

I urge once again, Mr. President, although it is not part of this resolution, that the administration put somebody in charge, create an office that can catalog the opportunities, recommend policy—I am not saying make policy, recommend policy—and when it is adopted ensure that all of the executive departments and agencies cooperate and comply in carrying out that policy.

I commend the Senator from West Virginia for this important resolution and I urge my colleagues and fellow Senators to support it wholeheartedly.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY] for his strong support not only of the amendment in this instance but I thank him for his statement that he has made this matter involving savage slaughter of innocent women and children, old men in Afghanistan by the Soviet invaders a priority matter. I hope that other Senators will do the same. I commend him.

Mr. President, for the record, Mr. HUMPHREY is a cosponsor of this amendment, as are the following Senators: Mr. PELL, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. MELCHER, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. SASSER, Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. DOLE, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. DENTON.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that other Senators who may wish to add their names as cosponsors may do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I am prepared to vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BYRD. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent further proceedings under the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that before the vote just ordered on the Byrd amendment the Chair turn to the conference report to accompany H.R. 4420, the Military Retirement Reform Act and it be considered under the following time agreement: 10 minutes on the conference report to be equally divided between the chairman of the Armed Services Committee and the ranking minority member or their designees, and that following the conclusion or yielding back of time the Senate proceed to vote on adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. To be clear then, I ask unanimous consent that following the vote on the conference report we would vote on the Byrd amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LUGAR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the leader if it would be possible for me to proceed with two technical items with regard to the security bill so that all would be tidied up prior to the vote on the Byrd amendment. My understanding is that there is no request for a rollcall vote on the overall bill, and we would be able to proceed to completion.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent there be no amendment to the Byrd amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. And in addition, prior to the vote on the Byrd amendment, the distinguished chairman be permitted to offer technical amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

MILITARY RETIREMENT REFORM ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated.

The Assistant Legislative Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4420) to amend title 10, United States Code, to revise the retirement system for new members of the uniformed services, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report will be printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD.)

Mr. WILSON addressed the Chair.

Mr. STENNIS. May we have order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request for order is needed.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I rise in support of this conference report which provides for changes in the military retirement system. I hope these changes will be viewed for what they are. They have been occasioned by an act of Congress requiring that the Senate Armed Services Committee and that in the House examine into the question of whether or not we may quietly compensate those who are peacekeepers for the United States and at the same time find ways of cutting costs. Some will regard these changes as long awaited reform, Mr. President. Others may not.

It is my hope, after the long, long hours of work, that this settlement will be regarded as fair and equitable, and at least as importantly that the changes made will assist the military in continued success in recruitment and retention of the kind of quality volunteer force that virtually all have acclaimed is of the highest quality in recent years.

Mr. President, I will give a very brief description of the elements of the House-Senate compromise. It is one that I think both the House and Senate have worked hard to achieve. The pay base will be that based on an average of the highest 3 years of salary. The multipliers will be for the period of the years 1 through 20, for someone retiring at the end of 20 years, 2 percent for each year. For years 21 through 30, for those that remain a full 30 years, there will actually be a 3.5 percent per year factor applied against that high 3-year base average.

The result of these changes, Mr. President, will be that someone who retires at the end of 20 years will receive 40 percent of that base; someone who retires at the end of 30 years will receive 75 percent of the base. The compromise I think goes a long way toward encouraging people to make at least a 20-year career of the military. That decision is made between the 6th and 12th year of service by most who make the election to become career enlisted or officers. The smaller number who remain for a full 30 years are encouraged to do so by a more handsome rate of retirement. All persons receiving benefits from military retirement will receive a cost-of-living adjustment of CPI minus 1, or of the Consumer Price Index less 1 percent for life. But at age 62 those in the military retirement system will receive a one-time restoral of both their retired pay base and the cost-of-living adjustment as if the multiplier were 2½ percent per year for each year, and as though the COLA were full, as it is under the present system, which means that at age 62, monthly retirement pay would be the same as it would be at that age under the present system, but 1 percent a year would be lost for inflation thereafter.

Mr. President, it is my own contention that we have not gone far enough in the way of reform. I hope to continue exploring a means to provide the option particularly valuable to those who retire after a career as enlisted men, at the time they make transition to civilian life—the option of a lump sum payment. It will be especially useful to those who find that suddenly they have new expenditures confronting them, whether it is an incurred expense, or an investment in a new business, or in the education of children of college age, or preparing them in some other fashion for return to the civilian sector and a second career.

Mr. President, in the interest of time, I will not detail further the compromise. I will say only that it was a reasonable compromise. Perhaps no one was fully satisfied by it. It results in considerable savings—almost $3.2 billion annually to the accrual account for retirement.

I would be derelict if I did not give sincere thanks and commendation to my friend and colleague from Ohio, the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Manpower and Personnel, and to his staff and my own—to Mr. Lyles and Mr. Tucker, in particular—who have worked diligently and tirelessly to produce a good and a fair result.

Mr. President, this conference report provides for important—and, I emphasize, purely prospective—reform of the military retirement system. Some will regard these changes as reform. At the very least, I hope they will be regarded as fair to our future service men and women and as enabling the services to continue successful recruitment and retention of the highest quality volunteer force, at the same time taxpayers are saved $3.2 billion per year.

Mr. President, the military retirement system has been the subject of growing debate and criticism during the past few years. Critics have argued that the present system encourages military personnel to leave active duty after only 20 years of service, rather than staying for a full career of 30 years of service. Others have simply claimed that the present system is too expensive, although usually without citing any persuasive basis for that claim. I reject the notion of comparing the military retirement system to any civilian retirement system, public or private sector, without recognizing the substantial differences in a career in military service and all other careers.

However, Mr. President, I am convinced that, as part of a larger compensation structure, military retirement can be reformed. The present military retirement system structure is essentially unchanged from the structure in the late 1940's. Since that time, there have been dramatic improvements in other elements of pay making up the total military compensation package, most notable the adoption at the advent of the All-Volunteer Force in 1972 of military pay comparability with civilian wages. Additionally, the demographics of our military forces have undergone dramatic change in the last 20 years. Today, there are many times more married personnel with families serving on active duty than has been the case in the past. This means that military personnel of today have a great need for, and a greater desire for, a greater share of their career military compensation while serving on active duty, as opposed to after they leave the service.

For these reasons, I became convinced last year that reform of the military retirement system can and should be undertaken, and a provision was included in the 1986 Defense Authorization Act which initiated the changes that are before the Senate today for final action. The pending conference report makes important changes pursuant to the charge given by 1986 act but falls short of the reform I had hoped for, to assist military retirees in a way I'll detail hereafter. But first the good news.

Mr. President, the Manpower and Personnel Subcommittee has held a number of hearings on this issue. I think some generally agreed-upon propositions concerning military retirement have been learned from those hearings, and are reflected in the pending changes.

For example, I think it can be said that while it is important to encourage military personnel to serve for careers longer than 20 years, it is also important to maintain the entitlement to be able to retire after only 20 years of service. Several factors are involved. First, while there are many military duties that can be easily and perhaps better performed by personnel serving more than 20 years, there also are some physically demanding positions which require a fair degree of youth and vigor. Those who are asked to perform these physically demanding tasks for 18 to 20 years, should be able to retire from the service at a relatively young age.

Additionally, there are some who would argue that if people serve 20 years, they would be willing to serve 25 years. That might or might not be true, but it fails to recognize that it is much earlier in a career that military career commitment decisions are really made. It is at the 8- to 10- to 12-year point when individuals decide to stop looking at their military service as a temporary job and decide to commit themselves to a career. With a 20-year retirement, those who have served 10 or 11 years are well on the way to earning retirement entitlement. Elevating the entitlement service requirement has a very negative psychological impact at that decision point.

Finally, because of the pyramidal grade structure of military organizations, especially in the officer corps where promotion and advancement is controlled by statute, if everyone were to stay for 30 years before retiring, it will not be long until the system becomes top heavy and the opportunity for growth and advancement in the lower ranks becomes increasingly dismal. This country learned, or at least should have learned, from the experiences of the late 1930's in attempting to mobilize for World War II, that a military organization filled with far too many senior and older personnel is ill prepared to fight a war. The 20-year retirement entitlement was designed to help avoid that situation.

A second generally accepted proposition is that while there may be some justification for reducing military retirement for those who serve less than full careers, and who thereby are able to pursue second careers at a relatively young age, there is a need, in fact, a national obligation, to recognize in old age that military retirees have spent their most productive years in uniform in service to the Nation. That is, while I may be prepared to agree that the retired pay of those healthy individuals retiring after only 20 years of service, usually at an age in the early 40's, can be reduced during the years in which they can be pursuing second careers I cannot agree that we, as a people, do not have the obligation when these retirees reach "old age" to provide them with a retirement system that reflects their service to us.

Finally, I think it is generally accepted that for a military retirement system to work well, it must be relatively simple and easily understood by the men and women in uniform.

Mr. President, I am pleased to tell my colleagues that the conference report before you today provides for each of these general propositions.

Mr. President, let me explain briefly the provisions relating to military retirement. Under the conference report, the pay base upon which military retirement will be based remains unchanged. It is the average monthly basic pay for the highest 3 years of pay during service. This is known as "High-3." The multiplier, or percentage for each year of service which is multiplied by the pay base, remains unchanged at 2.5 percent for each year of service. However, for each year of service less than 30 years, 1 percentage will be subtracted for each year less than 30. This means that a 20-year retiree will receive 40 percent of the pay base, as opposed to 50 percent under the present system. However, a 30-year retiree will receive the full 75 percent of the pay base, the same as under the present system. This change will serve as an incentive to serve more than 20 years, while at the same time maintaining a fair level of compensation for those who leave the active service after only 20 years.

With respect to cost-of-living adjustments, the present permanent law provides that military retirees be given an annual cost-of-living allowance of the percentage change in the Consumer Price Index. Only once in the past 5 years has Congress permitted military retirees a cost-of-living allowance as provided by the present system, most recently denying a cost-of-living adjustment to military retirees, including disabled retirees, as part of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation.

Mr. President, while the Congress has yet to confront the question of how to permanently resolve the question of cost-of-living adjustments for those personnel who were promised that inflation protection, including Social Security recipients, veterans, and present military retirees, who, by the way, should also be remembered as veterans, I think the time has come to face up to this question for who will enter military service in the future. This conference report does that by providing that those covered by this new system will be given annual cost-of-living adjustments equal to the increase in the Consumer Price Index, less 1 percentage point. This formula is known as "CPI Minus 1."

Let me now note that the only persons who will be affected by this conference report reform are those who first enter the military on or after August 1, 1986. It does not, let me repeat, does not, affect any person now retired from the military or now in military service. Only future entrants into the military will come under this system.

Finally, the conference report provisions provide for a one-time recomputation of retired pay at age 62, in recognition that about that time, military retired pay becomes the primary source of old age income for personnel who served in the military as a career. At the point when retirees reach age 62, retired pay will be recomputed as if the 1 percentage point penalty for retirement at less than 30 years of service had not applied. Additionally, at that time, the retired pay will be increased to the level it would have been if cost-of-living adjustments had been made under the full CPI rather than the CPI minus 1 formula.

In short, at age 62, the level of military retired pay will be restored to the level it would have been under the existing system. However, in light of the Senate vote during floor debate on this issue, all cost-of-living adjustments thereafter will be under the CPI minus 1 formula. So military retirees will lose 1 percent to inflation each year after age 62.

Mr. President, survivors' benefits and disability retired benefits for those coming under this new system will be determined using the same system as now in effect, except those benefits will be increased using the CPI minus 1 formula, along with the one-time CPI restoral at age 62 for disability retirees and at the time the member would have reached age 62 for survivors of retired members who die before reaching age 62.

Mr. President, if this system had been in effect during all of fiscal year 1986, it would have reduced the fiscal year 1986 defense budget requirements for future military retirement by slightly more than $3 billion. While no immediate Federal outlay savings would be realized because it does not reduce the level of benefits already earned by present retirees, this conference report represents a major reform of military retirement and should put an end to criticism and further attempts to reduce military retirement. I will work to insure that no further reductions will be made in the military retirement system structure for a number of years to come.

But there is one desirable change I will continue to seek, Mr. President. As I said during debate on the Senate bill in May, I was greatly disappointed that our bill did not include some provision for a lump sum payment of military retirement, at least as an option which retiring military personnel could elect at the time of retirement. I intend to continue to explore the possibility of offering such an option as part of the miitary system, without altering the overall cost of the program.

Mr. President, this conference report has been a long time in the making. It represents a reasonable compromise between the Senate and House bills, and historic change of the military retirement system. I think it will be fair to future military personnel and fair to the Nation, even if it does not yet offer the lump sum payment I have earlier advocated to assist military retirees in making the transition to civilian life. I urge my colleagues to vote to agree to the report.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, the conference report on H.R. 4420 includes two very important pieces of legislation: the Military Retirement Reform Act of 1986 and the Fiscal Year 1986 Supplementary Authorization Act for the Department of Defense. The Armed Services Committee has spent a great deal of time and effort on both of these items, and I urge my colleagues to support this conference report.

The conference agreement on military retirement reform is an excellent proposal that represents an improvement to both the House and Senate passed bills.

The essence of the conference agreement is the creation of a two-tier structure of benefits for active duty military members who retire with less than 30 years of service. The lower tier of benefits before age 62 recognizes the reality that almost all military retirees have a second career. The second and higher tier of benefits after age 62 provides essentially the current level of retirement benefits, although with less than full COLA protection.

Mr. President, I want to congratulate Senator GLENN and Senator WILSON for the hard work, dedication, and determination that they demonstrated over the past year that has produced this conference agreement on military retirement. They have had a thankless job. Needless to say, the issue of military retirement reform has not been a very popular subject with the Defense Department and the military services.

In my view, this conference agreement on military retirement reform will allow the Nation to continue to properly man our military forces, and it will provide an equitable retirement benefits for our dedicated men and women in uniform. At the same time, however, it will reduce the future costs of the military retirement system by almost 18 percent, or $3.2 billion on an annual fiscal year 1986 basis.

Mr. President, this conference also deals with the resolution of the dispute between the Armed Services Committee and the Appropriations Committee over appropriations provided in excess of authorization for fiscal year 1986. My colleagues will recall that the Fiscal Year 1986 Defense Appropriations Act provided substantial funds to the Department of Defense which were not authorized. After much discussion and debate, the Senate adopted a provision in the Fiscal Year 1986 Defense Appropriations Act which requires subsequent authorization of those funds before the Department of Defense could obligate or expend them.

The House Armed Services Committee included an fiscal year 1986 supplemental authorization bill for these funds in the retirement bill on which we conclude action today. The Senate Armed Services Committee attached its supplemental authorization as an amendment to the fiscal year 1986 urgent supplemental appropriations bill. This necessitated a complex four-party conference. The conference agreement is incorporated in the conference reports on the fiscal year 1986 urgent supplemental appropriation bill and the military retirement reform bill.

Mr. President, I want to note that the conference agreement does not solve the underlying problem. We have merely settled the dispute for this one year. There will be no resolution until we deal with the more fundamental issues of committee jurisdictions and Senate rules. I think we made some modest progress toward more cooperative arrangements between the Armed Services and Appropriations Committees this year, but an ultimate solution has eluded us. I assure my colleagues, however, that it was not for failure of good will and effort. We will continue to work tc solve this underlying problem.

Finally, Mr. President, I should note that the conference report contains a provision which formally establishes the position for the Under Secretary for Defense Acquisition in the Defense Department. This is a key recommendation of the Packard Commission, and reflects the hard work and dedication of Senator DIXON and Senator QUAYLE. The fiscal year 1987 defense authorization bill will contain more of the recommendations of the Packard Commission.

The creation of this new Under Secretary for Defense for Acquisition creates new opportunities to chart a positive course for procurement reform. The Congress has great expectation for this new position, and hopes that the administration rises to this opportunity by nominating a candidate of the highest caliber. That nominee should be uniquely qualified by reason of education and experience at the most senior levels of industry to guide the Department at this critical time. Further, the candidate preferably will have extensive experience with defense issues. The times demand the best talent our Nation has to offer to lead the Department in these critical areas.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I support the conference report on the Military Retirement Reform Act of 1986 and urge the Senate to adopt it.

Senator WILSON and I have worked closely together on this matter, and I compliment him on the work that he,

Mr. Lyles, and Mr. Tucker have done. It has been a long effort. It has gone on for over a year. I think this is the best we can come up with.

As I said during the Senate floor debate on this bill, I think the current military retirement system has served the Nation well. Today, we have a well-trained, capable, and professional military force, and the military retirement system is one of the tools that have allowed us to build and sustain this force. If it were left up to me. I would not change a single thing in the retirement system, because it has served us well. I would leave it intact.

However, those of us in the Armed Services Committee with the responsibility for legislative oversight of Defense manpower recognize that there is a strong consensus with the Congress to reform the military retirement system. We were given a mandate by the Congress to come up with a proposal of reform the military retirement system in light of the budgetary difficulties we have before us today, so we had to make some changes. This conference report before the Senate today represents our best effort to balance the Congress desire to reduce the future costs of military retirement with our need to recruit and retain qualified men and women in our military services.

Mr. President, in my view, this conference agreement on military retirement reform is a significant improvement over both the House and Senate passed bills.

The essence of the conference agreement is the creation of a two-tier structure of benefits for active duty military members who retire with less than 30 years of service. The lower tier of benefits before age 62 recognizes the reality that almost all military retirees have a second career. The second and higher tier of benefits after age 62 provides essentially the current level of retirement benefits for military members during their old age, although with less than full COLA protection.

Here is how the new military retirement system will work: The formula for the multiplier would remain unchanged from the current system—2.5 percent for each year of service up to 30 years of service. However, for members who retire with less than 30 years of service, the multiplier would be reduced by 1 percentage point for each year of service the member retired less than 30. The reduction would be eliminated when the member reached age 62.

The annual COLA adjustment will be changed to provide an annual increase equal to the increase in the percentage point for life, with a one-time restoral in the purchasing power of the annuity at age 62.

For example, under this proposal a member retiring after 20 years of service would receive 40 percent of his average high 3 years of basic pay. At the present time, they get 50 percent. If he got that 40 percent after 20 years' service, he would receive an annual COLA of CPI minus 1 percentage point until age 62. At age 62, his multiplier would be restored to the current 50 percent of his average high 3-years of basic pay, and his monthly retired pay would be restored to what it would have been if he had received a full CPI COLA from the time of retirement. After age 62, he would continue to receive an annual COLA of CPI minus 1 percentage point.

A military member retiring after 30 years of service would receive the current 75 percent of his basic pay both before and after age 62. His retired pay would only be affected by the changed COLA formula.

The proposal also extends the reduced COLA formula of CPI minus 1 percentage point to disability retirement benefits and survivors' benefits, similar to the Civil Service Retirement Reform Act recently enacted. I specifically did not like that particular provision and hope we might able to change it later. Disability retirement, it seems to me, should not be penalized in that way, so we will work on that in the future.

Mr. President, one thing I want to emphasize is that everything we are talking about in this conference report is prospective. It applies in the future. We have set August 1, 1986, rather than the date of enactment as the effective date for the bill. This conference report would not affect the retirement benefits of anyone serving in uniform today. Only those people who entire military service after August 1, 1986, will be affected by these changes.

Mr. President, this conference agreement will reduce the future costs of the military retirement system by almost 18 percent, or $3.2 billion on an annual fiscal year 1986 basis.

This conference report is the culmination of more than a year of careful study and analysis by the House and Senate Armed Services Committees, the Department of Defense, the Congressional Budget Office, and the General Accounting Office. Not everyone involved in this process supports the conference report in the form in which it appears before the Senate today.

□ 1830

But in my view, this conference report will make prospective changes to the military retirement system that will allow us to continue to properly man our military services; that will still provide an equitable retirement system for military members; and that will also reduce the future costs of the military retirement system.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate to adopt this conference report so that the President can sign it into law before our own self-imposed deadline of June 30. It is very important to both the military services and to the Nation that we do so.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Arizona may have 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Thank you, Mr. President.

I thank the majority leader.

Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 4420, military retirement reform and fiscal year 1986 unauthorized appropriations.

Mr. President, this conference report represents a substantial reform in our Nation's military retirement system. The changes that we make with this bill will apply prospectively to those individuals joining the military after August 1, 1986. Let me make very, very clear to all my colleagues, and especially to all military retirees and those men and women who are currently serving on active duty, that the changes made in this bill will not apply to them. This legislation recognizes the promises that we have made to our military personnel, and I am determined not to break those promises. In a moment, I will defer to Senator WILSON, the chairman of our Manpower Subcommittee, who will explain the provisons of the retirement reform measure in detail.

Mr. President, this bill also contains the resolution of the controversy between the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee and the Armed Services Committee over the issue of excess or unauthorized appropriations. I am happy to say that we have worked out our differences in a very amicable way, and I want to express my very sincere, personal appreciation to the chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, Senator STEVENS, for his cooperation in helping resolve this matter. Through this process, we have forged what I believe will be a greatly improved working relationship between the Armed Services Committee and the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee.

Mr. President, that concludes my remarks, I hope we can now move this conference report expeditiously. It is not a controversial bill, but it is important that we pass it today in order to avoid having to lay off several thousands of people in the Defense Department.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time on the conference report has expired.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee.

We are ready to vote, Mr. President. The majority and, I believe the minority, do not see the necessity for a rollcall vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC SECURITY AND ANTITERRORISM ACT

The Senate continued consideration of the bill.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, earlier today during consideration of two amendments by Senator HELMS, Nos. 2190 and 2191, Senator HELMS agreed to modifications in a colloquy with me. However, through inadvertence the amendment submitted to the desk did not reflect those modifications.

I ask unanimous consent that the corrected copies of those amendments, with the modifications, be substituted to the versions submitted earlier.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendments, Nos. 2190 and 2191, have been so substituted.)

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I know of no further amendments.

AMENDMENT NO. 2193

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to Amendment 2193. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON: I announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HECHT], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. LAXALT], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND], would each vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 94, nays 0, as follows:

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] be added as a cosponsor to the Byrd amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There will be order in the Senate. There is too much conversation. Please remove your conversations to the Cloakroom. We cannot hear the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Indiana will yield for a question?

Mr. LUGAR. I am happy to yield.

Mr. KASTEN. I am advised that the funding contemplated by this legislation will provide an increase of about 400 new positions for the Department of State's diplomatic security services.

Mr. LUGAR. The Senator from Wisconsin is correct.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, it is my understanding that some of the new positions authorized in this bill are to be assigned on a nonreimbursable basis to the small security office of AID. It is my understanding that the discussions have focused on approximately 15 positions. This arrangement, which I strongly endorse, results from discussions between the Foreign Relations and Appropriations Committees with appropriate officers of the Department of State and AID. I wonder, Mr. President, if my understanding on this point is shared by the distinguished chairman, the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin is correct in his understanding. A key consideration in this legislation is the necessity to fix responsibility for security of our diplomatic personnel in one officer, the Secretary of State. Section 106(a) of the act, however, in the interest of organizational effectiveness, vests authority in the Secretary to delegate operational control of overseas security functions of other Federal agencies to the heads of those agencies who remain fully responsible to the Secretary of State in the exercise of those delegated duties. In terms of day-to-day security operations, the AID security group must be able to execute and administer for AID's overseas personnel the Department's security standards and policies. It is with this requirement in mind that the Department of State and AID have determined that a limited number of these new positions, as the Senator from Wisconsin has indicated, should be made available to AID, funded from the supplemental appropriations provided under this bill.

Mr. KASTEN. I thank the distinguished Chairman, Mr. President. I believe the arrangement we have discussed here will enhance the effectiveness of this legislation by insuring that AID has sufficient resources to fully support the Department's security requirements in these hazardous times.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, the shocking hijacking of TWA flight 847, EgyptAir 648, the airport massacres in Rome and Vienna and the bombing of TWA flight 840 underscores the necessity for effective security at airports in this country as well as abroad. The aftermath of these bloody terrorist episodes demonstrated that lax airport security may have provided the opportunity for terrorists to carry out their grim mission of vengeance and death.

Mr. President, the United States must take a lead in securing its airports from access by terrorists and must also work with the international community to prevent the loss of lives of innocent air travelers at the hands of terrorists. To allow this Nation to take such a lead, I introduced S. 2468, the Antiterrorism and Air Security Act, a bill which was referred to the Commerce Aviation Subcommittee chaired by my distinguished colleagues from Kansas, Senator KASSEBAUM.

The Antiterrorism and Air Security Act will require that a criminal history check be conducted on any airline or airport employee whose duties permit them access to secured areas of airports or to commercial aircrafts. The act also proposes to make it a Federal crime to enter airport secured areas without authority. The latter provision is intended to deter the unlawful circumvention of airport security systems as well as the unauthorized penetration of secured areas on airports. Such activity must be forcefully proscribed by Federal law to combat any threat of terrorist activity against civil aviation in this country.

Mr. President, I had considered offering the substance of S. 2468 as an amendment to the bill currently being considered. However, after talking with Senator KASSEBAUM, chairman of the Aviation Subcommittee, who shares my concern over the safety of our airports, we concluded that it would be beneficial to conduct a joint Judiciary Security and Terrorism Subcommittee/Committee Aviation Subcommittee hearing on the question of airport security in general and S. 2468 in particular.

Therefore, at this point I will not offer S. 2468 as an amendment.

I look forward to working with Senator KASSEBAUM in our joint effort to protect our Nation's airports.

KOREAN TRADE PRACTICES—AMENDMENT NO. 2180

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I want to join with my colleague and friend from Kentucky, Senator MCCONNELL, in denouncing the blatantly unfair and protectionist trade practices of the Republic of Korea. This country, which has benefited so greatly from its friendship with the United States, should not so cavalierly maintain old trade barriers nor continue to erect new ones. Yet, Mr. President, it does.

The barriers run from high technology goods and electronic products to agricultural goods, both fresh and processed. The barriers also extend to pharmaceuticals, chemicals, books, and movies, which are denied fair market access both through tariffs and quotas and by refusal to provide adequate protection for intellectual property.

Mr. President, in the area of agriculture, South Korea maintains the most protectionist import policy of the newly industrialized countries in Asia. The list of trade barriers, particularly to high-value or specialty crops, is extensive and entrenched. Let me just point out a few examples.

The Korean Government, on January 1, 1986, implemented a comprehensive plan to protect their industries from agricultural imports. They attempted to justify these new import restrictions by arguing that balance-of-payments problems force them to preserve foreign currency. A Korea Trade News article on December 6, 1985, outlined this management plan that would be used to effectively control imports. This plan included several actions that are injurious to California.

For example, the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries has been sending letters to importers of raisins and citrus fruits informing them that importing such goods is contrary to the policy of conserving foreign exchange, and urging them to work with their customers to reduce the volume purchased.

South Korea has also tightened quarantine procedures against California citrus and requires our citrus to be subjected to 2 weeks of zero degree temperatures. This seriously reduces the high quality of our fruit, and is an unjustified nontariff barrier.

The other measures that went into effect on January 1 include a continued suspension of all high-quality beef imports, and imposition of quotas on frozen potato imports designed to keep imported french fries out of supermarkets.

The U.S. Agricultural Counselor in Seoul, in a report he submitted on December 23, 1985, concluded about these measures that "Traders in food products all report that they are experiencing overt pressure (letters and warnings) and indirect pressure (extra redtape and unexplained delays) aimed at discouraging imports of consumer-ready products, and that this pressure has been increasing in recent months."

In particular, the Koreans' move to tighten quarantine procedures has focused on California citrus, which is required to be subjected to 2 weeks of zero degree temperatures. The Koreans have unilaterally and incorrectly declared all California citrus to be infested with the Mediterranean fruit fly, in spite of the fact that the USDA gave California citrus a clean bill of health over 3 years ago.

In early December of last year, the USDA invited Korean scientists to come to the United States to make a firsthand inspection of their claims of fruit fly infestation, but to date, the Korean Government has not yet responded to the invitation.

Let me mention briefly a few other entrenched barriers. Korea maintains a senseless 60-percent tariff on United States raisin exports. There is no logical justification for this barrier since there is no raisin industry in South Korea to protect. The California Raisin Advisory Board has shown a positive and aggressive business attitude by developing a marketing program in Korea using targeted export assistance funds. Their efforts will be wasted if this trade barrier remains intact.

Finally, Korea was also a country designated by the USTR under the Wine Equity Act, which I authored in 1984, as a country that has significant market potential for United States wine sales, but maintains trade barriers, including tariffs, inhibiting such wine trade. Consultations with Korea to rectify these trade barriers have produced no results to date.

Now, outside the area of agriculture, there have been some promising signs. For example, there are press reports that the pending actions against Korea brought under section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974, covering insurance and intellectual property, are progressing significantly. Also, we are eagerly awaiting changes in Korean laws that will allow United States film distributors to do business in Korea.

Nevertheless, there are so many other important disputes to be settled, that we must press for continued improvement in order to allow for continued designation of the Republic of Korea as a beneficiary under GSP after the completion of the general review prior to January 4, 1987.

Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCONNELL], for bringing the present troublesome situation in United States-Korean trade relations to the attention of the Senate, and I sincerely hope that we can settle this matter quickly and comprehensively.

AMENDMENT NO. 2180

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the amendment by Senator MCCONNELL to the diplomatic security bill. This amendment expresses the sense of the Senate that the Republic of Korea should not be treated as a beneficiary developing country under the U.S. Generalized System of Preferences until Korea discontinues its "unreasonable, unjustifiable, and discriminatory acts, policies, and practices" with respect to trade. This amendment is identical to Senate Resolution 369, of which I am a cosponsor.

Last month, the President of the Republic of Korea made a commitment to Senator MCCONNELL that the National Assembly of Korea would pass a bill to privatize the Korean tobacco monopoly. Yesterday, the Korean National Assembly completed its special session. Not only did this bill not pass the Assembly, but the entire bill was withdrawn. I am disappointed that the Koreans did not carry through with this commitment.

Mr. President, this action by the Korean Assembly is particularly disappointing in view of the fact that Korea continues to flood our market with textile imports. For calendar year 1985, Korea was the source of over 10 percent of the textile and apparel imports coming into the United States. In fact, their total shipments of over 1.1-billion-square-yard equivalents was second only to the total sent to the United States by Taiwan.

Many of us have hoped that the Koreans would open their market to American businesses. U.S. businesses would like to trade with the Koreans. Unfortunately, this latest action shows a lack of commitment on the part of the Koreans. I am prepared to support legislation that would correct these trade inequities, and urge my colleagues to do the same.

THREATS TO THE INTEGRITY OF RURAL AND FARM STATISTICS

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, by official count, more rural people live in the United States today than at any other time in history. This probably comes as a surprise to many Americans, rural and urban alike.

This highest-ever number of rural Americans occurs despite the fact that only 26 percent of our total U.S. population is rural. It is this percentage that is so often cited to indicate a decline in the rural population. For while half of the nation was rural at the end of World War I, about one-fourth is today. Rural population growth has always been a part of our country's overall growth, yet, only the declining percentage seems to receive attention and, by implication, to the detriment of rural inhabitants.

Still, and contrary to conventional hearsay, the number of rural people is growing rather than shrinking. According to the latest figures available for 1984, over 61 million people are rural residents. This number approximates the number of all people in our country a century ago.

There are as many rural Americans as all who live in the Nation's eight largest cities—New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Detroit, Boston, and Houston. Illustrated in other ways, rural people in total outnumber the combined population of the three largest States as well as that of the 30 smallest States. There are nearly as many rural people as there are persons under age 18 across the United States. The number of rural people in America is simply a large number by any national comparison.

While we can now realize that the rural population is large, we cannot know as much as we need to know about this major component of our society and economy. Studies tell us, for example, that rural unemployment data—one of the most salient pieces of information on the well-being of rural America—are tragically underestimated. Beyond shaky statistics on employment is evidence of even higher levels of underemployment in rural areas. Studies of such topics are reported in a new publication, "New Dimensions in Rural Policy," which has been prepared through the Joint Economic Committee.

Another rural-related topic that obviously requires more detail and attention is agriculture. Agriculture remains the dominant force behind economic and social well-being in many hundreds of our counties and, just as important, is the major national industry for rural and urban jobs alike. Yet, the U.S. census of agriculture is facing restrictions from Office of Management and Budget on top of continued funding difficulties as the Census Bureau gears up for the 1987 collection of data on farms throughout the more than 3,000 counties of the States.

Perhaps at no time has there been a greater need for a better count of our farms, farm operators, and indicators of what has been happening to our farms. American agriculture and hundreds of thousands of farmers in this proud land have taken a beating far too long. There is a strategic need to know how farms have changed since the last census of agriculture in 1982. We need more information on the factors that have torn at our way of farming, factors that have stressed individuals and farm families, factors that have strained or collapsed so many rural and farm communities, and factors that are sapping one of America's strengths.

The burden of ignorance of these matters is severe. To address the ongoing rural and farm crisis and to better manage long-term changes, we need quality data from our national agencies which provide it. Indeed, the provision of these data is a national responsibility to the federation of our States and to local areas.

All Americans benefit from this information. With quality data on rural and agricultural situations, citizens, scientists, and policy analysts can better provide the suggestions which can lead to valid, lasting rural and farm policies.

Today I call for quality data on rural and farm America. The integrity of rural and agricultural data must be protected and enhanced. Without accurate knowledge of the problems, attempting policy solutions may be ineffective, wasteful, and even counterproductive. The millions of our citizens who are facing the special problems of rural America certainly rate fair and comprehensive data on their conditions.

Late last week, the Census Advisory Committee on Agricultural Statistics—a group of representatives from agricultural businesses, farm organizations, farm labor organizations, agricultural universities, and agricultural scientists—unanimously passed a resolution that the Bureau of the Census and the agricultural division should move ahead without further restraint to finalize plans for the critically important 1987 census of agriculture.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that their resolution be printed in the RECORD at this time.

RESOLUTION

Whereas the recent and ongoing agricultural and rural crisis demands quality census data including economic and social agricultural statistics,

Whereas the U.S. census of agriculture provides data for the Nation, States, and the only county level data and thereby carries the federated responsibility for us all,

Whereas we share the goal of obtaining high quality agricultural census data at the county level for use by Federal agencies, State governments, local county agencies, businesses, and private groups,

Whereas the mail-list development procedures are one important component in the process of building an accurate base for the 1987 census, follow-on surveys, and future censuses,

Whereas the census of agriculture is faced with the externally imposed prospect of moving from a methodology dependent upon carefully developed lists with nonfarm names to an optional combination of mail lists and area samples,

Whereas the loss of a large mailing list will make it impossible to produce detailed, county level data,

Whereas the quality and comparability with previous censuses would be lost and any follow-on surveys such as a farm finance survey would be impaired, and

Whereas list development for the next census would also be adversely affected,

It is resolved that:

The Advisory Committee on Agricultural Statistics supports the commitment of the Bureau to preserve and enhance the integrity of the data at the National, State, and the important county levels,

We support the Bureau's efforts to enhance mail list development and experimentation with data collection techniques which will improve lists and response rates,

As in the past, we support the concept of area samples as a supplement to State estimates but feel that area sampling cannot replace the need for county level estimates,

We recommend that the solution to quality agricultural census data with integrity at the National, State, and county levels lies not in budget cutbacks or in mail list restrictions but, instead, in the base of tried, demonstrated, and improved data collection techniques carefully developed through the experiences of recent censuses, and

We recommend that the agricultural census mailing list have an adequate number of addresses to maintain previous levels of completeness, as recommended by the Census Bureau, in the range of 3.7 to 4.0 million addresses.

Mr. President, let us not fail rural and agricultural America for lack of knowledge that is within our grasp. Rather, let us gain knowledge upon which to base sound solutions.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise to voice my strong support for the Diplomatic Security and Anti-Terrorism Act.

With the increase in recent years of terrorist attacks against Americans and American installations overseas, Congress has enacted a number of important pieces of antiterrorism legislation. As the ranking member on the Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism, I am proud to have worked closely with Chairman DENTON on many of those measures. They include the enabling legislation for the Conventions Against Hostage-Taking, Aircraft Hijacking and Crimes Against Internationally Protected Persons. A program of antiterrorism assistance to foreign countries has been established, a rewards-for-information fund was authorized and funded, and a major airport security measure was adopted.

Since 1980, as a result of major attacks on United States Embassies in Iran, Pakistan and Libya, Congress embarked on a 5 year Security Enhancement Program and approved yearly supplemental funds for overseas security. Total State Department funding for security since 1980 has totaled over $1.4 billion.

Because of all that Congress has spent on security during the past 6 years, this legislation demanded careful scrutiny by the Congress. The administration requested almost $4.4 billion for diplomatic security over the next 4 years. That would amount to a fourfold increase in funding over the past 6 years, at a time when we are making major cuts in important domestic social programs.

No security is foolproof. We can never make our embassies impenetrable. We must resist the tendency to adopt a "bunker" mentality, whereby our embassies become fortresses and our diplomats cut off from the people of the countries where they are stationed. If we allow the fear of terrorism to overwhelm us, the terrorists will have won an important victory. They will hold this entire country hostage.

I support strong measures to combat terrorism. I have often recommended that we develop a comprehensive counterterrorism policy. Such a policy should be based on diplomacy, and include the ability to deter terrorist attacks by extraditing and prosecuting terrorists, and, if necessary, the discriminate use of force. Finally, we must do what is reasonably possible to protect our diplomats stationed overseas.

I believe that this bill, as reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, is a good compromise. It authorizes appropriations for diplomatic security and antiterrorism totaling $1.1 billion for 1986–87, rather than the $4.4 billion over 4 years proposed by the administration.

In arriving at this amount, the committee considered that not all funds previously appropriated for security have been spent, that some of the administration's goals do not directly relate to security, and that others can be accomplished with less money and better management. This bill will insure that existing resources are used in ways which save lives and protect American interests. That is exactly what we should be doing, and I urge my colleagues to vote for it.

Mr. THURMOND. I rise to commend Senator LUGAR and the members of the Foreign Relations Committee for their efforts in bringing this important legislation before the Senate today.

Terrorism has increased dramatically in the last 5 years. I am particularly concerned that much of the terrorist activity has been directed against United States' interests and installations abroad. The vicious attack in 1984 on American Marines in Beirut, Lebanon is a clear illustration of terrorism specifically targeted at our Nation. The tragedy in Beirut and other acts of terrorism directed at American officials abroad raise important questions concerning the physical security of United States' Embassies and our other installations throughout the world.

Passage of the Diplomatic Security and Anti-Terrorism Act of 1986 is necessary so that our Nation can better defend against terrorists attacks. This legislation establishes the Diplomatic Security Service (DSS) which will be responsible for the security of our Embassies. The DSS will operate under the supervision of the Secretary of State. Substantial capital improvements to existing diplomatic facilities in order to improve security are authorized by this bill. The necessary construction work is to be performed by American contractors.

Mr. President, this legislation is of vital importance in order to protect Americans who serve our Nation overseas. I urge its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (H.R. 4151), as amended, was passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD and Mr. MATHIAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I will only be 1 minute. So that the distinguished Senator from Maryland will get the floor, I only want a minute, and I yield the floor.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I have a unanimous-consent request, one that I have discussed with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations and with the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that conferees on behalf of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee be appointed specifically to deal with the Grassley amendment to H.R. 4151.

The Grassley amendment eliminates two sections of the District of Columbia Code from the law which prohibit and set penalties for interference with foreign diplomatic and consular offices, officers, and property. In addition, the amendment would bring the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction of the Federal proscriptions contained in 18 U.S.C. 112. As such, it is a matter which is arguably within the jurisdiction of the Subcommittee on Governmental Efficiency and the District of Columbia of the Governmental Affairs Committee. For this reason, I ask that representatives from that committee be appointed to the conference to address this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is advised we have not yet appointed conferees on this bill.

Mr. MATHIAS. My unanimous consent was when they are appointed that there be conferees on behalf of the Governmental Affairs Committee on that specific amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MATHIAS. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if I might have 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader.

Mr. BYRD. I compliment the manager and the ranking manager, Mr. LUGAR and Mr. PELL respectively, on the skill and the great dedication to the sense of purpose which they have demonstrated in handling the embassy security legislation. At all times they exhibited great forebearance, patience, and understanding toward those Senators who sought to bring up amendments. I thank them for the good job that they have done on behalf of the Senate.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader, and the minority leader, for their cooperation.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate so that we can hear the distinguished manager of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will conversations going on please cease? We are asking for order in the Senate. The Democratic leader's request was well made. Please desist from further conversations.

The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, in addition to my thanks to the majority and minority leaders, I thank, of course, the distinguished ranking member of our committee, and all members of our committee who have prepared this markup and debate on this legislation. Also I want to thank the members of the staffs on both the majority and minority sides, and all Senators for giving us this opportunity.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I concur in these thoughts of the Senator from Indiana. I am very grateful to him, to our staffs, and to the leadership which helped us keep this bill on the road.

THE JUDICIARY

NOMINATION OF DANIEL A. MANION, OF INDIANA, TO BE U.S. CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT

Mr. PELL. In view of the fact that for the moment I have the floor, I would like to glide into another subject, the subject of Daniel Manion to be a judge in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit which concerns me very much indeed.

I had the benefit of a long talk with him in my office and found him to be very open, honest, and decent. However, measured against the qualifications needed for a Federal circuit court judge, he simply does not measure up, in experience or legal scholarship. Because of his lack of qualifications I must oppose his nomination.

In my opinion, it is a shame that Mr. Manion has to bear the weight of criticism which has been most severe. This criticism should more properly be reserved for those in the executive branch who made such a poor selection for this nomination.

I would add here that I am not amongst those who have criticized Dan Manion because of his beliefs or his loyalty to his father's precepts or because he wanted the Ten Commandments displayed in schoolrooms. Rather I only wish that he had the judicial qualifications that would have permitted me to vote for him. I would only hope that in the future, the executive branch would send up candidates who are qualified and whom we in the Senate can proudly support. To send up a nomination like this can hurt a very fine young man without any real reason.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I oppose the confirmation of Daniel Manion to be a Federal judge in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Let me respond at the outset to those who are so piously regretting that this issue may well be decided on a cloture vote instead of an up-or-down confirmation. That argument is disingenuous. The simple truth is too many Members of this body will vote for any administration nominee who is still breathing. The Justice Department hit bottom when it persuaded President Reagan to submit Mr. Manion's nomination. By rejecting the nomination the Senate will be sending an unmistakable message to Attorney General Meese that we expect future judicial nominees to meet at least minimum standards of competence.

Mr. Manion's nomination is in trouble for one reason only—his extreme lack of qualifications. He has had no experience in Federal courts. His briefs in State courts border on illiteracy. He insulted the Supreme Court by defying one of its key decisions interpreting the Constitution. He is opposed by the deans of a long list of major law schools throughout the country, and, compounding all of his other demerits, he refused to come clean in his Senate confirmation hearing.

Mr. Manion is a conservative—but ideology is not the issue in this debate. In fact, the issue of ideology is a red herring in the literal sense—a false odor dragged across the trail of Senate debate to confuse the real issue.

Democrats have voted to confirm dozens of President Reagan's conservative judicial nominees—but they have all had adequate qualifications. Manion flunks the test, not because he is conservative, but because he is not qualified. If the President wants to point the finger of blame for this fiasco, he need point no further than Ed Meese for setting the standard of qualifications so low.

In fact, the shoe is on the other foot. Mr. Manion's lack of qualifications to be a Federal circuit judge is so striking that it suggests he was nominated solely because of his conservative ideology and not for any distinction in the law.

In 1979, when I was chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, we held specific hearings on the selection and confirmation process for Federal judges, in order to develop a workable and effective set of standards to guide the committee in its evaluation of judicial nominees.

During the course of those hearings, Senator THURMOND, then the ranking minority member, noted that "it is important that we keep in mind and centrally focus our efforts on the fact that we must have qualified people on the bench * * * our emphasis, therefore, must be on ensuring that the judiciary of this country remains filled with judges of superior quality and merit."

Senator THURMOND went on to note that this task "is not to be taken lightly but (is) one which the Senate and this committee, as a screening tool of the body, must accomplish with careful scrutiny of each nominee." He then promised that he would continue to "fully evaluate the candidates to ensure that only those people best qualified for appointment are favorably reported" by the Judiciary Committee.

I completely agree with the views expressed by Senator THURMOND in 1979 concerning our advice and consent responsibilities as Members of the Senate.

Daniel Manion's nomination was not favorably reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee, and for good reason. He is not an individual of "superior quality and merit." Nor is he among the "best qualified for appointment."

The composition of the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals and the credentials of the 13 judges now serving on that distinguished bench prove the point.

Six of the 13, almost half of the current bench, were already judges at the time of their nomination to the seventh circuit. Each had demonstrated an ability to analyze complex legal issues and judicial precedents, to apply the law to the facts in complex cases, and to write lucid, well-reasoned judicial opinions for the guidance of other courts, the bar, and the country as a whole. The skills and experience required for members of the seventh circuit were nothing new to these six judges.

An additional five members of the seventh circuit had distinguished themselves as faculty members at law schools prior to their appointment. Their experience obviously qualified them to meet the challenging tasks of the Federal appellate courts. Both roles require an exceptional ability to analyze complex questions of law and explain their views in clear, concise, and compelling terms.

The remaining two current members of the seventh circuit had been practicing attorneys for 25 years at the time of their appointments. And each of them had substantial litigation experience in the Federal courts.

By comparison, Mr. Manion has no experience even remotely approaching the distinguished qualifications of the judges he aspires to join. He has never served on the bench, he has never published a scholarly work, he has never been a faculty member at any law school, and he has never had any significant experience in dealing with Federal or constitutional issues. In fact, Mr. Manion has never even argued a Federal or a constitutional claim in the court to which he seeks appointment.

Mr. Manion's lack of qualifications is obvious to leaders of the bar. He received the lowest passing grade from the American Bar Association's Committee on the Federal Judiciary; a minority of the ABA committee found him unqualified.

The Chicago Council of Lawyers, an organization of 1,000 attorneys in the largest city in the seventh circuit, concluded that Mr. Manion is not qualified. More than 40 law school deans, in an extraordinary letter to the Senate, have concluded that Mr. Manion is not qualified. Prominent law professors have stated that Mr. Manion is not qualified.

The evidence of Mr. Manion's lack of qualifications to be a Federal judge is displayed again and again in his own limited legal work. At the request of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. Manion submitted five of his best briefs to the committee for review. Members of the Chicago Council of Lawyers also examined these briefs.

The council's comment on Mr. Manion's brief in Lindower versus City of South Bend is typical of its analysis:

(T)his brief . . . demonstrates a low level of competency compared to the excellence to which the judiciary and the public are entitled . . . the numerous typographical errors, grammatical mistakes, and syntactical errors in this brief raise concerns about Mr. Manion's ability to write, a key qualification for a judge of the Court of Appeals.

It is an affront to the Senate to be debating a judicial nominee who falls so far short of the mark of distinction which should characterize nominees to our courts. I have here, on my Senate desk, copies of the briefs Mr. Manion submitted to our committee. I challenge any Senator to peruse these briefs and defend the proposition that Mr. Manion is qualified to sit on a Federal appellate court. Frankly, the caliber of these briefs is more appropriate to the seventh grade than to the seventh circuit.

The seventh circuit has jurisdiction over three States and 22 million people. Last year, the court handed down over 2,200 opinions, with each judge participating in over 500 cases and personally authorizing approximately 50 opinions. The office of Federal judge involves demanding work, and the Senate must demand that the individuals whom the President nominates are up to the task. Nothing in Mr. Manion's background suggests that he measures up.

I regret the necessity to speak this frankly in this debate. But a fundamental principle is at stake—the integrity of the Federal courts in our constitutional system of government. "Support the President" is not the end of the analysis. We have also taken an oath to support the Constitution—and that oath comes before all others.

Writing in the Federalist Papers two centuries ago, Alexander Hamilton predicted that only Senate confirmaton would stand between the inept nominee and the inept appointee. As he observed of the confirmation process, it "would tend greatly to preventing the appointment of unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view of popularity."

Were Alexander Hamilton with us in the Senate today, he might well be a Republican, at least by party heritage. But I believe that he would also be leading the effort to ask the Senate to live up to its responsibility to defend the Federal courts.

□ 1910

So far, I have addressed only Mr. Manion's lack of credentials, accomplishments, and experience. Given his overwhelmingly unimpressive record, I believe it is unnecessary to look further to conclude that the nomination should be rejected.

Yet his deficiencies run deeper, for he also lacks a fundamental understanding of the Constitution and the role of the courts in our constitutional system of government.

The judicial branch of Government is the guardian of our basic constitutional principles. It provides the ultimate safeguard in our system of checks and balances, through its power to strike down statutes which transgress constitutional requirements, and even to order the President himself to act in accordance with the laws and the Constitution.

To a large extent, it is the Federal appellate judges who decide what the Constitution means, for very few cases ever reach the Supreme Court. Last year, for instance, the Supreme Court accepted only 171 cases for review. Of these, only 10 were from the seventh circuit. The vast majority of cases decided by the seventh circuit or any other circuit receive no further judicial review. Their word is final.

The judgments made at the appellate court level also contribute substantially to setting the tone and determining the substance of constitutional interpretations for the future. If a Federal appellate court signals that the time has come for more—or less—aggressive enforcement of particular constitutional rights, that message is often heard and heeded—with direct consequences for millions of Americans across the country.

It is because of the vast power and responsibility of Federal appellate judges that we insist they understand and respect the Constitution. Mr. Manion has demonstrated neither of these traits. As a State legislator, he sponsored legislation which he knew to be flatly unconstitutional because it violated the first amendment. Yet he insisted at our Senate committee hearings that his bill could somehow have become the law in Indiana, in spite of the fact that the Supreme Court had declared the measure unconstitutional just 2 months before. In doing so, Mr. Manion defied the Supreme Court and insulted the Constitution—and he does not belong on the Federal bench.

Mr. Manion now claims that he would support and implement Supreme Court decisions. But his concession comes too late. Before he was seated in the Indiana State Legislature, he took an oath of office to uphold, support and defend the Constitution of the United States. Yet when his personal views conflicted with that responsibility he violated his oath.

His actions as a State legislator in the past speak louder than his words today. Either Mr. Manion does not understand the Constitution, or he does not respect its mandate. In either case, he is not fit to serve on a U.S. Court of Appeals.

In addition, I am concerned about the lack of candor and credibility in Mr. Manion's testimony before the Judiciary Committee. I questioned Mr. Manion at his second hearing. I listened closely to his answers, and I observed his demeanor. I was troubled by his transparent efforts to divert attention from controversial positions which he has taken in the past. Several times during his testimony, he either did not recall or tried to evade responsibility for prior statements and positions.

For example, in 1979, he unequivocally endorsed the John Birch Society, stating in a letter that "Your members are certainly the people who are on the front line of the fight for Constitutional freedom." At his confirmation hearing, he said he does not recall the letter and does not know what the John Birch Society stands for.

In 1977, Mr. Manion heartily endorsed a book by Congressman Lawrence McDonald, which espoused extreme right-wing views. At his confirmation hearing, Mr. Manion said he does not remember the book, and when asked about specific positions taken in the book, he said he disagrees with them.

Finally, on several occasions, Mr. Manion has made statements and participated in efforts that express outright contempt for the long-established legal doctrine of incorporation, which makes the core protections of the bill of rights binding on the States. The doctrine of incorporation has protected American citizens from State laws which would inhibit free speech, violate the separation of church and state, or intrude on other fundamental rights. Every sitting Justice on the Supreme Court supports the doctrine.

At his confirmation hearing, Mr. Manion testified that he now agrees with the incorporation doctrine. But his sudden retraction on this issue is unconvincing. He said he had no idea whether he would seek to deincorporate any rights in the Bill of Rights.

Nominees who seek life tenure on our Federal courts must bear the burden of demonstrating that they are deserving of their solemn trust. The Senate should confirm only those nominees who truly are of "superior quality and merit." With all respect to Mr. Manion, he is not among them. The Attorney General has abused the Senate with this nomination, and it should be rejected by the Senate.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise in support of the nomination of Daniel A Manion of Indiana, to be U.S. circuit judge for the seventh circuit.

He possesses broad legal experience, valuable legal skills, and high moral integrity, and almost everybody admits at least the latter. He is an accomplished lawyer, well qualified to sit on the Federal bench. He may not have practiced in Washington, DC, or New York City, San Francisco, Los Angeles, or Miami, but he was practicing as basically a small town lawyer in Indiana. I might mention he has the respect of the people in Indiana.

Dan received his B.A. degree at Notre Dame. While an undergraduate he was recognized for "excellence in leadership, academic attainment, and participation in military affairs."

Upon graduation from Notre Dame, Dan served in the Vietnam war. He is the first veteran of the Vietnam war to be nominated to a circuit judgeship. After his military service, Dan entered the Indiana University School of Law at Indianapolis. He graduated in the top one-third of his class in 1973. Rather remarkably, while he was studying law, Dan also worked full time as director of industrial development for the Indiana Department of Commerce.

Mr. President, I do not know how many of my colleagues have gone through law school, but I think they would find it was pretty tough to serve in a full-time position while going through law school and graduate in the upper third of your class, especially at a law school like Indiana.

After graduation from law school, Dan began serving as the deputy attorney general for the State of Indiana. While working as a member of the criminal appellate section, he wrote nearly 20 briefs on various criminal appeals. He argued cases before the Indiana Court of Appeals and the Indiana Supreme Court.

After serving in the attorney general's office for 2 years, Dan returned to South Bend in 1974 and began practicing with a law firm there. While working for them he handled real estate transactions, small corporation matters, business law advice, wills, and estates. Dan also handled his own litigations for plaintiffs and defendants.

In 1978, Dan was elected to the Indiana State Senate. He defeated the majority caucus leader and served the people of Indiana with distinction. He was a member of the judiciary committee and chairman of the civil law subcommittee. He also served as chairman of the committee on energy and environmental matters, a unique commendation for a junior member of the senate.

In 1980 Dan was encouraged to run for Congress. However, he had to decline because he was struck with a debilitating case of multiple sclerosis.

Mr. President, this is a unique individual who is being much maligned in this process. After a strenuous effort to overcome multiple sclerosis, he regained his health and he is now in complete remission. He ought to be respected and revered for the things he has gone through.

Dan's record in public service and private practice is highly commendable. He is known to be an honorable man who is dedicated to his profession, his family, his church, and his country. Upon learning of his pending judicial appointment, Father Theodore Hesburgh, president of Notre Dame University, said:

> I believe he will bring dedication, integrity, and a keen knowledge of the law to that position. His life has been one of service and commitment to justice. I believe he will exhibit these same qualities sitting on the Federal bench, and that his appointment will be a strong one.

Many of those who are criticizing Daniel Manion are quick to seize upon Father Hesburgh's statements in so many other areas, but they ignore this statement by this eminent president of one of the great universities in this country, and a great man himself, one who probably understands what it takes to make a great man.

A majority of the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary has determined that Dan is qualified to serve as circuit judge for the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

Opponents of Mr. Manion have decried the fact that he only received a "qualified" rating from the ABA.

What they do not state is that "qualified" is the usual rating of the American Bar Association and it is a good rating and it is one that is very difficult to get.

It is a good rating and it is one that is very difficult to get.

As the Justice Department pointed out:

> Presidents Johnson, Nixon, Ford and Carter together appointed 555 federal district court judges. Of those, 282, or 50.8%, were rated "Qualified." Also, three District Court judges appointed by President Carter and three District Court judges appointed by President Johnson were rated "Not Qualified" by the ABA, but were nevertheless confirmed by the Democrat-controlled Senate. . . . Moreover, more than a quarter of all of President Carter's Circuit Court appointments approved by the Democrat-controlled Senate were rated "Qualified."

The Chicago Council of Lawyers stated in their letter that Dan "has a high reputation for integrity, conscientiousness, and fairness." Reports from South Bend, IN, lawyers indicate that he has "excellent interpersonal skills, and that lawyers who worked both with and against him like and respect him." They determined Dan would "be fair in ruling on cases which present issues on which he has strong political views."

The Chicago Council—a very critical council—also stated that:

> The majority of lawyers to whom we talked regarding Mr. Manion's legal experience, thought that he was a competent lawyer. . . . All vouched for his forthrightness and his adherence to high ethical standards.

Eugene I. Goldman, a lifelong Democrat and attorney with the Washington law firm of Steptoe & Johnson, worked with Dan in defending a lawsuit in South Bend, IN. In a letter to Senator STROM THURMOND, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, he stated:

> Mr. Manion is an excellent lawyer and would be a distinguished member of the Seventh Circuit.

The main opposition to Dan can be best summarized by a statement made by my colleague, Senator BIDEN. Concerning Dan, he said:

> I think you are a decent and honorable man, but I do not think I can vote for you because of your political views.

In other words—and I do not think there is much doubt here—the attacks upon Dan are clearly ideologically motivated. All pretense of objectivity have been dropped by the liberals in their assaults upon this distinguished lawyer. Even the Washington Post conceded the lack of impartial assessments of Dan's qualifications in a May 7, 1986, article. The Post stated:

> The Democrats have refrained from challenging any nominee explicitly on grounds of being too conservative, focusing instead on questions of temperament and personal conduct. But the Manion nomination is a flat-out fight over ideology.

Dan is an admitted conservative. He is a Reaganite Republican who believes in limited government and judicial restraint. He is an ardent advocate of personal liberty.

Dan has also been maligned because of his father's political views. His late father, Clarence Manion, was formerly dean of the University of Notre Dame Law School from 1941 to 1952; 11 years. He established and hosted "The Manion Forum," a syndicated radio and television program. The conservative program was broadcast over hundreds of States across America. Dan used to accompany his father on the show, voicing strongly held conservative views as a younger man.

He has been criticized for expressing doubts about the wisdom of the incorporation doctrine, whereby the Supreme Court has held that the 14th amendment mandates the application of the Bill of Rights to the States.

He is not alone. Some of the greatest legal minds in this century have agreed with him on that particular point, even though I have to admit, and he does admit, that 14th the Doctrine of Incorporation of the Bill of Rights in the 14th Amendment is basically established law at this time.

Recently the Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Meese, also denounced the incorporation doctrine as "constitutionally unsound."

It is apparent that Dan adheres to a strict constructionist interpretation of the Constitution. James Madison, the "Father of the Constitution" and the fourth President of the United States adhered to this policy too. So I would suggest that it seems as though Dan is in good company, being in the company of James Madison.

Critics of Dan claim that his cosponsorship of a bill authorizing the posting of the Ten Commandments in Indiana public schools demonstrated a disrespect for the Constitution and Supreme Court decisions. Nothing could be further from the truth. While Dan served in the Indiana Senate, he was acting as a legislator. That is a little bit different from serving as a judge. And a legislator has the right and privilege to disagree with a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Dan cosponsored the bill authorizing the posting of the Ten Commandments after the Supreme Court ruled in Stone versus Graham that a State law requiring the posting of them in public schools violated the establishment clause. It should be noted that there is a difference between a statute requiring the posting of the Ten Commandments and one which merely authorizes their posting.

That alone is enough to allow any State legislator to try to make another attempt to do what he believes in. And I might add that a vast majority of them did believe in this in that legislature at that time. And I might also add that critics of Dan Manion have very conveniently failed to note this distinction and its constitutional importance. And there are others as well.

In a letter to Senate Majority Leader ROBERT DOLE, Assistant Attorney General John R. Bolton pointed out that:

Like the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act, the bill that Dan co-sponsored explicitly deferred to the courts on the question of its constitutionality and specified what should be done if it were found unconstitutional: "If this section is determined to be unconstitutional, all copies of the Ten Commandments displayed by authority of this section shall be immediately removed when the judgment becomes final."

It seems to me that there was an attempt to comply with the Constitution and to acknowledge that there may be a higher law than the one that they were establishing, or at least passing at that time.

It should also be pointed out that the Indiana bill had 17 other cosponsors, was supported by the Democratic Senators and passed the legislative body 39 to 9.

So he is going to be hung here in the Senate of the United States because of a bill that he had a right to back, that passed 39 to 9 with bipartisan support.

During the nomination hearings of Mr. Abner Mikva for the Federal bench, my colleague, Senator BIDEN said:

As I see it, our function in reviewing the qualifications of a judicial nomination is somewhat different from our function reviewing the qualifications of a nominee to an Executive Branch position.

Personal views on matters of policy falling within the purview of an Executive office are critically important in assessing a nominee's qualifications. Abner Mikva, as a member of Congress, has spoken out on practically every public issue coming before the House of Representatives in the past decade.

His views on those issues would be important if, for example, he were to be nominated to a Cabinet post where his job would be to implement his positions The necessary qualifications of a judicial nominee are somewhat different.

Although a nominee's personal views on matters likely to come before him are relevant, they are not nearly as important as the most elusive qualities of demeanor and judicial temperament. . . .

The real issue with a judicial nominee is whether he is capable of performing the delicate role objectively reviewing questions of law and fact.

He must be able to put aside any personal prejudice he might have on the matters before him.

Therefore, I believe what is properly before us here, as we consider Congressman Mikva's nomination, is not the views he has expressed on public issues as a member of Congress, but rather the degree to which he possesses those attributes experience has shown to be desirable in a judge, particularly the ability to be objective on the bench. To apply any other standard would be to disqualify from the judiciary virtually any public person who has been willing to take positions on judicial issues.

Specifically, I do not believe that elected officials should be disqualified for service on the federal bench simply because during the course of their particular career they have advocated positions with which some people have disagreed.

Nearly everyone familiar with Dan Manion's legal expertise has found him well suited to serve on the Federal bench. Since he possesses those qualities essential for service as a circuit court judge, I urge my colleagues to rise above partisan ideology and support his nomination.

Mr. HATCH. I also ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD at this time a letter from President Ronald Reagan to Senator STROM THURMOND dated June 20, 1986.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
WASHINGTON, DC,
June 20, 1986.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR STROM, During the campaigns of 1980 and 1984, I made clear to the American people the kind of men and women I would select to fill vacancies on the Federal bench, including the United States Supreme Court.

I promised they would be men and women of demonstrable character and capacity, of practical experience and proven ability in the law. I would nominate, I said, judges and justices who shared my deeply held conviction that the function of America's courts, including the highest court, is not to make laws for the American people, but to interpret the law. Judges in a democratic society should not use their appointed offices to impose their social or political views upon society—in our system of Government this is the province of elected officials. This was a view stated again and again in those campaigns.

I believe I have kept faith with that commitment. And these thoughts were very much in mind when I selected Justice Rehnquist to succeed the retiring Chief Justice, and Judge Antonin Scalia to fill the vacancy thus created. Two nominees who better exemplify the qualities I pledged to seek in judicial appointments would be difficult to find.

Which brings me to the point of this letter. I am writing with a sense of profound concern about what is happening with the confirmation of Daniel A. Manion, whom I recently nominated to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Dan Manion is a capable attorney, with a high reputation for integrity and substantial litigation experience. Colleagues he has faced in court and former Democratic opponents in the Indiana Senate have come forward to attest to his character and competence. Reviewing his record, the American Bar Association declared him fully "qualified" for the appellate judgeship to which he has been nominated.

Nevertheless, in recent weeks, Mr. Manion has become the target of a campaign that has sought to disparage his capabilities and his character, in order to defeat his nomination. Thus, I am writing to make known to you and your Senate colleagues my strongly held views about Dan Manion, and about his qualifications for service on the appellate bench.

First, the rating given to Dan Manion by the ABA, i.e., "qualified"—though disparaged by his critics—is the identical rating given almost half the Federal judges nominated by Presidents Nixon, Ford, and Carter. It is the same rating given two of my previous nominees to the Seventh Circuit, Judges Easterbrook and Posner, both of whom were distinguished professors of law at the time of their nomination. At what point was it that ABA rating of "qualified" became an impediment to nomination to the Federal bench?

Second, Mr. Manion's legal experience is dismissed because it was gained largely at the State rather than the Federal level. But my own experience, before coming to Washington, was at the State level. It has been, and remains, my belief that our Federal circuit courts should reflect the diversity of the regions they serve. The Seventh Circuit contains Chicago, but it also contains smaller cities and towns, rural areas and farming communities, like Dixon, Illinois. Dan Manion, a country lawyer, would represent that diversity, just as the other judges whom I nominated to the Seventh Circuit bring experience from the academic world and the urban law community.

Moreover, when we recall that Mr. Lincoln himself and the late Senator Sam Ervin were proud to be known as "country lawyers," we ought to be hesitant before considering this kind of law practice a mark of ineligibility for service on the Federal bench. Nor should Mr. Manion's years of political experience in the State Senate and legal experience in Indiana's District Attorney's office be counted as of no consequence. Among the names any President should consider for the Federal courts, including the Supreme Court, when vacancies occur, are those of the most distinguished and experienced lawyers in the Congress of the United States.

Third, it is alleged that Mr. Manion, while serving as chairman of the Judiciary Committee in the Indiana Senate, "defied . . . the Constitution," when he proposed a bill authorizing the posting of the Ten Commandments in Indiana's public schools.

But this distortion is rooted either in ignorance or malice. Where the Supreme Court had disallowed the mandatory posting of the Ten Commandments in the Kentucky public schools, Dan Manion sponsored a bill permitting the voluntary posting in Indiana's schools, and added a provision that should the Supreme Court rule voluntary posting unconstitutional, the postings would immediately be removed. His bill passed the Indiana Senate with strong Democratic support.

Dan Manion is also opposed by some because his father, Clarence Manion, former dean of the Notre Dame Law School, was a member of the John Birch Society. Yet, surely, in 1986, the time has passed when guilt by association is acceptable practice, when an act of political discrimination can be committed against a Federal nominee because his late father held deeply controversial views.

Addressing Mr. Manion during his appearance before the Judiciary Committee, one Senator revealed, I believe, the true and undeclared motivation behind the campaign to defeat my nominee. "I think you are a decent and honorable man," the Senator said to Dan Manion, "but I cannot vote for you because of your political views."

Strom, here we come to the heart of the matter.

Dan Manion's "political views" are close to my political views. In particular, Dan Manion's belief that Federal judges should interpret the law, and not impose from the bench their social or philosophical notions upon society, is my belief. That is the real reason this nomination is encountering such hostility.

So, let me state my position directly. I intend to fight for the nomination of Dan Manion; and I do not accept that there should be a hidden restrictive covenant in the confirmation process that reads: No conservative need apply.

What appears to be taking shape is an attempt by some Senators to use their "advise and consent" power to overturn the mandate of the American people—as expressed in 1980 and 1984.

This is not an issue of Republican versus Democrat. It is an issue of whether or not a President of the United States has the right to choose Federal judges who share his judicial philosophy, so long as they are qualified by reason of character and competence. Presidents of both parties have asserted that prerogative; and I will not surrender it.

In his letter of endorsement, Father Theodore Hesburgh, who has known him since Notre Dame days, said of Dan Manion that his life has been one of "service and commitment to justice," that he would bring to the bench "dedication, integrity and a keen knowledge of the law." This represents my view exactly; and there is one final personal reason I want this nominee confirmed. Dan Manion would be the first of the Vietnam veterans to reach the Federal Appellate Court; and I want the record to show I made that appointment.

Please let me know how I can be of help.

Sincerely,

RONALD REAGAN.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD at this time a letter from the U.S. Department of Justice from Mr. John Bolton, stamped May 27, 1986 to Senator ROBERT DOLE which answers a number of the so-called criticisms against Mr. Manion.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AND INTERGOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, May 27, 1986.

HON. ROBERT DOLE,
United States Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DOLE: The President has nominated Daniel A. Manion to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. On May 8, 1986, the Senate Judiciary Committee voted 11-6 to report the nomination to the full Senate without recommendation.

A highly competent lawyer and former Indiana State Senator, Mr. Manion's nomination has been challenged on the basis of his political beliefs. This Department believes such opposition to be highly inconsistent with the constitutional responsibility of "advice and consent."

In their thoughtful "Dear Colleague" letter of May 21, Senators Lugar and Quayle "clarify the misleading portrait that [Mr. Manion's] detractors would like us to accept." To assist further in that effort, we have enclosed with this letter a briefing paper on Mr. Manion which more fully discusses his qualifications and refutes the baseless arguments against his confirmation. We wish, however, to highlight a few points:

1. Those who have worked with Daniel Manion, whether they share his legal philosophy or not, find him to be a lawyer of great competence, fairness and integrity. In the words of Father Theodore Hesburgh, the president of the University of Notre Dame, "[Daniel Manion's] life has been one of service and commitment to justice."

2. A former state legislator and Deputy Attorney General of Indiana, Daniel Manion is presently a trusted practicing lawyer in a relatively small rural/suburban community. Upon confirmation, Mr. Manion will bring substantial litigation experience in state law and important balance to the Seventh Circuit which has a high concentration of judges with either academic backgrounds or who practiced with large urban law firms. In the words of Senators Lugar and Quayle, he is "in touch with the hopes and aspirations of our Indiana constituents."

3. The ABA found Mr. Manion to be "qualified," a ranking given to the majority of judicial nominees in this and the last four administrations, Democratic or Republican. In fact, the same rating was given to former law professors Posner and Easterbrook who presently serve on the Seventh Circuit.

4. Possessing great respect for the U.S. Constitution, Daniel Manion did not disregard his oath as a state legislator, as some allege, when he co-sponsored legislation which was designed to clarify a prior ruling of the U.S. Supreme Court. Former U.S. Presidents, legal scholars of diverse opinion, and even current members of the Senate have acknowledged such activity to be a legislator's prerogative, if not duty.

5. Some who oppose Daniel Manion have done so by the disreputable technique of "guilt by association." A personal sentiment of gratitude for an expression of condolence on his father's death to a small bookstore affiliated with the John Birch Society has been horribly mischaracterized as a statement of Mr. Manion's legal views.

6. In short, anyone who carefully examines his qualifications will most readily conclude, as did Senators Lugar and Quayle, that Daniel Manion is "a man of high moral integrity, broad legal experience, intelligence and the proper temperament to serve on the bench of the U.S. Circuit."

President Reagan nominated Daniel A. Manion because he believes him capable to serve on the federal court. Surely, the constitutional process of advice and consent has not been reduced to a political litmus test. Senator Biden's statement at the end of Mr. Manion's hearing on April 30, 1986 that he would not vote for Mr. Manion because of his "political views," notwithstanding the fact that he also found him to be "a decent and honorable man," is simply not faithful to our constitutional tradition.

On behalf of the President and the Attorney General, I urge you to make the successful confirmation of Daniel A. Manion a top priority. My office stands ready to assist you and your colleagues in whatever way and to whatever extent you might request in this effort. This issue is one of crucial importance not only to the President and this Department, but also to our constitutional system. Thank you very much for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

JOHN R. BOLTON,
Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Father Hesburgh, the president of the University of Notre Dame, in support of Daniel A. Manion.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF NOTRE DAME,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Notre Dame, IN, May 15, 1986.

Hon. DANIEL QUAYLE,
Hart Building, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR DAN: I am writing to support Daniel A. Manion, who has been nominated by the President to be a member of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

I have known Dan since he was a youth. His father was dean of the Notre Dame Law School, and his mother, Gina, is a longtime personal friend and wonderful woman. Dan is a reflection of the strong morals and high values that have always been so much a part of his family. I strongly believe that he would serve this country and the Seventh Circuit extremely well if his nomination were approved.

Dan compiled a fine record while he was an undergraduate student at the University. He was honored as the recipient of the John J. Cavanaugh Award, which is annually given to the senior Army cadet ROTC officer showing excellence in leadership, academic attainment, and participation in military affairs. In addition, Dan was a fine Notre Dame student, and has brought honor to both the University and himself as an alumnus who has shown himself dedicated to service and hard work for his country and his fellow human beings.

Again, I recommend the appointment of Daniel Manion as a federal judge. I believe that he will bring dedication, integrity, and a keen knowledge of the law to that position. His life has been one of service and commitment to justice. I believe that he will exhibit these same qualities sitting on the federal bench, and that his appointment will be a strong one. I would be happy to provide further information if requested.

With warm personal regards and best wishes, I remain.

Sincerely in Notre Dame,
THEODORE M. HESBURGH, C.S.C.,
President.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from a well-known Democrat, Mr. David T. Ready, dated April 28, 1986, also in support of Mr. Manion.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DAVID T. READY,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
South Bend, IN, April 28, 1986.

Senator STROM THURMOND,
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

RE: Daniel Manion.

DEAR SENATOR THURMOND: I am writing concerning the Senate Judiciary Committee's consideration of Attorney Daniel Manion's pending appointment to the United States Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

I have known Mr. Manion for a number of years. I believe that he is eminently qualified to fulfill the position of the United States Circuit Court Judge. I firmly believe he possesses the necessary intellect, integrity, and open-mindedness which practicing members of the Bar have a right to expect in our judicial appointments.

I would hasten to add that Mr. Manion enjoys an excellent reputation amongst his peers.

During the years 1977 through 1981 I had the opportunity to serve as United States Attorney for the Northern District of Indiana, having been appointed to that position by President Carter. This gave me the opportunity to practice in our Federal Courts at both the trial and appellate levels with greater frequency than most legal practitioners. It also gave me the opportunity to observe our Federal Judiciary at both trial and appellate levels. As such, I would hope that it also gave me some insight into what judicial qualities best serve our legal system, especially at the Federal Appellate level. I firmly believe Mr. Manion possesses those qualities, temperament, legal intellect, experience, fair-mindedness, judicial integrity, and a plain, old-fashioned willingness to work long and hard. I have no doubt that Mr. Manion's appointment will reflect credit upon the Federal Judiciary.

Mr. Manion is, of course, a Republican while, as you may surmise from my appointment by President Carter, I am a Democrat. Additionally, Mr. Manion enjoys a reputation of being a "conservative" while I am not. Nevertheless, the fact that Mr. Manion and I are not of a similar political persuasion or, for that matter philosophically attuned, it does not dissuade me from my admiration for him as a person and as a lawyer. He is, in short, a good lawyer who can become a great Judge.

Within the past week I have received two telephone calls inquiring as to Mr. Manion's qualifications. I suppose these calls came to me, based upon my prior services as United States Attorney. One of these calls came from the National Federation of Women Lawyers Organization based in Washington, D.C. Their questions and inquiries regarding Mr. Manion's qualifications were both pointed and thorough. I do not know what position this organization has adopted regarding Mr. Manion's appointment, but from the inquiry I received it appeared that they were open-minded about such an appointment and were merely calling to obtain information regarding his overall qualifications.

However, the second inquiry came from the People for the American Way. I must say that I was disappointed in the nature of their inquiry and the questions they asked of me. I have no bone to pick with that organization and, in fact, am sure that they serve a very valid and useful purpose in attempting to counter-balance some of our more conservative minded organizations. That is all in the give and take of the American political system. However, I must say that the overall tone of their inquiry was not one in which they were seeking my opinion on Mr. Manion's qualifications, but rather looking for something negative concerning Mr. Manion. When it became apparent that I was not going to accommodate them, simply because I do not know anything negative about Mr. Manion, their interest in talking to me waned sharply and the conversation terminated abruptly.

When I compare the two telephone interviews referred to above, I find that one was a thorough search into my opinons as to Mr. Manion's qualifications, whereas the latter was simply looking for negatives.

Finally, Senator Thurmond, I would note that the most recent appointments to our Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals have emanated from the area of academia. I have no problems with the qualifications of many of those persons who were so appointed. However, I believe that our Courts of Appeals are best served when they are comprised of former trial judges, academics, and practicing lawyers. It is my opinion that Mr. Manion is an excellent representative of that latter group and will well serve on the Court of Appeals.

Thank you for your indulgence.

Sincerely,
DAVID T. READY.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Eugene I. Goldman, of the eminent law firm of Steptoe and Johnson, supporting Mr. Manion.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STEPTOE & JOHNSON,
Washington, DC, April 23, 1986.

Hon. STROM THURMOND.
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Senate Dirksen Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN THURMOND: I am writing in support of the confirmation of the nomination of Daniel A. Manion to serve on the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. By way of background, I have been a Democrat all of my life. For the last seven years, I have served as a director and member of the Executive Committee of the Washington Council of Lawyers, which shares its origins and commitment to the public interest with the Chicago Council of Lawyers. I am also a great admirer of Senator Simon and contributed to his campaign for the Senate. I have also had the opportunity to work with Mr. Manion in defending a lawsuit in South Bend.

I believe that Mr. Manion is an excellent lawyer and would be a distinguished member of the Seventh Circuit. I have reviewed the Chicago Council's letter to Senator Simon, dated April 9, 1986, and note the Council's findings that Mr. Manion "has a high reputation for integrity, conscientiousness, and fairness . . . has excellent interpersonal skills, and that lawyers who work both with and against him like and respect him . . . that the majority of lawyers . . . felt that he was a competent lawyer. A few lawyers told us that Mr. Manion was an outstanding lawyer. All vouched for his forthrightness and his adherence to high ethical standards."

I believe that the Chicago Council's findings, including its finding that Mr. Manion has been found to be a competent and outstanding lawyer, are inconsistent with the Council's ultimate, speculative conclusion that Mr. Manion will have difficulty with the legal issues routinely presented to the Seventh Circuit. I respectfully encourage the Committee to vote favorably on the President's nomination of Mr. Manion.

Very truly yours,
EUGENE I. GOLDMAN.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Richard M. Givan, Chief Justice of the Indiana State Supreme Court, wherein he also expresses his support for Mr. Manion.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF INDIANA,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE,
Indianapolis, IN, April 21, 1986.

Hon. HOWELL T. HEFLIN,
Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: It has been some time now since you and I had pleasant visits at the Chief Justice Conferences. I have followed your career in the United States Senate with great interest and have appreciated your support for the judiciary. Like many other of your friends, I do not take the time to write to you unless I have some specific input.

At the present time, you have pending before you the nomination of Daniel A. Manion for Judge of the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago. I have known Dan quite well since he was a law student at the Indiana University School of Law in Indianapolis. At that time he worked in the State House and I saw him on a regular basis. He has not only had an outstanding career as an attorney, but has served in the Indiana State Senate as well. Dan not only has the high academic qualifications to serve as a federal judge, but also has impeccable personal integrity and a very friendly and pleasing personality. It is my considered opinion that the citizens as well as the bench and Bar of the Seventh Circuit will be well served by his appointment.

I know you receive many letters and communications on matters of this sort; however, I thought receiving a few remarks from an old acquaintance who has no personal ax to grind might help you in your decision.

Sincerely yours,

RICHARD M. GIVAN,
Chief Justice of Indiana.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Mr. John J. Sullivan, of the Indianapolis law firm of Mendelson, Kennedy, Miller, Muller, and Hall.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MENDELSON, KENNEDY, MILLER,
MULLER & HALL,
Indianapolis, IN, May 9, 1986.

U.S. Senator ROBERT BYRD,
United States Senate,
Washington, DC.

Re: Nomination of Daniel Manion to 7th Circuit Court of Appeals

DEAR SENATOR BYRD: I would like to recommend the confirmation of the nomination of Daniel Manion to the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals.

I am a life-long Democrat. I have been our party's nominee to the office of Mayor of Indianapolis. I have been a delegate to our national convention. Also, I have been an attorney practicing law in Indiana for ten years.

Obviously, my political philosophy and that of Dan Manion are quite different. However, over the years I have respected Dan Manion as an individual, as a legislator and as an attorney.

I recall a discussion several years ago with Dan Manion regarding criticism he was receiving from members of his own party for his failure to support certain obscenity legislation because he believed the proposed legislation was unconstitutional. Dan Manion could have chosen the easier course of approving the legislation and letting the courts declare it unconstitutional, but he believed that the burden should not have been shifted to the court.

Some have criticized Dan Manion for his failure to publish articles or for his lack of appellate experience before the 7th Circuit. Good trial attorneys, particularly those from medium and small size firms, do not always have the time nor the staff to author legal treatises.

In general practice, unless there is a matter of principle that will require higher court review, a good trial attorney will posture his case to avoid an appeal. Appeals are costly and are often the result of attorneys who do not fully brief their case for trial.

The appellate courts need good trial attorneys who understand the law and the every day practice thereof. Dan Manion is a good trial attorney who is qualified to be an appellate judge. As an appellate judge, I believe that Dan Manion will follow the law. I would urge you and your colleagues to vote to confirm his nomination.

Very truly yours,

JOHN J. SULLIVAN.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, some of the criticism which has come Mr. Manion's way has come from the so-called Chicago Council of Lawyers. However, the Chicago Council of Lawyers also stated in their letter that Dan "has a high reputation for integrity, conscientiousness, and fairness." Reports from South Bend, IN, lawyers indicate that he has "excellent interpersonal skills, and that lawyers who worked both with and against him like and respect him." They determined Dan would "be fair in ruling on cases which present issues on which he has strong political views."

The Chicago Council also stated that "the majority of lawyers to whom we talked regarding Mr. Manion's legal experience, thought that he was a competent lawyer. * * * All vouched for his forthrightness and his adherence to high ethical standards."

Mr. President, I do not know about anybody else in this body, but I think it becomes somewhat arrogant for us to start criticizing a man who has had a smalltown practice, as though he really cannot practice anywhere else or cannot perform on the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

The fact is that some of the greatest judges in this society have come from smalltown practices with all the wisdom and good judgment that smalltown practices sometimes bring to people in the practice.

Mr. Manion does not deserve the calumny that has been thrown at him by some of our friends in the U.S. Senate, although they may be sincere. I think they are doing it primarily on ideological grounds.

If we are going to make the appointment of judicial nominees a political thing, then we are going to politicize the Federal judiciary. In fact, it will then happen every time, by one side or the other. When that happens, it will be a regrettable thing.

President Reagan won 49 out of 50 States. This is his nominee. Mr. Manion received a qualified rating from the American Bar Association. That is the rating most judgeship nominees receive. It has always been tough to get and some have not gotten it. Some have been refused by prior administrations and this administration because they could not get a rating of at least qualified by the American Bar Association.

I think it stands in Dan's favor that he has gotten a qualified rating, even though he is a Conservative, and it seems more difficult for Conservatives to get qualified ratings.

With regard to the American Bar Association ratings for both circuit and district court appointments, President Reagan, in the 5½ years he has been President, has had a higher percentage of "exceptionally well qualified" appointments than any President since President Johnson.

For circuit court appointments, Reagan has 16.7 percent, Carter 14.3 percent, Ford 16.7 percent, Nixon 15.6 percent, and Johnson 27.5 percent.

On district courts, Reagan has 5.7 percent, Carter 4 percent, Ford none, Nixon 5 percent, and Johnson 7.4 percent.

In terms of sheer numbers, Reagan has more circuit court candidates rated exceptionally well qualified—12—than Carter, Ford, Nixon, or Johnson.

In all, 51.8 percent of President Reagan's court appointments have been rated exceptionally well qualified or well qualified. This is very similar to Carter's 55 percent, Ford's 48.4 percent, Nixon's 50.9 percent, and Johnson's 54.9 percent.

Are Reagan's second-term circuit court appointments growing increasingly less qualified? No; 39 percent of Reagan's circuit court appointments were rated "well qualified" in the first terms; that percentage has grown to 40.8 percent in the second term. During 1986 alone, 60 percent of all circuit court appointments have been rated "well qualified." Also, 50.3 percent of Reagan's appointments to all courts were rated "exceptionally well qualified" in the first term; that percentage has risen to 53.3 percent in the second term.

Are more of President Reagan's appointments receiving "not qualified" ratings from a minority of the ABA committee? No; 22 of Carter's district court appointments had minority "not qualified ratings; 3 of Carter's appointments were found not "qualified" by a majority of the committee. By contrast, only three of Reagan's first-term appointments—comparable time period to Carter—received a minority "not qualified" and none were found "not qualified" by a majority.

PHILOSOPHICAL

One evident problem with ABA's ratings is that they penalize academics who may not have extensive litigating experience. For example, Judges Posner, Easterbrook, Noonan, and Scalia were rated only "qualified." Likewise other lawyers with distinguished careers in public service, like Judges Buckley and Silberman, were given only a "qualified" rating. If the ratings for these six candidates alone were changed to "well qualified," President Reagan's statistics for circuit court appointments in the top two categories—"exceptionally well qualified" and "well qualified"—would jump from 56.7 to 66.7. With this change, Reagan's statistics for circuit court appointments in the second term would jump from 51.9 percent to 67.7 percent.

One critic of President Reagan's appointments contended that his opposition was not based on ideology but quality concerns. As evidence, he cited his support for Judges Posner and Easterbrook. Both of these Judges, however, were law professors and accordingly received "qualified" ratings with a minority of the ABA committee considering them "not qualified."

The dangers of injecting partisanship into the judicial confirmation process were explored in a recent Harvard Law Review piece:

A. Injecting political considerations tends to make the judiciary another political branch. If the Senate treats the judiciary as a political institution, it will take on the same character in the eyes of the public and in the eyes of the Judges themselves. They may consider themselves selected to hew to a particular ideological line. The Judiciary's independence and prestige will be damaged.

B. Injecting partisanship could touch off a revenge and reprisal cycle. Republicans refrained from blocking candidates on ideological grounds during Carter's presidency. Future Republican restraint may not exist if democrats insist on partisanship.

C. Injecting ideology may not be successful anyway because of the surprise factor. A classic example is Chief Justice Chase. As Lincoln's Treasury Secretary, he drafted the legal tender laws. As justice, he struck them down as unconstitutional.

D. The basic assumption of those who inject politics into the selection process is that judges will carry a political agenda into the courts. Thus, this motion is based on noninterpretivism. It assumes that judges will act as lawmakers. If this becomes an accepted assumption, then the battle for the rule of law is lost.

Mr. President, I believe it is time to vote. And we will vote tomorrow on Mr. Manion. I hope our colleagues will take into consideration the high marks he gets from Democrats as well as Republicans in his home State and from people here as well.

I hope we will support Mr. Manion, because he deserves it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, it is with some reluctance that I take the floor. I might add that in the 14 years I have been in the U.S. Senate, and the 5 or so years I have been the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, I have seldom taken the floor to object to a nominee.

I must say that my distinguished colleague on the Judiciary Committee, Senator HATCH, has demonstrated to me for the last 20 minutes or so why he has a reputation of being such a good trial lawyer. He is able to take facts and partial facts and package them in ways that appear to make a great deal of sense.

□ 1940

He uses phrases such as so much calumny may be thrown at this nominee, that this is a political debate based upon ideology.

He quotes the Senator from Delaware where the Senator from Delaware says:

I think you are a decent, honorable man but I do not think I can vote for you because of your political views.

And he ends the quote there without the next sentence which says "But that is another question." The context in which that statement was made by the Senator from Delaware and the entire quote not read by the Senator from Utah was examining Mr. Manion on what most people would, I believe, and we will discuss this tonight and tomorrow, believe to be fairly outrageous political views.

But the point I was making there, and I went on to make later in the hearing, was that is not relevant; we do not even have to get to that point.

He read a quote from the Mikva hearing where the Senator from Delaware said that in fact we should not disbar or discount the possibility of legislators being qualified for the bench, and I said in there and he did read this portion that although one's views are relevant they are not decisive.

So no one is on the floor of the U.S. Senate now or in the past suggesting that one's political views, if they are outrageous, if they are beyond the mainstream of American political thought, are not relevant for consideration.

We would and could debate Mr. Manion's nomination to the court even if he were otherwise qualified. Even if he were exceptionally bright, even if he had argued cases in Federal court on constitutional questions, which he has not, even if he had been the lead attorney in any major Federal question case before the Federal judiciary, which he had not, we would be arguing about Mr. Manion's views even if, even if he had a distinguished career in academia or even if he had served with distinction on a Federal bench, all of which he has not.

But because he has not achieved any notable excellence in any of these areas, we do not even have to get to the question of whether or not he believes Larry McDonald, and I would like to get that book if I may, Larry McDonald's view of the Constitution was, as portrayed by Mr. Manion, a roadmap to the future. I am paraphrasing him.

We do not have to get that far. All we have to get to is whether or not Mr. Manion, who is a fine man, is qualified to sit on the circuit court of appeals, the court of last resort, in fact, for the vast majority of litigants in the Federal court system.

I say to my colleagues, we have things backwards here. We continue to act as if it is the burden upon Members of the U.S. Senate to demonstrate that a man or a woman is not qualified to be on the bench. If I can make an analogy for my colleagues, it is a little bit like saying when a man or woman stands for election that the burden is on the public to prove that the aspirant for public office is not qualified. If I said that to any of the people in the gallery, all of whom are citizens and voting, they would look at me and say that is preposterous. And yet we would only be dealing with the prospect of the Senator from Delaware serving this Nation, 1 among 100, for 6 years.

So how can we adopt this preposterous notion that when a man or a woman is about to be placed in the third coequal branch of Government, a branch of Government that has much impact upon the life, the rights, the property rights, the physical rights, as any of the other two branches, how can we say that when a woman or man is put forward to serve for life, until death does he part, how can we say that the burden should be on the Senate which is analogous to the voters? We are the voters. We are the voters for the third branch of the Government. Is the burden on us to prove that a woman or man is not qualified to sit for life on the Federal bench?

That is a preposterous notion that is conveniently seized upon by the proponents of Mr. Manion in the absence of strong evidence that he is otherwise qualified to sit and determine and adjudicate the rights and privileges of American citizens, corporate or individual.

I might also add for my colleagues let us assume that Mr. Manion has the demeanor and the common sense, et cetera, that my distinguished colleague from Utah has pointed out. Assume he has a good way with people which is an important element for a judge to have.

We should all remind ourselves what the circuit court of appeals does. It does not even see. It does not even look at. It never meets. It has no notion who the litigants are. There is no need for bedside manner. There is a need for an incisive, precise, laser-type mind that can read and absorb the briefs that have been put before him or her and then take those into his or her chamber and, among the dusty books and legions of cases that make up the stare decisis of this Nation, draw a conclusion as to whether or not the person appealing the decision from the court below is right or wrong. It does not require, as the family court requires, that special touch which is important in the family court. It does not require that special ability of a trial court judge to determine when witnesses are under so much pressure that in fact although they may be asked relevant questions they have lost control of their ability to know what they are saying. That takes a special sensibility. That is not what we are looking for in the circuit court of appeals.

It is a nice thing to have. What we are looking for in the circuit court of appeals are fine minds, schooled in the law, able to articulate their views and opinions in a concise, precise, analytical manner, to be able to be understood clearly, not only by the other six members of that court, not only by the proponents or opponents in the lawsuit but by every Federal court judge in the land for as long as that decision stands.

That does not take an ordinary mind. That is not a pedestrian requirement. It is a requirement of excellence.

What has become of us? What has become of us in this country? Here we are in great competition from around the world, from the Japanese, the Germans, the Canadians. Here we are saying in every other aspect of our life we should demand excellence. Here we are, in part thanks to the President of the United States, coming to grips with the requirement that Americans must be ready to compete anywhere and everywhere, and that the major criteria for that competition is honed excellence.

Now we are on the floor of the United States Senate, debating the nomination of a man to be elevated, and I say "elevated" for the rest of his life, to the circuit court of appeals, and we are told that, notwithstanding the fact he has no significant experience in constitutional issues, notwithstanding the fact he has never served on the bench, notwithstanding the fact he has no long academic record, notwithstanding the fact that he has not written any legal or scholarly articles, notwithstanding the fact that he has failed to demonstrate once, even once in his life a flair for judicial excellence or incisive reasoning or precise and clear thought, able to be transposed on paper, notwithstanding that, somehow guys like JOE BIDEN, who rise on the floor of the Senate to oppose a nomination for only the second time in 14 years, are political, that we are somehow partisan Democrats, who just want to stop the Reagan agenda from moving forward.

□ 1950

Now, my colleague raises several non sequiturs. He engages in logical fallacies that are amusing and confusing at the same time. And he knows how much I respect his ability as an opponent and as a friend.

Well, let us go through the logic of the argument my colleague makes. He said Ronald Reagan won 49 States. Therefore, since Ronald Reagan, I say to my friend from Illinois, Ronald Reagan won 49 States, he is entitled to incompetence on the bench. Because he has won 49 States, that means there has been a referendum on the ideological fervor that is being moved forward here.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. I would be delighted to yield.

Mr. HATCH. That is not what I said. I do not believe anybody, the President or otherwise, has a right to put incompetence on the bench. I think I made a more than adequate case that he is not incompetent, that he is respected by his peers, even the Chicago set of lawyers who criticized him because they differ with him ideologically. They differ with him, but they admit he is competent, honest, capable, and has integrity. So that is hardly saying you are putting incompetence on the bench.

Mr. BIDEN. They said he is incompetent to serve on that bench.

Mr. HATCH. Well, they may say that, or a small select group of lawyers who oppose him may say that. But they admit there are plenty of others who say he is outstanding.

Mr. BIDEN. Agreed.

Mr. HATCH. Please do not misconstrue what the Senator from Utah has said.

Mr. BIDEN. Let me ask the Senator from Utah—I would be happy to yield to him on my time to answer the question—what was the point of his raising the issue about 49 States? I do not yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. The point I am raising is this: When a President wins that overwhelmingly, he has the right to nominate and we have the right to advise and consent.

Mr. BIDEN. Correct.

Mr. HATCH. This President has nominated a person of integrity, of ability, of experience—although admittedly his experience was with a small law firm. I do not think a man even who serves on the Supreme Court—and there have been some distinguished ones who have—has to work with constitutional principles all his lifetime. I think it would be wonderful if he did; that would be a plus. But I do not think it is crucial.

There have been some noted members of the Supreme Court who have not worked very much with constitutional law before they went on the Court and distinguished themselves.

Mr. BIDEN. I ask the Senator to name me one.

Mr. HATCH. I will get a list of them.

But let me say this to you: I do not think that is crucial. I think it is crucial that he is honest, that he has judicial scholarship, and an ability to write, although he may not be a Friendly or a Cardoza or a Brandeis or even a Brennan or a Rehnquist.

The distinguished Senator from Delaware and several others say that he cannot write, but I think we can make a good case that he can write as well as the distinguished Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Do you believe that?

Mr. HATCH. Sure.

Mr. BIDEN. You believe he can write as well as I can?

Mr. HATCH. Probably as well, if not better.

Mr. BIDEN. That is an interesting phenomenon.

Mr. HATCH. Let me state that I have a copy of a letter, a Dear Colleague letter, from my distinguished colleagues on this particular issue. I have heard a lot of criticism of Mr. Manion for grammatical errors, for misspellings, for a whole raft of other things.

I would submit the May 5, 1986 letter is filled with syntax errors, grammatical errors, places where commas and periods should be but are not, and misspellings. This is signed by a number of Senators on the Judiciary Committee, who are passing upon whether or not someone should sit in any judgeship in the Federal Court.

I will just put this letter in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, May 5, 1986.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: We are writing to state our reasons for opposing the nomination of Daniel Manion to the United States Court of Appeals for the 7th Circuit and to ask that you join us in voting against his confirmation at the upcoming business meeting of the Judiciary Committee.

We believe that Mr. Manion's prior actions demonstrate that he does not sufficiently appreciate the supremacy of the Constitution and the Supreme Court's interpretations there of as the supreme law of the land and that he lacks the requisite qualifications for appointment to a court second in importance only to the Supreme Court.

As a state legislator, Mr. Manion cosponsored a bill he conceded he knew was unconstitutional. The bill authorized the posting of the Ten Commandments in public school classrooms and was cosponsored by Manion and others in the Indiana State Senate a short time after the U.S. Supreme Court, in the case of Stone v. Graham, 449 U.S. 39

(1980), had invalidated a virtually identical Kentucky statute and after the legislators had become aware of the decision.

Mr. Manion's justifications of his actions as "legislative preprogative" and "legislative protest" are incompatible with the Constitution itself and evidence an unacceptable insensitivity to American constitutional history. Together with substantive and political considerations, every legislator, either at the state or federal level, has the obligation to weigh the constitutionality of proposed legislation. The reason for this is obvious. The Constitution is a self-executing document and its viability as the "supreme law of the land" depends on the fidelity and faithfulness of those who are entrusted with governmental power. As our judicial system has envolved, the Supreme Court's interpretations of the Constitution are to be given weight equal to the original document itself.

To insure that such persons remain faithful to their trust, Article VI of the Constitution specifies that " . . . members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation, to support this Constitution. . . ." Based on those fundamental principles, we can only conclude that Mr. Manion, as a state legislator, had no "legislative prerogative" to cosponsor a bill which he conceded was unconstitutional. As the Supreme Court stated in Cooper v. Aaron: "No state legislator or executive or judicial officer can war against the Constitution without violating his undertaking to support it." 358 U.S. 1, 18 (1958) (emphasis added).

Nor is cosponsoring and voting for a bill shortly after a virtually identical statute had been invalidated by the Supreme Court a permissible form of "legislative protest." Justice Frankfurter wrote eloquently of the responsibility of government officials: "Compliance with decisions of this Court, as the constitutional organ of the supreme Law of the Land, has often, throughout our history, depended on active support by state and local authorities. It presupposes such support. To withhold it, and indeed, to use political power to try to paralyze the supreme Law, precludes the maintenance of our federal system. . . . ." Cooper v. Aaron 385 U.S. at 26 (concurring opinion).

Indeed, the opinion of the entire Court in Cooper v. Aaron noted: "If the legislators of the several states may, at will, anual the judgments of the courts of the United States, and destroy the rights acquired under those judgments, the constitution itself becomes a solemn mockery." 385 U.S. at 18 (citations omitted).

Mr. Manion now says in retrospect that his "legislative protest" of the decision of the Supreme Court in Stone v. Graham might better have been filed as a resolution than as a bill. Nevertheless, he still holds the view that the bill, if passed, would have been the law until it was ruled unconstitutional by the courts, thereby implying that there was some power in the State of Indiana which, when asserted, could nullify federal constitutional law.

At the hearing on his nomination, Manion expressed reluctance to accept Supreme Court decisions as the "supreme law of the land," saying that he preferred to view them as stare decisis which must be followed by lower federal courts. Such an interpretation of Supreme Court decisions is at best troubling. The principle that Supreme Court decisions establish the supreme law of the land, which is binding on all lower federal courts as well as state legislators, is nearly as old as the Constitution itself. Article VI of the Constitution renders the Constitution the supreme law of the land, and as early as 1803, Chief Justice Marshall speaking for a unanimous Court in Marbury v. Madison, noted that "it is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is." That decision declared that the Constitution and the interpretations of it by the Supreme Court are the fundamental and paramount law of the nation.

In sum, during his tenure as a state legislator, Mr. Manion substituted his own personal notion of what the law should be for the established rule as enunciated by the Supreme Court. In so doing, Manicn cavalierly disregarded his oath of office to uphold the Constitution. We believe that such disregard for the supremacy of the Constitution and the decisions of the Supreme Court disqualifies him to serve as a federal appeals court judge.

There is also a serious question as to whether Mr. Manion is qualified to serve in the position for which he has been nominated. He is one of a series of nominees for the federal appeals courts who have received the lowest possible approval rating of the American Bar Association. During the past one and a half years, 50 percent of such nominees have been rated merely "qualified" and 71 percent of those nominees, including Mr. Manion, were judged "unqualified" by a minority of the ABA Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary.

Mr. Manion's legal practice consists primarily of small personal and commercial claims in state court. His federal practice has been limited to a handful of diversity jurisdiction cases involving issues of state law. Mr. Manion has little, if any, legal experience in federal constitutional or public issues. He in fact has never argued a case before the 7th Circuit nor been lead counsel in a trial in federal district court.

Mr. Manion's lack of legal experience with substantive federal issues was the basis for a finding by the Chicago Council of Lawyers that he was "unqualified" to serve on the federal appeals court. The Chicago Council of Lawyers is comprised of approximately 1,000 lawyers, many of whom are active litigators from the most prominent law firms in the city of Chicago. The Chicago Council's negative rating cannot be dismissed as simply reflecting its disagreement with Mr. Manion's ideology, as the Chicago Council approved other very conservative nominees including Richard Posner for the 7th Circuit and Harry Leinenweber for the district court.

Each of us believes that the President is entitled to nominate individuals who reflect his basic philosophy of government and the courts. However, Mr. Manion's undistinguished legal career combined with his prior lack of understanding of his oath of office to uphold the Constitution and the decisions of the Supreme Court cause us to view this nomination differently. We intend to vote against his confirmation and hope that, after examining this nominee closely, you will make a similar judgment.

Sincerely,

TED KENNEDY.
PATRICK J. LEAHY.
JOE BIDEN.
HOWARD M. METZENBAUM.
PAUL SIMON.

Mr. HATCH. But it contains several grammatical errors and other errors. I think it would cause someone to say, "How in the world can those sitting in judgment of Mr. Manion criticize him?"

He is a small-town, country lawyer who really did not do much appellate practice perhaps because he won most of his cases. In my particular case, I tried a lot of cases, but I did not have too much appellate cases because I did not lose too many. I am not bragging. I am suggesting that is fact. I do not know about Mr. Manion.

All I am saying is there is plenty of room for criticism of anybody if you want to scour long enough and hard enough.

Mr. BIDEN. I think the Senator from Delaware has the floor. Would you be willing to answer the question of why you raised the issue of winning 49 States?

Mr. HATCH. The reason I raised that issue was because a President that wins that overwhelmingly, having a right to nominate, having a right to put people into the Federal judiciary, should be given, I think, great weight in those nominations as long as those candidates meet certain minimum requisites to serve on the bench. And those candidates should not be shot down merely for ideological reasons, as this candidate is being attacked and has been attacked in the committee and on the floor. I believe that is really all that we have.

Mr. BIDEN. I appreciate the Senator's clarification. I suspect, then, he does not make any distinction between a President having won 49 States and a President having won a bare majority. I mean, does it make a difference in terms of who they can nominate? There are still basic minimum requirements.

Mr. HATCH. There are basic minimum requirements, but I think that the ideological requirements should not be one of them.

Do you agree with that or do you not?

Mr. BIDEN. Does the Senator suggest—I am still confused. What is the relevance of having won 49 States as opposed to winning 30 States?

Mr. HATCH. The relevancy is that the President's position ideologically has been accepted and adopted by 49 States. And the mere fact that this man may be a conservative should not be reason enough to shoot him down.

Mr. BIDEN. I see.

Mr. HATCH. Now, if the Senator can make a better case, that is another matter. I do not believe, on the record, the Senator can make a better case.

Let me go back to what the Senator said. I was thinking about some of the people who may not have had much experience in constitutional law before they came to the Supreme Court but who made eminently respectable reputations on the Court. I would cite with particularity Mr. Justice Black, who did not have a heck of a lot of constitutional experience; neither did Mr. Chief Justice Warren.

And I could say that I am sure there are others, and I will try to come up with others, as well. But I do not think anybody is going to make a very good case that either of those spent a lot of time in constitutional law before they came to the Supreme Court.

I think almost everyone would say, regardless of whether you particularly agreed with their particular points of view, everyone would say they were great members of the Supreme Court of the United States of America. And I suspect there are many others.

Mr. BIDEN. Do you think Warren was a great Supreme Court Justice?

Mr. HATCH. I believe Earl Warren was a great Supreme Court Justice. I differ with him, naturally. I differ with Justice Rehnquist in some matters, naturally.

But the point is, he was a great Supreme Court Justice. You bet your life he was. And he earned the respect of many, many people in this society.

Mr. BIDEN. I am delighted that the Senator from Utah has clarified that there is a little distinction between winning 49 States and 30 States.

Mr. HATCH. I do not think there is much difference, except it was an overwhelming win, indicating the people in this country who were listening to his arguments that he was going to put in interpreters of the laws, who do not make laws, because they are unelected, interpreters or judicial activists, in contradistinction to those bodies of the executive and legislative branches of Government which were created under the Constitution to make those laws.

And he made that point. And it was one of the most important points he made during the 1984 elections and I believe great weight should be given to his position in that regard. I think that is precisely what he has been trying to do and that is why Mr. Manion has been offered.

If the truth is known, that is one reason my colleagues, sincere though they may be, would not like to see him on the bench, because they differ with him ideologically.

Mr. BIDEN. I think that is an absurd statement, but since I have the floor, let me finish and let me respond to——

Mr. SIMON. Will my colleague yield 1 minute for a minor point?

Mr. BIDEN. Sure, I yield.

Mr. SIMON. Our friend from Utah points out that you and I signed a letter that has some spelling errors in it. There is a slight difference between a casual letter circulated to our colleagues and the request, that I made through my staff, to Mr. Manion to send the five best briefs.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMON. My colleague has the floor.

Let me just finish.

If you ask us to send the five best documents we have written, we are not going to send documents with sentences that do not make sense and that are as seriously flawed as these briefs.

□ 2000

And I think that is the point that my colleague from Delaware has made. I think it is a very valid point.

Mr. HATCH. Will my friend from Delaware yield just for 1 minute?

Mr. BIDEN. If it really will only take 1 minute.

Mr. HATCH. It might take a little bit more.

Mr. BIDEN. I will not yield the floor. I am inclined to wait. I am going to be here.

(Mr. MCCLURE assumed the chair.)

Mr. HATCH. Let me take 1 minute then.

The fact of the matter is that Mr. Manion, on the briefs that the distinguished Senator has criticized, lost only one of the cases addressed by those briefs. As a matter of fact, the briefs addressed the kind of law which 95 percent of the lawyers in the United States deal with regularly, and even though some of those cases have been lost, Americans consider the issues raised by those cases to be important enough to go on and on. But the point I am making is this. It is easy to stand back and criticize somebody who does not have reams of associate lawyers to do the work for them, and all kinds of secretaries and stenographers to do it. He may even have had to type some of it himself. In fact, he won most of the cases that he filed the briefs for.

I have to admit those are not Manion's best briefs as asserted by the distinguished Senator from Illinois. I think the distinguished Senator knew that when he got them because through the Justice Department Manion is told by Senator SIMON's staff, Ms. Westley, to send five briefs as soon as possible. That was on Thursday, April 17. The briefs were needed urgently because of Manion's scheduled April 30 hearing. He was tied up in Federal court all day Friday, April 18, and on Saturday, the 19th. So he went to the office and got five briefs from current cases and sent them to the Senator. So they were not the five most important briefs.

One last point. The letter I put in the RECORD, I think a "Dear Colleague" letter, suggests that we Senators have little room to criticize. I think we can find grammatical errors in almost everybody's "Dear Colleague" letters. That is not the point I am making nor am I making a point to embarrass my colleagues. I am saying it is easy to be picky about anything when one is in a pressure-packed confirmation proceeding.

I think that is one of the most picky and picayune things I have seen in all the confirmation proceedings that I have gone through in the 10 years since I have been here. The real question is, Is he a man of integrity? Does he have ability? Does he have conscientiousness? Would he be fair? Do the lawyers who worked with him and against him respect and like him? The answer to all of those is yes. Does he have the intellect and the capability? The answer is yes.

If we look at the rest of the arguments, they are made.

I thank my colleague.

Mr. BIDEN. Let me speak. I thank my colleague for this 1 minute. Let me speak to some of the whole cloth that is being suggested here. It is interesting again in the time that I have been here—it has only been 14 years—that you have 40 law school deans, and let me read the letter addressed to the leadership of the U.S. Senate.

Again this is from 40 law school deans, not from the Senator from Delaware.

JUNE 24, 1986.

Hon. ROBERT DOLE,
Majority Leader,
Hon. ROBERT BYRD,
Minority Leader,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS DOLE AND BYRD: The Senate will soon consider the nomination of Daniel A. Manion to serve as a judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. As law school deans, as lawyers, and as citizens, we urge that the Senate decline to consent to this nomination on the grounds that Mr. Manion is not qualified to serve on that court.

The Senate has few graver responsibilities than its constitutional obligation to advise and consent with respect to judicial nominees. Federal judges are members of an independent branch of government with great power over our society. Once appointed, these judges are responsible neither to the electorate, nor to either of the other two branches of government. The confirmation of a judicial nominee therefore has consequences far beyond those attendant to most other legislative acts. This is particularly true for a nominee to the Court of Appeals, for he or she may definitively influence the course of the law for millions of our people for many years to come.

A nominee's qualifications in scholarship, legal acumen, professional achievement, wisdom, fidelity to the law and commitment to our Constitution must therefore be correspondingly high.

Unfortunately, Mr. Manion does not meet these criteria. He has virtually no experience with major federal or other litigation, and has not published any scholarly or other writings. Although such litigation experience and scholarly writings may not be essential prerequisites, Mr. Manion has shown no other distinction as a lawyer. A majority of the American Bar Association screening panel found him barely qualified, and a minority found him not qualified. The Chicago Council of Lawyers, after close scrutiny of his record, concluded that his professional qualifications were inadequate, noting that:

"Mr. Manion lacks experience in dealing with questions of federal law and federal constitutional issues. He also lacks experience with the kinds of complex federal litigation which he would have to review as a judge of the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals. Moreover, the quality and extent of Mr. Manion's legal experience even in state court does not demonstrate the high level of legal expertise which the Council feels should be possessed by judges of the Seventh Circuit. Finally, Mr. Manion has not demonstrated any scholarly interest in state and federal law or constitutional issues."

We are also disturbed by the nominee's apparent lack of understanding of the role of the judiciary in protecting individual rights. This was manifested in his action as an Indiana state legislator in co-sponsoring a bill that authorized posting the Ten Commandments in school rooms shortly after the Supreme Court had invalidated a similar Kentucky statute in Stone v. Graham, 449 U.S. 39 (1980). Mr. Manion, in a recent hearing, conceded that the bills were virtually identical and explained his action as a kind of "legislative protest" against the Supreme Court. In the same hearing, he also seemed reluctant to accept Supreme Court decisions such as Brown v. Board of Education as "the law of the land," saying he preferred to view them as stare decisis which must be followed by lower federal courts.

In light of the above, we urge the Senate to deny consent to the nomination of Daniel A. Manion to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. We are writing in our individual, rather than in our institutional, capacities, and have referred to our schools for identification purposes only.

Yours very truly,

I suggest, Mr. President, that unless you are saying that those 40 law school deans—I think it is probably unprecedented in a confirmation process decided not on ideology, but merely upon qualification that this young man who is only 1 year older than I am is not qualified to be a circuit judge. I would also point out that when my colleague suggests that Hugo Black and Earl Warren did not have any significant background in constitutional issues, the issue is the nominee's exposure to complex issues and demonstrated excellence. If he had that, he would not have to have the exposure to these cases. Hugo Black I might add was a U.S. Senator from Alabama. I suspect some day the Senator from Delaware is going to have an opportunity to vote on the nomination of the distinguished Senator from Utah's nomination to the Supreme Court.

□ 2010

I would suggest that his having achieved the office of U.S. Senator and comported himself in that office with some degree of demonstrated knowledge of complex issues and excellence, would hold him in relatively good stead.

I would suggest that Earl Warren, who was a former Attorney General and Governor of California, had a little bit of experience in dealing with complex issues and demonstrated abilities.

I would also like to suggest to my colleagues on the floor that this case involves a nice appeal out there to small town lawyers like me, and I am from a small town, a town smaller than the town which the nominee practices in. This does not involve small town lawyers not being qualified to serve on the bench, not being qualified because they are from small towns.

It is about whether they possess the academic and legal excellence.

Let me suggest that I read several editorials. The first is from the Roanoke, VA, Times World News, the morning edition on judicial nominees. I will not take the time to go through them all. I ask unanimous consent later that they be printed in the RECORD.

Next I will refer to an editorial from the Journal-Gazette of Fort Wayne, IN. I will ask that the entire editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Journal-Gazette (Fort Wayne, IN), June 3, 1986]

THE MANION TRANSCRIPT DESERVES ANOTHER READING

Sens. Richard Lugar and Dan Quayle have written a letter to their Senate colleagues to support the nomination of Daniel Manion of South Bend, to the U.S. 7th Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago. We appreciate the senators' eagerness to defend a fellow conservative and Hoosier whose appointment has come under attack. But the letter is a puzzling document. It makes a personal attack on Manion's critics, and claims as true what was contradicted in his testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee in April.

"Part of the political case against Dan Manion can be reduced to this: guilt by association," the Lugar-Quayle letter says. The senators say that Manion is being condemned because of his father's notorious right-wing activities. Among his other conservative activities, Clarence Manion helped found the John Birch Society.

But it's Daniel Manion who aligned himself with his father's extreme views. In one 1971 broadcast of the Manion Forum, Clarence Manion argued that the Bill of Rights should not apply to state law. He contended that making such an application "is responsible for nine-tenths of the troubles which the states are now having with their redistricting . . . and with the various other interference with state laws, the schools, prayer and obscenity and the regulation of school districts . . ."

The next words from Daniel Manion, who was moderating the discussion, were not those of an impartial questioner but of a partisan:

"Well, I think you've pretty well established how this prayer decision was precedented fallaciously. The original case was wrong. . . ."

If you read Daniel Manion's testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, you'll not find him repudiating any of his father's views.

To the contrary, when Daniel Manion was given an opportunity to criticize the views of the John Birch Society, he fell to evasions or pleaded ignorance: ". . . I could not tell you what the policies of the John Birch Society are."

The Lugar-Quayle letter also claims Daniel Manion never endorsed Larry McDonald or his particular views. The late Congressman McDonald was a well-known Bircher. In a 1977 interview with McDonald on the Manion Forum, Daniel Manion extolled McDonald's book as "* * * one of the finest summaries of the history of our country—what has happened in the past, what has happened to us and what we have to do about it."

We urge Lugar, Quayle and their Senate colleagues to read the Manion transcript closely. It simply won't support the charge that Daniel Manion's critics have been unfair.

The real issue comes down to this. Daniel Manion is not qualified to sit on the U.S. 7th Circuit Court of Appeals. There's nothing in his record as an attorney, a state senator, an assistant state attorney general or in the transcript of the Senate Judiciary Committee proceedings to suggest otherwise.

Mr. BIDEN. This editorial states:

Dan Manion is not qualified to sit in the U.S. 7th Circuit Court of Appeals: There is nothing in his record as an attorney, a State senator, an assistant State attorney general, or in the transcript of the Senate Judiciary Committee to suggest otherwise.

This editorial is from Fort Wayne, not Los Angeles, New York, or Chicago. I do not think that Fort Wayne, IN, has a bias against small-town lawyers.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. I will not yield. I pointed out that I did not interrupt when my colleague spoke for a half hour and I was delighted to hear what he had to say. I am sure we will have a chance to exchange views.

Next I will refer to the Minneapolis Star Tribune, "An Unqualified Aspirant to the Federal Bench."

Manion is entitled to his opinions, of course. But he is not entitled to be a Federal judge. Like many other Reagan nominees, he lacks the necessary credentials, intellectual breadth and respect for constitutional principles. That is why the Judiciary Committee took the unusual step Thursday of sending his name to the Senate without endorsement.

Next I refer to the Salt Lake City Tribune:

Although a lawyer for 13 years, Mr. Manion has never argued Federal appeals, has participated only 12 times in Federal trials at the district level, and has authored no known scholarship of a legal nature. This for a man who would be placed at the second highest level of the Nation's judiciary.

Next I refer to the New York Times, I am sure a newspaper my colleague thinks very highly of:

IN BRIEF, MR. MANION IS UNFIT

Mr. Manion's briefs are painful but essential reading for any Senator tempted to confirm his nomination. The committee of the American Bar Association that—barely—approved him should read the briefs and blush. An informed Senate would reject this nomination.

Next in the Chicago Sun Times:

A Lack of Excellence.

Next the Orlando Sentinel:

STRICT JUDGING FOR THE BENCH

What about Mr. Manion's shortcomings? For starters, the Chicago Council of Lawyers voted to oppose his nomination. No wonder. Here is someone who in 13 years of legal practice never even argued a Federal appeal of any kind. In the mere dozen Federal court cases which he was involved, none were of a complex nature that the 7th Circuit jurists often decide. Americans and the judicial system deserve better.

Next the St. Louis Post Dispatch:

Unfit For the Federal Bench.

Next is an article by Philip Kurland, who is not known as being a liberal jurist.

I cannot tell you that Mr. Manion does not meet these standards. I can say that, in what the press reveals of his experience, there is no evidence of the high standard of competence we have a right to demand of Federal judges. Only the Judiciary Committee has or can get a full record on which to base judgment.

Again the Louisville Times:

NOT AT ALL JUDICIAL

Manion lacks the qualifications and independence of thought necessary for this important judgeship. The committee should reject him.

Next from the Arizona Daily Star:

Unqualified Nominee.

Next the Plain Dealer:

Manion also suffers from inexperience, rigid ideology, low professional ratings, and a blindness to First Amendment guarantees.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the items to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, June 8, 1986]

IN BRIEF, MR. MANION IS UNFIT

When President Reagan set out to reshape the Federal bench, he made two promises. He would choose non-activists who knew the judiciary's proper limits and were content to interpret law, not make it. And he would pick lawyers of the highest caliber. The President has indeed found candidates who share his judicial philosophy, including several of outstanding ability. But two recent nominations broke the promise of quality and assaulted the intelligence of the Senate.

The Senate Judiciary Committee rightly balked at Jefferson Sessions, a nominee for an Alabama judgeship who was distinguished only by his insensitive remarks about minorities. But the committee has sent to the full Senate, without a recommendation, the equally flawed nomination of Daniel Manion for the Court of Appeals based in Chicago.

Mr. Manion, a lawyer in South Bend, has never appeared before the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, which reviews cases from Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin. He has written no scholarly articles to help senators measure his intellect. His only relevant work record, legal briefs to state courts, would embarrass a first-year law student.

It's demeaning to have to grade a judicial nominee for spelling and syntax. But Mr. Manion's indict him as sloppy and lazy. His briefs are riddled with words like "definately" and "perponderance," "verbatum" and "comperable." Commas dangle, modifiers misfire and nouns disagree with their verbs. Some of his sentences make no sense at all. And the reader who slogs on finds no redeeming spark of originality or insight.

That Mr. Manion never mastered elementary verbal skills only emphasizes that his appeal is political: he espouses the tenets of the far right and disagrees with a number of Supreme Court positions. The President has a right to reshape the judiciary, but the Senate has a duty to insist that appointees measure up professionally. Since the Supreme Court cannot possibly review all circuit court rulings, appeals judges have the last word in most major Federal cases.

Mr. Manion's briefs are painful but essential reading for any senator tempted to confirm his nomination. The committee of the American Bar Association that—barely—approved him should read the briefs and blush. An informed Senate would reject this nomination and thereby tell the President to aim higher.

THE MANION TRANSCRIPT DESERVES ANOTHER READING

Sens. Richard Lugar and Dan Quayle have written a letter to their Senate colleagues to support the nomination of Daniel Manion, of South Bend, to the U.S. 7th Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago. We appreciate the senators' eagerness to defend a fellow conservative and Hoosier whose appointment has come under attack. But the letter is a puzzling document. It makes a personal attack on Manion's critics, and claims as true what was contradicted in his testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee in April.

"Part of the political case against Dan Manion can be reduced to this: guilt by association," the Lugar-Quayle letter says: The senators say that Manion is being condemned because of his father's notorious right-wing activities. Among his other conservative activities, Clarence Manion helped found the John Birch Society.

But it's Daniel Manion who aligned himself with his father's extreme views. In one 1971 broadcast of the Manion Forum, Clarence Manion argued that the Bill of Rights should not apply to state law. He contended that making such an application "is responsible for nine-tenths of the troubles which the states are now having with their redistricting . . . and with the various other interference with state laws, the schools, prayer and obscenity and the regulation of school districts . . ."

The next words from Daniel Manion, who was moderating the discussion, were not those of an impartial questioner but of a partisan:

"Well, I think you've pretty well established how this prayer decision was precedented fallaciously. The original case was wrong . . . ."

If you read Daniel Manion's testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, you'll not find him repudiating any of his father's views.

To the contrary, when Daniel Manion was given an opportunity to criticize the views of the John Birch Society, he fell to evasions or pleaded ignorance: ". . . I could not tell you what the policies of the John Birch Society are."

The Lugar-Quayle letter also claims Daniel Manion never endorsed Larry McDonald or his particular views. The late Congressman McDonald was a well-known Bircher. In a 1977 interview with McDonald on the Manion Forum, Daniel Manion extolled McDonald's book as ". . . one of the finest summaries of the history of our country—what has happened in the past, what has happened to us and what we have to do about it."

We urge Lugar, Quayle and their Senate colleagues to read the Manion transcript closely. It simply won't support the charge that Daniel Manion's critics have been unfair.

The real issue comes down to this. Daniel Manion is not qualified to sit on the U.S. 7th Circuit Court of Appeals. There's nothing in his record as an attorney, a state senator, an assistant state attorney general or in the transcript of the Senate Judiciary Committee proceedings to suggest otherwise.

A "SCOTCH VERDICT" ON A JUDGESHIP

(By Philip B. Kurland)

I write to protest the Senate Judiciary Committee's failure to pass on the merits of the candidacy of Mr. Daniel Manion for appointment to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. It seems to me that if a majority of the committee does not have a strong conviction that the man is worthy of the office, the duty of the committee to the public requires a negative recommendation. The post under consideration is not one of minor importance or short duration. The credibility of the federal judiciary is essential to the legitimacy of its governance. It oughtn't be compromised by a "Scotch verdict."

Allow me to make clear my position on judicial appointments. I believe that a judicial nominee's political preferences are no more relevant to a capacity to perform the judicial function than are the nominee's sex, race, national or state origin, or religion. No one should be appointed or refused appointment for such considerations. And surely every President has exercised the prerogative of choosing nominees for the bench because they are close to rather than distant from his philosophy.

There are, however, limits to this freedom of choice which ought to be observed. These appointments are not mere patronage appointments, not only rewards for party service. Nor are they, like executive department appointments, the choice of persons within a chain of command, theoretically at least to be under the direction of the President.

Federal judges are independent of presidential will and their choice invokes the judgment—the advice and consent—of the Senate as much as the White House. For it must be remembered that, once appointed, the judges are not responsible for their good behavior to the President or even the citizenry but to the House of Representatives, empowered to impeach them for wrongdoing, and to the Senate, responsible for their trials on impeachment.

Surely only the President can nominate a federal judge; but only the Senate can confirm such a nomination. In the course of exercising their respective duties, the senators have fiduciary obligations to their oaths of office and their constituencies which are far greater than any obligation to their political parties.

A president cannot, in good faith, nominate, and a Senate cannot, in good faith, confirm, a judicial nominee who lacks the essential qualifications for office.

A federal judge should be qualified by reason of his training in the law, his experience at the bar, his commitment to community service, his breadth of vision and compassion for the human condition, even a little learning. Perhaps most important is a judicial temperament, which means a recognition that a judge is not a partisan, that his disinterestedness is the essence of his function.

It is here that a zealot or an idologue fails the test of judicial office. And it is up to the Senate Judiciary Committee to assure itself that a judicial candidate measures up on all scores. The question ought not to be whether a judicial nominee's ideology comports with a president's or a senator's. It is whether such mode of thought reveals a rigidity that could make a mockery of the rule of law by placing it in the hands of one who would use it for personal ends rather than those of the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and established judicial precedents.

I cannot tell you that Mr. Manion does not meet these standards. I can say that, in what the press reveals of his experience, there is no evidence of the high standard of competence we have a right to demand of our federal judges. Only the Judiciary Committee has or can get the full record on which to base a judgment. The burden of persuasion ought to be borne by the nomination, given the importance of the post and the life tenure that attaches to it.

[From The Chicago, (IL) Sun-Times, May 17, 1986]

A LACK OF EXCELLENCE

For the first time, one of President Reagan's nominees to the federal bench has not been endorsed by the Senate Judiciary Committee

And with good reason.

Daniel Manion, a conservative Indiana lawyer and a former state legislator, was nominated to serve as a federal appeals court judge in Chicago. But the committee, by a 9-to-9 vote, sent the nomination to the full Senate without endorsement.

The full Senate, when it votes later this month, also should not approve.

Some liberals base their opposition partially on Manion's politics. In the 1960s he co-hosted the television and radio program, the Manion Forum, with his father, Clarence, a founder of the John Birch Society. During confirmation hearings, Daniel Manion said he couldn't recall making some of the statements attributed to him during that period.

Some of Manion's backers argue that it is unfair to oppose him on the basis of his ideology. But, the Reagan administration in some regions has used ideology as much as many previous administrations as a basis for appointment to the bench. It is inconsistent to favor a nomination on the basis of ideology but to deny critics the the right to use that same standard.

Opposition to Manion, however, runs deeper than his ideological convictions. There is the question of his commitment to the integrity of the judicial system, raised by his action while he is an Indiana state senator. It came shortly after a Supreme Court ruling invalidating a Kentucky statue requiring all public schools to post a copy of the Ten Commandments in every classroom. A short time later he introduced a bill that would have allowed the posting of the Ten Commandments in Indiana public school classrooms. Did he figure that the Indiana Legislature could overrule the U.S. Supreme Court? Such an action by an officer of the court was cynical at best.

Moreover, there is the question of his lack of federal judicial experience. The Chicago Council of Lawyers found him unqualified based on their findings that he never served as a leading counsel in a federal trial or has handled a case involving constitutional issues. An American Bar Association screening committee found Manion "qualified"—the lowest of three positive ratings. A minority of the same ABA panel found him unqualified. Samples of his "best" briefs, submitted to the committee, were riddled with typographical and syntactic errors.

His supporters have argued that Manion is a fine fellow, with a high reputation for integrity and fairness. We don't contest those qualities. But the qualifications also demand a knowledge of the law, experience in handling federal cases and the thorough respect from both liberals and conservatives for the moninee's judicial qualifications. In short, the position requires excellence. Too many questions have been raised about qualifications for Manion to be considered among the best.

[From the St. Petersburg Times, May 14, 1986]

CONTEMPT OF THE COURTS

President Reagan's determination to pack the federal courts with right-wing extremists is giving honest conservatism a bad name.

He found the bottom of the barrel recently when he picked Daniel A. Manion, a lawyer and former state legislator from South Bend, Ind., for the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals at Chicago.

Manion proposed legislation to post the Ten Commandments in Indiana schoolrooms two months after the Supreme Court said such practices were unconstitutional. He has publicly challenged the supremacy of the Supreme Court and endorsed legislation that would strip it of power to rule in such areas as obscenity and church-state relations. He once declared that prayer in school and "the recognition of God in all public places" was the "basis" of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence. The son of a founder of the John Birch Society, Manion in 1979 praised its members for being "on the front line of the fight for constitutional freedom."

Such a record reveals Manion to be no conservative at all. He is a radical who appreciates nothing about the Constitution that he as a judge would be sworn to protect and defend.

But Manion's defenders say the Senate has no business poking into his political views. The President, they say, won the election and is entitled by tradition to appoint candidates who reflect his views.

A nominee's opinions are relevant, however, when they raise such grave doubts concerning his ability to fulfill his oath. And the Senate has often refused to confirm candidates it considered unqualified. In Manion's case, the Senate contemplates a candidate who is clearly not what an appellate judge ought to be. Manion has spent his 13 years in the bar handling primarily personal injury and small claims cases. He has never been a lead attorney in a federal court case. He has never even argued a case in the 7th Circuit or any other federal appellate court. An American Bar Association screening panel rated him only "qualified," its lowest approval rating, with a minority voting to deny him even that. The Chicago County Council of Lawyers has called him unqualified.

Manion's credentials are so thin that the Senate Judiciary Committee, which had never before rejected a Reagan judicial nominee, refused on a 9-9 tie to recommend him. But it did Mr. Reagan the favor of sending the nomination to the floor without a recommendation, which will force all the senators to take a stand.

A President who would appoint someone so unqualified shows no respect for constitutional rights or for the prestige and dignity of the courts. The Senator's clear constitutional duty is to vote Manion down.

[From the Orlando Sentinel, May 13, 1986]

STRICT JUDGING FOR THE BENCH

The Senate Judiciary Committee could send a strong message to the White House on its picks for federal judgeships this week by voting against the nomination of Jefferson Beauregard Sessions III to a federal judgeship.

The message would read: Without question, the president has every right to appoint judges with compatible political and ideological views. But there will be no compromising on candidates lacking in qualifications and credibility.

A similar message was clear last week when the committee refused to report the nomination of Indiana lawyer Daniel Manion to the full Senate with a favorable recommendation. It's just too bad the panel did not flatly reject Mr. Manion, who became the first of 233 Reagan administration judicial appointees to be denied the committee's recommendations.

Lately, there just haven't been enough federal judicial nominations of the caliber of, say, Orlando attorney Patricia Fawsett. Mrs. Fawsett shares the president's conservative views. She has impeccable credentials, unlike Mr. Sessions and Mr. Manion. The committee last week approved Mrs. Fawsett's nomination after only 15 minutes of questioning.

Contrast her single appearance before the committee with Mr. Sessions' four appearances and Mr. Manion's three.

For a glimpse of just how bad Mr. Reagan's judicial appointments have been lately, consider this: Since January 1985 half of all the president's appellate court appointees, including Mr. Manion, got the American Bar Association's lowest approval rating—a mediocre "qualified." Mr. Sessions, who was nominated to a federal district court in Alabama, received the same ABA barely getting by rating.

Even more distrubing is Mr. Sessions' lack of credibility.

For instance, he has gone back and forth on whether he once remarked that the Ku Klux Klan's only problem was that some of its members smoked marijuana. He also has confirmed, and then denied, that he described the NAACP and the National Council of Churches as "un-American."

Mr. Sessions has the right to those views, but do citizens really want someone on the bench whose fairness becomes questionable each time that a black or liberal appears before him?

What about Mr. Manion's shortcomings? For starters, the Chicago Council of Lawyers voted to oppose his nomination. And no wonder. Here's someone who in 13 years of legal practice has never even argued a federal appeal of any kind. And in the mere dozen federal district court cases in which he has been involved, none were of the complex nature that 7th Circuit jurists often decide.

Americans and the judicial system deserve better.

[From the Salt Lake City Tribune, May 11, 1986

FOR BETTER JUDGES

Evidently, President Reagan went too far with his appointment of mediocre judges for the federal judiciary. Unfortunately, the Senate committee responsible for reviewing these nominations didn't go far enough.

Although the Senate Judiciary Committee refused an endorsement vote for Daniel A. Manion's ascendancy to the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, it still sent the nomination on to the Senate. A mild rebuke lurks in the procedure when a sharper one was due.

Observers are beginning to wonder if the Reagan administration is deliberately weakening the federal judiciary. Since January, 1985, half the White House appellate judge nominees have been given no more than "qualified" ratings by the American Bar Association. Only "not qualified" is lower.

Mr. Manion, an Indiana lawyer, managed a "qualified," but the Chicago Council of Lawyers—as a circuit court of appeals judge he would preside in Chicago—flatly recommended against confirming him because he lacked necessary competence.

The tussle over Mr. Manion is complicated by arguments about his "ideology." He is the son of the late Clarence Manion; a former Notre Dame law school dean whose radio program. "The Manion Forum," was popular among deep-dyed conservatives. Beyond that, as a Hoosier legislator, the younger Manion apparently supported bills which would, in effect, defy U.S. Supreme Court decisions on such matters as schoolroom prayers and religious displays on public property.

More to the point, however: Although a lawyer for 13 years, Mr. Manion has never argued a federal appeal, has participated only 12 times in federal trials at the district level and has authored no known scholarship of a legal nature. This for a man who would be placed at the secod highest level of the nation's judiciary.

Mr. Manion appointment seems to be more than an isolated instance. Of the nominations since a year ago January for which the ABA could muster but "qualified" recommendations, two-thirds prompted "unqualified" in minority reports. It can't be all that difficult to find better prospects.

Surely in the Illinois-Indiana area, sufficient accomplished legal minds reside from among whom a Republican administration could choose judgeship nominations capable of easy, enthusiastic approval from a GOP-controlled committee. In the 9-9 Senate Judiciary Committee deadlock on Mr. Manion, two Republican members voted against the selection.

Since the majority GOP membership does dominate the committee, the Manion nomination was voted out, with no recommendation, for full Senate action. That action should now end an ominous trend by rejecting the appointment, sending the White House a verdict it can't misunderstand or ignore.

[From the St. Louis Post Dispatch, May 11, 1986]

UNFIT FOR THE FEDERAL BENCH

The Senate Judiciary Committee has finally begun to alter what Common Cause earlier this year called the panel's "assembly-line approval" of President Reagan's judicial nominees. The committee has refused to approve Daniel Manion for the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and has sent him name to the full Senate without recommendation. On the nomination of Jefferson Sessions to a U.S. District Court in Alabama, the committee has held four hearings and has not scheduled a vote.

Both of these nominees should be ejected. Mr. Manion has neither the learning nor the experience to make him suitable for an appeals court. His briefs, said Sen. Joseph Biden, couldn't pass a grammar test. He has never argued a federal appeal.

But more important, he has shown that he lacks an understanding of the Constitution and the rule of the judiciary. Months after the Supreme Court struck down a Kentucky law permitting the posting of the Ten Commandments in public schools, Mr. Manion co-sponsored a nearly identical bill in the Indiana Legislature; he also sponsored a bill calling for classes in creation science in public schools. Mr. Manion does not know the meaning of the constitutional separation of church and state.

Neither Mr. Manion nor Mr. Sessions has shown an appreciation of civil rights. Mr. Manion praised a book attacking the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision. Mr. Sessions, as U.S. attorney in Alabama, prosecuted three civil rights workers on flimsy charges; they were acquitted by a jury. He has made racist remarks, which he later tried to explain did not mean what they said. With these nominees, the issue is not their right-wing views but that they are unqualified to be judges.

[From the Boston Globe, May 10, 1986]

UPHOLDING JUDICIAL STANDARDS

President Reagan's penchant for nominating lackluster ideologues for seats on the federal judiciary shows a disrespect for the courts and the law. The Democrats in the Senate must be supported in their efforts to make integrity and intelligence the prime standards for serving on the nation's highest courts.

The latest example of Reagan's effrontery is his nomination of Daniel Manion, a South Bend, Ind., lawyer, for a seat on the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

The testimony to Manion's unfitness is abundant. As a member of the Indiana General Assembly, Manion cosponsored a bill to authorize the posting of the Ten Commandments in public school classrooms. He wrote a letter in 1979 in which he praised the John Birch Society for being "on the front line of the fight for constitutional freedom."

Although there are many other objectionable aspects to Manion's philosophy, Senate Democrats are wise not to attack Manion solely because of his political beliefs. Those beliefs would not necessarily disqualify him from being a member of the judiciary.

The main trouble with Manion is that he is inexperienced, recalcitrant and not qualified to sit on a federal appeals court. Manion received the lowest possible approval from the American Bar Association, which evaluates all judicial nominees, and was found unqualified by the Chicago Council of Lawyers.

Reagan's desire to place conservative judges on the federal bench is understandable, given the president's own views. However, there must be experienced conservatives of unquestionable intellect and integrity who are willing to serve.

The Manion nomination is one of several puzzling nominations from a president who portrays himself as a great upholder of law. Another was the nomination of Jefferson B. Sessions, the U.S. attorney in Alabama, who has a facility for making crude racial remarks, for a U.S. District Court judgeship.

Manion's nomination was the first to be sent to the floor of the Senate without endorsement from the Judiciary Committee. Senate Democrats are to be applauded and encouraged to keep sending Reagan the message that they will not countenance either mediocrity or extremism.

[From the Minneapolis Star & Tribune, May 10, 1986]

AN UNQUALIFIED ASPIRANT TO THE FEDERAL BENCH

By refusing to approve Daniel Manion's nomination to the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals, the Senate Judiciary Committee Thursday sent a message to President Reagan: Choose conservative judges if you will—but avoid the radical and the unqualified. The president should heed the plea.

Reagan says he seeks to appoint judges who are highly experienced legal thinkers, who favor "judicial restraint" and who won't use their power for "political action or social experimentation." That job description should have ruled out Manion from the start. An Indiana personal-injury lawyer with limited courtroom experience, Manion won the lowest possible passing grade from the American Bar Association's screening panel. As a television commentator in the early 1970s, Manion favored stripping the Supreme Court of much of its power to enforce constitutional rights. As an Indiana legislator, he challenged the high court's rulings on separation of church and state by pushing for the teaching of creationism and the display of the Ten Commandments in public schools.

Manion is entitled to his opinions, of course. But he isn't entitled to be a federal judge. Like many other Reagan nominees, he lacks the necessary credentials, intellectual breadth and respect for constitutional principles. That is why the Judiciary Committee took the unusual step Thursday of sending his name to the Senate floor without endorsement. The full Senate should refuse to confirm Manion and drive home the point that it will no longer tolerate unqualified nominees from Reagan.

[From the Atlanta Journal-Atlanta Constitution, May 10, 1986]

SENATE SHOULD TOSS OUT REAGAN FOUL BALL

The Senate Judiciary Committee has been overgenerous to President Reagan and the president's nominee for a judgeship on the Chicago-based 7th U.S. Court of Appeals. The committee refused to endorse the nomination and sent it off the floor action without a recommendation.

The full Senate, which can read between the lines of the 9-9 committee deadlock, should do the president a favor by declining to indulge this embarrassing nomination. Daniel Manion, on his good days, is a legal lightweight, and on his bad has been a demagogic right-wing extremist.

The American Bar Association rated Manion "qualified," its lowest positive ranking, with a minority calling him "unqualified." He has had almost no experience practicing in federal courts and no redeeming claim to legal scholarship. He has been, in the main, a small-time Indiana politician and a marginal far-right hustler.

In a series of Manion Forum radio and TV programs with his late father in the 1970s, Manion, among other nonsense, called for stripping federal courts of the right to review several basic constitutional issues and for penning up anti-Vietnam demonstrators as "advocating communism" and thus without a right "to run free." He has repeatedly praised the propeller-beanie crowd of the John Birch Society, in which his father was a big wheel, and he has repeatedly tried to force religion into public schools, sponsoring as a state senator legislation to require the teaching of creationism and a bill to require the display of the Ten Commandments in Indiana schools, the latter in direct defiance of a U.S. Supreme Court ruling just two months earlier that such posting were unconstitutional.

President Reagan ought to be ashamed of himself for this one. Since he is not, the Senate will just have to be ashamed in his stead.

[From the Philadelphia Enquirer, May 8, 1986]

SENATE SHOULD REJECT MANION

Today the Senate Judiciary Committee is scheduled to vote on President Reagan's nomination of Daniel A. Manion to be a judge on the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago. The nomination should be rejected. Mr. Manion is not qualified to sit as a federal judge, especially on the appellate bench.

The argument is often made that presidents should be granted wide latitude in selecting federal judges. Because presidential elections are the best mechanisms this democracy has for registering broad shifts in public values, there is wisdom in that—up to a point. Yet the Constitution grants the Senate power to affirm or deny judicial nominations, thereby entrusting it with the duty to require judicial nominees to attain at least a minimum standard of acceptability. As applied to the Court of Appeals, such a standard must set some minimum of proficiency as a scholar or practitioner of constitutional law.

In this regard Mr. Manion's credentials are so thin that any standard low enough for him to hurdle would open the judiciary to truly dangerous mediocrity. His 13 years of legal experience have been confined to personal injury defense, commercial litigation and small-claims work. He has participated in only 12 federal trials, never regarding federal law, and never as lead attorney. Appellate judges constantly must elucidate complex points of constitutional law through written opinions, yet Mr. Manion has never published a single piece of writing about constitutional law, or anything else.

Mr. Manion's nomination probably stems more from his work as an Indiana state legislator than from his slight achievements before the bar. In 1981 he sponsored a bill to require the teaching of "creationism." Repeatedly he has praised publicly the John Birch Society, which has included among its other right-wing views the conviction that President Dwight D. Eisenhower was a communist dupe. Mr. Manion often has questioned the legitimacy of Supreme Court authority and precedent. Thus he is not a true conservative either; his views instead are so far to the right of mainstream America legal and political thought that—even if otherwise qualified—he should not be entrusted with life-long judicial authority to rule on constitutional law.

The argument against Mr. Manion could go on and on. Qualified conservatives abound who would draw little opposition if only President Reagan nominated them. Before he leaves office Mr. Reagan will have appointed roughly half of the federal judiciary. To protect the judiciary's intellectual integrity, and through it the republic's foundation of law, the Senate is obliged to insist on higher standards than Mr. Manion can meet.

[From the New York Times, May 8, 1986]

WHAT KIND OF "LIKE-MINDED" JUDGES?

President Reagan's nominees for the Federal courts severely test his indisputable right to staff the bench with like-minded judges. More power to the Senate for resisting those whose background marks them as barely fit, or worse.

Consider the modest credentials of Daniel Manion, the South Bend attorney nominated for the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. Mr. Manion has never appeared before this important court and so got only the lowest passing grade from the American Bar Association's review panel. His inexperience in Federal practice might be forgivable if it were compensated by scholarship. It isn't. Mr. Manion is best known for his broadcast conversations with his father, the late Clarence Manion, which castigated Supreme Court decisions on race, religion and obscenity.

"I'm glad there is a way we can curtail the Supreme Court," he told his father in a 1971 broadcast. Congress, he suggested, should selectively strip the Court of jurisdiction, a cause that still interests Mr. Manion. He assured the Senate Judiciary Committee he would follow precedent as a judge. Yet in 1980, a few weeks after the Supreme Court struck down a law requiring the posting of the Ten Commandments in Kentucky schools, he co-sponsored a nearly identical bill as a member of the Indiana State Senate. He now lamely explains that disrespect for precedent as "a kind of protest."

Another nominee, Jefferson B. Sessions 3d, offers somewhat more legal seasoning for a District Court post in Mobile, Ala., but he can't understand why black Americans take umbrage at his lighthearted references to racial prejudice. Recalled for more confirmation testimony, he acknowledged calling the N.A.A.C.P., the A.C.L.U., the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and the National Council of Churches "un-American organizations." He now asserts he "never meant to suggest, nor do I consider these organizations to be un-American."

Both nominees baffle senators seeking to engage their intellect and measure their slim qualifications. The Senate should reject them and thereby notify the President that in offering such candidates as "like-minded," he insults the courts, the Senate and himself.

UNQUALIFIED NOMINEE: DANIEL MANION SHOULD BE REJECTED FOR COURT OF APPEALS

Appointing federal judges whose politics reflect his own is President Reagan's right. But surely the prospective pool of judges and attorneys includes numerous people with qualifications vastly exceeding those of Daniel Manion of Indiana.

Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, can help send Reagan back to that pool by voting to reject Manion's nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in Chicago.

The Judiciary Committee will vote tomorrow on the nomination of Manion, a former Indiana state senator who received the American Bar Association's lowest positive ranking. The Chicago Council of Lawyers opposes the nomination, saying Manion lacks "experience with the kinds of complex federal litigation which he would have to review as a judge of the Seventh Circuit."

Since the Supreme Court reviews only 100 to 150 appellate cases each year, it is extremely important that appeals court judges have a high degree of experience and scholarship. Manion, whose legal experience is in personal injury and small claims cases, has never argued a case before the Seventh Circuit Court. As for scholarship in legal interpretation, he told the Judiciary Committee that he had no published writings.

Beyond these questions, however, are concerns about Manion's extremist views of the Constitution, particularly on freedoms of religion and speech. In Judiciary Committee hearings last week, Senate Democrats questioned Manion about his sponsorship of a bill to allow the Ten Commandments to be posted in Indiana public schools two months after the Supreme Court ruled that such postings were unconstitutional.

They also expressed concern about his cosponsorship of a bill to require the teaching of creationism in the public schools, despite rulings in federal courts that creationism is an unconstitutional advancement of religion.

Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., questioned a 1979 letter by Manion to a John Birch Society chapter that said, "Your members are certainly the people who are on the front line of the fight for constitutional freedom." Concern also focused on statements he made in broadcasts in the 1970s on a radio and TV talk show co-hosted by his father. On two broadcasts in 1971, Manion called for Congress to enact legislation stripping the Supreme Court of broad areas of its jurisdiction to enforce constitutional rights.

These and other actions that show a blatant disregard for citizens' rights to free speech indicate a man who does not value basic constitutional principles and who does not have the basic qualifications for this crucial lifetime appointment. Reagan can do better, and still be ideologically comfortable.

NOT AT ALL JUDICIAL

The Reagan Administration's appointments to the federal judiciary have included a number of well-regarded legal minds as well as some people of much less ability and experience. Among those of much less ability and experience. Among those in the latter group is Daniel A. Manion, who has been nominated for a seat on the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, which sits in Chicago and covers Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Manion's record makes him a poor choice to be an appellate judge.

Manion has not distinguished himself either as a lawyer or as a legal scholar. Much of his adult life was spent with the Manion Forum, an advocacy group that produces radio and television broadcasts endorsing extremist right-wing views. He told the Senate Judiciary Committee that he had no published writings, which in itself should raise eyebrows about a nominee for a court that issues written opinions on complex legal issues.

The positions that Manion has espoused should give the Senate further pause about giving him a lifetime judgship. Manion has praised the John Birch Society, of which his father, Clarence Manion was a founding member, and called for the re-establishment of the House Un-American Activities Committee. During four years in the Indiana Legislature, he sponsored legislation to have the Ten Commandments posted in every classroom and to require schools to teach creationsim along with evolution.

His views of constitutional matters, which regularly come before the Courts of Appeals, are equally odd. For example, he opposes the incorporation doctrine, under which the Bill of Rights is applied to the states as well as to the federal govenment. He has repeatedly shown little regard for the First Amendment freedoms that federal judges must protect.

Manion lacks the qualifications and independence of thought necessary for this important judgeship. The Committee should reject him.

NOMINEE "UNFIT BY ANY STANDARD"—HOOSIER JUDGE HOPEFUL IS SHORT ON CREDENTIALS, LONG ON IDEOLOGY

There's a big difference between most of the recent Reagan nominees to Federal district and appellate judgeships and Hoosier Daniel Manion, a former Indiana state legislator. The President wants to put Mr. Manion on the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Though most other Reagan nominees have been extremely conservative, they have also been generally well qualified—either as scholars or lower court judges. Not so with Mr. Manion, who seems to be unfit by any standard.

Mr. Manion has been declared unqualified by the Chicago Council of Lawyers. The American Bar Association, which reviews all nominees for the federal bench, gave him the minimum passing grade.

Although scholarship and writing are among the most significant responsibilities of federal appeals court judges, Mr. Manion astonishingly told the Senate Judiciary Committee that he has no published writings. Certainly Mr. Reagan could have found a more suitable candidate.

Finally, Mr. Manion has never been a judge—not an impossible barrier to appointment, but still a distressing weakness considering the fact that he is not a scholar, either.

Beyond that, Mr. Manion would be unworthy of the federal appellate bench. His kindheartedness toward the extremist John Birch Society is disturbing. After the death of his father (a founder of the Birch society) in 1979, Mr. Manion wrote the organization, thanking members for their expressions of sympathy: "Your members are certainly the people who are on the front line of the fight for constitutional freedom."

In his own record he has given some indication of what he thinks of "constitutional freedom."

He holds a view that access to federal courts should be virtually as exclusive as membership in selective private clubs. In 1971 Mr. Manion declared on a television program that he would strip the Supreme Court of the power to enforce many constitutional rights, a view with which many more traditional conservatives differ.

As a Hoosier state senator, Mr. Manion advocated censorship of public school textbooks, at which time The Louisville Times noted that his guidelines were so strict that they would have sent works by Ernest Hemingway and Mark Twain to the dumpster.

He also worked to inject "scientific creationism" into the biology curriculum of Indiana public schools. After Kentucky's Ten Commandments bill was struck down by the U.S. Supreme Court, Mr. Manion sponsored a similar measure in Indianapolis. At the least it was a waste of time and at most a serious violation of the First Amendment separation of church and state.

Thursday the Senate Judiciary Committee, of which Kentucky Sen. Mitch McConnell is a member, will consider Mr. Manion's nomination. It should be soundly rejected.

[From the Plain Dealer, June 7, 1986]

SESSIONS REBUFFED

The appropriate response to the U.S. Senate's rejection of Jefferson Beauregard Sessions III to be a federal judge is "hooray!" It was the first time a Reagan judicial nominee had been rejected, and should embolden the Senate to block other unqualified candidates. After six months of hearings, the Senate Judiciary Committee doubted that Sessions could be a fair and impartial judge.

Sessions, 39, a U.S. attorney in Alabama, presented a record splotched with racist remarks, slurs on respected social-activist groups and the questionable prosecution of civil rights workers who later were acquitted. His racial insensitivity alone disqualifies him. His selective memory—he admitted some gaffs, then recanted his testimony—sealed the committee's vote.

In the kind of egregious chutzpah the nation has seen too often, Attorney General Edwin Meese III condemned the decision as "an appalling surrender to the politics of ideology." This, from the chief orchestrator of placing young ideologues in judgeships to color the federal bench's philosophical bent for decades to come. "Political or ideological litmus tests should have no place in the confirmation process," Meese huffed, as if reserving the litmus paper for his own screening process.

Last month the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee rightly rejected Jeffrey Zuckerman to be general counsel to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, whose goals he did not support. Also in May, the judiciary committee refused to confirm Daniel Manion, an Indiana lawyer picked for an appellate judgeship. But the panel narrowly agreed to send Manion's name to the floor without recommendation, leaving his confirmation possible, but more difficult. Manion also suffers from inexperience, rigid ideology, low professional ratings and a blindness to First Amendment guarantees. Last summer the same committee blocked the controversial choice of William Bradford Reynolds, who wanted to undo civil rights laws as associate attorney general.

By now the message should be getting through at the White House. People are not qualified for office just because the president or his associates say so. And the Senate is not going to retreat on issues of race. Under President Nixon, conservatives also were nominated to the bench and other high posts, but the appointees were persons capable of logic and reason. Reagan's choices are blind theorists who want their ideology to shape events instead of interpret them. For the country's sake, Meese and Reagan must learn this distinction.

The point is that those who suggest that this is somehow merely a trumped up exercise because we have no place else to go on a Wednesday night and we pick on Daniel Manion because he has an ideological bent with which some of us disagree, I might think really miss the point.

Let me put something else in perspective.

We have had 270 Federal judges that this President has appointed. I have been in charge of the Democratic position as the ranking Democrat on the committee during almost all of those submissions.

In the entire time that the President has been President of the United States, sending up 270 Federal judges, we have only on four occasions—only on four occasions—even asked the U.S. Senate to vote on the nominees by rollcall vote.

I would dare say there is nary a liberal nominee in the bunch. I would dare say, by any objective standards, at least 260 of those 270 nominees would be considered political conservatives.

We, in fact, can refer to just a few.

The President nominated and we confirmed and voted for, and I voted for, the chairman of the conservative party of New York State, a judge we put on the bench who was the attorney for the National Right to Life Organization, a very qualified, decent man named Noonan.

We put on the bench some of the finest conservative legal minds in this country.

Judge Scalia was put on the bench during this administration, and Judge Esterbrook.

There have been a number of extremely qualified, extremely competent and extremely conservative judges we have put on the bench.

But now that we take issue with this nominee to be put on the seventh circuit, all of a sudden it is somehow a major issue relating to whether or not it is political.

In the U.S. Senate Committee on the Judiciary we had a similarly unqualified man named Sessions. He was one of those four people that we took issue with. In the committee, the same argument went up, that Mr. Sessions is qualified, that this is merely political, and so on, and the Senate Judiciary Committee with all the Democrats and several Republicans voted against him and turned down his nomination because he was not qualified to sit on the district bench.

My colleague talks about the ratings that the judges have received under the Reagan administration. The fact of the matter is there has been a precipitous drop or change, in the Senator's view, in the caliber of the men and women—I should not say women because there are not many women sent up by this administration—in the caliber of the men who had been put forward under former Attorney General Smith, where the standards were fairly high.

□ 2020

They were as high as any administration, on balance. But in President Reagan's second term—and by the way, for the record, we should point out that there are several categories which the ABA looks at, that they put prospective nominees in when they give us their opinion as to their qualifications. The first is exceptionally well qualified; the second is well qualifiedd; the third is qualified; and the fourth is qualified/not qualified, the majority saying qualified, the minority saying not qualified. The fifth is not qualified.

Just in the second term, under Mr. Meese, the percentage of those sent up receiving a rating of qualified/not qualified, which is what was the case here, 37 percent of all the nominees that have been sent up for the circuit court of appeals in every circuit in the country, 37 percent, received a rating of qualified/not qualified—for the circuit court of appeals.

I also would like to speak, if I may, for a few moments to this notion that in fact, we are picking on small-town lawyers. Let me tell you, Mr. President, some of the finest minds in this country on the bench, some of the finest minds in this country in American politics, some of the finest minds in this country in the area of business and labor have come, like me—not that I am one of the finest minds—from small towns. I believe the Senator from Illinois is from a small town. I am from a small town in terms that the Senator from Utah is suggesting of the small town of South Bend, IN.

When you do not have much to point out as to what the qualifications are, you talk about the fact that your neighbors like you; the people with whom you deal as a lawyer like you. The fact that you are honest and honorable with them is a very positive point. But we are not talking here about nominating somebody to be an assistant attorney general. We are not talking about someone here that we are nominating to sit in a family court in the State of Delaware or Illinois or Indiana. We are not talking about someone here whom we are going to make the commissioner of baseball, although I guess the public might think that was more important than all the others I have named so far. We are talking about the circuit court of appeals.

The circuit on which we are about to place this man, if he is to be confirmed, has some very fine conservative minds. This idea that we are after conservatives—let me tell my colleagues whom we have appointed on that circuit just since we have been here, men who, in fact, are extremely conservative, men who are fine, fine men.

Frank H. Easterbrook. No one in this body would suggest that he is not a conservative by any standard one could find. Frank Easterbrook, though—and by the way, Richard Posner. Let me read their criteria.

Frank H. Easterbrook graduated cum laude from the University of Chicago Law School and was a clerk to the Hon. Levin Campbell, judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit. From 1974 to 1979, Mr. Easterbrook engaged in appellate practice as assistant (1974-77) and later Deputy (1978-79) Solicitor General of the United States. Immediately prior to his appointment to the Seventh Circuit in 1985, he was a professor at the University of Chicago Law School.

Richard Posner graduated summa cum laude from Yale College in 1959 and Harvard Law School in 1962. He served as a clerk to Hon. William J. Brennan, Jr., U.S. Supreme Court and Assistant to U.S. Solicitor General Thurgood Marshall. Immediately prior to his appointment to the 7th Circuit in 1981, Mr. Posner taught at Stanford University and the University of Chicago Law Schools.

I could go down the list here, but shall not take up all the time.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator speaks of Mr. Posner being placed on the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals. Does the Senator know what his rating was by the ABA?

Mr. BIDEN. I believe it was qualified.

Mr. HATCH. The same as Mr. Manion's. Mr. Manion had 11 to 13 or 14 ABA people find him qualified. There was one before that found him unqualified.

Mr. Posner, one of the most illustrious people in the country, now one of the most illustrious circuit court of appeals judges, was given a qualified rating by the ABA.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware has the floor. The Senator from Delaware was making the point responding to the charge that we have refused to put conservatives on the bench, that we have refused out of ideological reasons to go forward and allow conservative judges to sit here. That is the argument that has been made today; that is the argument that is going to be made tomorrow. In fact, the Senator from Delaware voted for both those men.

In fact, on that same circuit, there are six Reagan appointees, all very conservative men, all voted for by the Senator from Delaware. Now, because the Senator from Delaware and, I hope, a majority of my colleagues, conclude that one of the seven appointees to that court is not qualified, the Senator from Utah rises to suggest that this is pure politics. If it were pure politics, why did we vote for those other people? If it is pure ideology, why did we not contest those people?

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield so I can give an answer?

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator is asking a rhetorical question. The Senator from Utah has asked his question. Let me finish my point.

I also pointed out that in addition to this notion that we have somehow decided to be purely political here, notwithstanding the fact that the 270 nominees that have come before the U.S. Senate during this administration, we have only even bothered to ask to vote on 4 of them.

In addition to that fact, that 40 law school deans from across the country said this man is not qualified to sit on the bench, I find that some of the statements that Mr. Manion made in terms of his credibility or his memory as to what he knows and does not know, what he had knowledge of, what he remembers or what he does not remember, are quite fascinating. It seems that the recent appointees under Mr. Meese have been people who have somehow concluded that all they have to do is come before this body and suggest or come before the Senate Judiciary Committee during the hearing process and suggest they will uphold the Constitution, notwithstanding anything else they have said. All they have to say is "I will uphold the Constitution," and if they say they will uphold the Constitution, they do not have to remember whether or not they endorsed constitutional principles that are somewhat out of whack or that others have had that they have cited in their past record. They assume they do not have to bother to explain inconsistencies.

For example, the Senator from Utah makes the case about the legislation that Mr. Manion voted on. Then he makes an analogy to the State legislature about posting the Ten Commandments. Then he makes an analogy to Abner Mikva, who is now on the court, and says, well, one legislator and another legislator; we went forward with the one, why not go forward with the other?

There is a little distinction. If a U.S. Senator or U.S. Congressperson, as Judge Mikva was, or a State senator like Mr. Manion, knows that what he or she is about to vote on is in fact unconstitutional, knows it to be unconstitutional, yet nonetheless goes ahead and votes for it, it raises the issue of whether or not, when they took their oath to defend and uphold the Constitution, they understood the oath they were taking. It is very difficult to take a position on a controversial issue which is in question as to its constitutionality or on which constitutionality is never raised and to take a position on an issue which you believe as an attorney—and at least he was clearly competent enough to make the judgment that what he was proposing was unconstitutional. If you believe it to be unconstitutional and nonetheless go forward and vote for it.

Mr. Manion in his testimony before our committee, when asked about this legislation, repeatedly made references to the fact that he believed that the law that he had proposed and voted for was in fact almost precisely like a law that had been overruled. He went on to suggest that—overturned the Kentucky law only a short time before. And he says, "I knew the Kentucky law had been overruled." And he says—and remember now, he is under oath. He knew that it had been declared unconstitutional and that he knew this was almost the same, but he made the argument, a very interesting argument, that in fact it was the equivalent of a legislative protest, and that was the way I believe he was going to move off this issue of whether or not he voted for something unconstitutional, that he knew to be unconstitutional. And Mr. Manion was, I thought, fairly straightforward and he answered the questions whether or not he knew. He said, "I knew the Kentucky law had been overruled." And I said, "Is that a distinction with a difference?" He said, "Well, obviously in Indiana this particular law had not been." And he goes on and says, "But it probably would have been."

And then in other parts through his testimony—when I finish my statement, I will be delighted to discuss this at some length with my colleague—he says that—in fact, when asked whether or not it would be challenged and overruled, he said, "Yes, I would say it would have been overturned. There is no question about that."

Now, I asked my staff to go back and get that testimony because I knew that this would be an issue during this debate, and I found something fascinating. Maybe it has happened before, but I do not recall it happening before. When we got the official transcript, it did not read precisely like what I remember. So I asked to go back and get the original transcription that was not the official transcript, and attached to it was a letter signed by Paul J. Guller, chief printer, and it says:

> Dear Witness: Enclosed is a transcript of your remarks to afford you the opportunity to review and correct it. Only changes in diction, expression, clarity, brevity, accuracy, or to correct any errors in transcribing are permitted. If changes in substance are desired, a written request must be made to the chairman. Please write all possible corrections legibly . . .

That was dated April 30. Now, after the hearing and after receipt of this letter, when the rough transcript was sent, Mr. Manion or someone on Mr. Manion's behalf went back and made some changes. And some of the changes I find, quite frankly, a little disturbing. Maybe I am wrong and maybe my colleague—and I would invite his comment at this point when I finish this, without yielding the floor, if he wishes to comment on this. I got a little confused because I remember clearly that he said he knew the law in Kentucky to have been overruled and unconstitutional. He believed the law in Indiana to be similar, if not precisely the same, and he was confident the Indiana law would be declared unconstitutional, there was no question about it.

Then I go back to read that, and I find the official transcript now reads, instead of the following—which would be on page 94 of the transcript—

> Senator BIDEN. Is that a distinction with a difference?
>
> Mr. MANION. Well, obviously, Indiana, this particular law has not been but it probably would have been.

Then I go look at the official transcript, and the official transcript says:

> Well, obviously, Indiana, this particular law had not been but it may have been.

"Probably would have" to "may."

Now, I look at page 97:

> Mr. MANION. Well, I think we passed that law basically as a protest stating that our opinion was in Indiana 39-to-9 in the Senate and, yes, it is unlikely that that would have survived the legislative process.

The new transcript reads:

And, yes, it is unlikely that that would have survived the legislative process.

Not very much of a distinction, reasonable, but then we go down and find:

Senator BIDEN. Unlikely? It is not impossible?

Mr. MANION. You mean ultimately if they were challenged?

Senator BIDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANION. Yes. I would say that it would have been overturned. No question about it.

But the official transcript now reads, I say to my colleague from Utah, the following. Instead of it saying:

Yes, I would say it would have been overturned, no question about it.

It now reads:

Yes, I would say it probably would have been overturned. "No question about it" deleted.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. I will be delighted to yield.

Mr. HATCH. Let us understand something. The Senator invited me to respond on this issue. First of all, every nominee is accorded the courtesy under our committee of reviewing the transcript and making changes that need to be made. These were not in my——

Mr. BIDEN. If I say, he is entitled to change diction, expression, clarity, brevity, accuracy, or to correct any errors in transcribing.

Mr. HATCH. That is right. He actually had said "probably" in answer to several questions earlier, and he wished to make his statement clear and accurate. The accusation seems to be, as I understand it, Mr. Manion voted for a bill that he knew was unconstitutional.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, I yielded to him to answer the question.

Mr. HATCH. It is not the same situation.

Mr. BIDEN. I ask the Senator to respond to this. If he does not, I will not yield the floor. Will he respond to whether or not the record was changed the way I said. On page 97, line 19, from:

Yes, I would say it would have been overturned. No question about it.

to:

Yes, I would say it probably would have been overturned.

Mr. HATCH. I think to answer the Senator's question I have to go through what happened from my perspective, but let me try to do so. Whether it was a hypothetical question or inquiry or whatever it was, basically it was did he vote for a bill that he knew was unconstitutional or did he support a bill that he knew was unconstitutional. The answer to that is he voted for a bill that Senator METZENBAUM said was unconstitutional.

During the April 30 hearings Senator METZENBAUM asked Manion about a bill Manion voted for in 1981—this was the one we are talking about—allowing the Ten Commandments to be posted in State classrooms. Manion remembered the issue but not the specifics of the legislation, and I think the transcript bears this out.

Senator METZENBAUM, who had copies of both bills there before him, some of which were blown up for the TV cameras, told Manion that the two bills were identical.

Senator METZENBAUM. The question, Mr. Manion, is how could you, as a member of the legislature, introduce a proposal that you knew had been unconstitutional just 2 months before?

That is in the transcript at page 38.

Manion tried to point out that he was not sure that the bill was identical. Here is what he said:

I do not know what the distinctions were between our bill and that bill.

Page 39. Now, Senator METZENBAUM, who, again, had both bills in front of him—and Manion had not dwelled on this issue for over 5 years—prompted Mr. Manion. He said this:

There were none that I know of. Do you know of any?

Mr. Manion replied:

Not too many. I do not remember the distinctions.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, what does that have to do with my question?

Mr. HATCH. Let me get through. And then explained to Senator METZENBAUM that "He would have tried to tailor it"—that is, a bill responding to the recent court decision of unconstitutionality—"so that it did meet the requirement of the court of appeals or the Supreme Court."

That is at page 40. But Senator METZENBAUM, again with both bills before him—Manion was not even given copies—did not disclose, Senator METZENBAUM did not disclose that with the Ten Commandments legislation Mr. Manion had done just that. Instead, Senator METZENBAUM proposed that the bills were identical and attacked not Mr. Manion but Senator METZENBAUM's own straw man in this case.

□ 2040

Senator KENNEDY was also misled by Senator METZENBAUM in his attacking Manion for the same thing.

Senator KENNEDY said:

Well, is it your understanding that a State statute can overturn the Supreme Court decision?

Mr. MANION. Not that I know of.

Senator KENNEDY. Well, did not the Supreme Court rule on this, which is in your response to Senator METZENBAUM? Do you acknowledge that?

Mr. MANION. He—

Meaning Senator METZENBAUM—

explained to me it did rule on a Kentucky case; that is right.

Manion properly pointed out at that point that he was going on Senator METZENBAUM's reading of the bills, and his reading, of course, was erroneous at the time. So he pointed out to Senator KENNEDY that the bills would have to be compared.

Senator KENNEDY. So what would have been the effect of it even if the legislation had passed?

Mr. MANION. It probably would have been overruled. But I would have to compare the laws.

At that point, Senator KENNEDY got into a slight altercation with the committee chairman, insisting that Mr. Manion answer the question. Mr. Manion tried to accommodate him, and Senator KENNEDY implied that Mr. Manion was being evasive and was not answering.

Mr. BIDEN. I ask my colleague to respond to the question. Did he substantively——

Mr. HATCH. I do not think he substantively changed his position, no. He clarified his answer.

Mr. BIDEN. Then, why did he not submit a revision of his testimony, saying, "Although I said that, I did not mean that"? How can you possibly read that and say that it is not a substantive change in testimony?

Mr. HATCH. I do not think it was. He said "probably" throughout most of his testimony.

Mr. BIDEN. He was under oath. Is there any doubt that he said at least once when he was under oath, "Yes, I would say it would have been overturned. No question about it"?

The Senator from Delaware goes back to get that sworn statement, and that sworn statement now reads, "Yes, I say it would have probably overturned."

There is nothing appended to this that says: "Let me have another hearing and explain what I meant." There is nothing that says: "Although I said that, that is not what I meant."

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. I yield.

Mr. SIMON. Let me ask a question of the Senator from Delaware, because what he has just provided the Senate I find very intriguing.

I have to say that I have read and reread testimony from time to time; but in my 11½ years in Congress, most of that time in the House, I cannot remember anyone testifying under oath who has ever made that kind of change or was permitted to make that kind of change. Does the Senator from Delaware remember any such occasion?

Mr. BIDEN. I do not.

I moved down here to be closer to the Senator from Utah so I could hear him better.

I am raising an inquiry. Maybe there is reason for this. With all due respect, it is a little like the answer my colleague from Utah is giving me: Although yesterday I may have said probably, probably, probably, the next day I say surely, surely, surely. Now I can go back the following day and say that although I said both of those under oath, "probably" one day and "surely" the next day, I can expunge the "surely."

Mr. HATCH. The fact is that Mr. Manion was misled by Senator METZENBAUM and I do not think it was intentional.

Mr. BIDEN. Did he say what he said?

Mr. HATCH. He was misled. Mr. METZENBAUM's arguments at the time assumed that the two statutes were identical, and there is obviously a distinction between a statute requiring the posting of the Ten Commandments and one that authorizes or permits such posting. He had been 5 years removed from this when he was asked those questions. I do not think there has been a substantive change.

Mr. BIDEN. Let me put it this way——

Mr. HATCH. I think that is really stretching it.

Mr. BIDEN. I think that is a ridiculous assertion.

We have sworn testimony here that has been materially changed. If a witness is on the stand during a trial and the witness says during the trial—the only analogy I can make when someone is under oath and the witness says, "I killed Cock Robin." Then, on appeal, the official transcript, without any further questioning as to whether he was misled, is that he thought Cock Robin was a hen down the street rather than a prized bird that the trial was about.

The trial is over; the hearing is over. He is no longer under oath. The transcript is being submitted on appeal, and on appeal, rather than asking for the case to be reopened and explained what he meant, he merely changes the transcript on appeal to change materially what he said.

How can anyone not understand that this is a material change? "Yes, I would say it would have been overturned. No question about it."

The only reason I found this out is that I asked my staff—I said, "Would you go back and get me the transcript so I may prepare it?" He goes back and gets the transcript, and I said: "Wait a minute. I don't remember this. Go get the original transcript."

I get the original transcript, and I look at the original transcript and at the official transcript, and there is a difference. It is moved from "no question about it" to "probably."

I suggest that the appropriate, ethical, and reasonable thing to do, if in fact Mr. Manion felt he had been misled, is to ask for another day of hearing, ask for an opportunity to come back under oath once again and in fact change his testimony. But not in an ex post facto way go back and change the testimony.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield on that point? Let us be fair.

Mr. BIDEN. Let us be honest while we are being fair.

Mr. HATCH. You be honest, too. I am being honest. Let us give the man a chance. I think the logical thing for him to do when he realized he was misled by a distinguished U.S. Senator was to clarify the transcript and make it accurate.

Mr. BIDEN. That is interesting; that is fascinating.

Mr. HATCH. He also used the word "probably," as I understand it. Here we have a distinguished U.S. Senator asking questions, assuming that the two statutes were identical, and he did not know. It was 5 years from that time. Senator METZENBAUM did not offer him the statutes, did not offer them side by side and say they are exactly the same.

Mr. BIDEN. Let us assume that is correct.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct. The fact is that when he realized that, he made the changes.

Mr. BIDEN. Would you have told the Senator from Delaware about that change had I not found it accidentally?

Mr. HATCH. Sure, if I had known about it. The fact is that he was being honest when he realized there was a mistake. The only word that was added is the word "probably," as I see it. Maybe I am wrong on that.

Mr. BIDEN. You are wrong on that, because, as I understand it, also stricken was "No question about it."

Mr. HATCH. That is consistent with the word "probably."

Mr. BIDEN. You might as well go back and change it.

Mr. HATCH. I suppose he could have called for another hearing and say, "I made a mistake because I was mislead by Senator METZENBAUM."

Mr. BIDEN. Misled by Senator METZENBAUM?

Mr. HATCH. Senator METZENBAUM asked the question in a way, couched in a way, that did not let the man know what the facts were.

Mr. BIDEN. Let me set the record straight.

The majority counsel, as pointed out to me, was the source of the cooperation here. When I asked my staff this question, they not only did not receive an evasive answer from majority counsel, but majority counsel pointed out to my staff that this change had occurred.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield on that point? I think I can clarify something.

Mr. BIDEN. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. The majority investigator did tell you that.

Mr. BIDEN. That is right, and that is what I just said.

The point is, though, that there is a material change.

Now, the reason I bothered to mention this is—does the Senator from Massachusetts wish me to yield?

Mr. KERRY. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BIDEN. I yield.

Mr. KERRY. I should like to ask him, through the Senator from Utah. I appreciate the discrepancy which the Senator from Delaware is drawing out here. To this Senator there is an enormous difference, a world of difference, a whole difference in meaning, a total difference between the concept of "possibly" and "probably" and "no question about it."

I do not see that there is anything there but a change of substance.

My question to the Senator from Utah is this: Even if there were a difference between the laws, what kind of posting, what kind of statutory permissiveness with respect to posting of the Ten Commandments, does he believe would be acceptable under those circumstances?

□ 2050

Mr. HATCH. The fact of the matter is that the Supreme Court says that a mandatory posting is unconstitutional. That implies that a nonmandatory posting might not be unconstitutional.

Any lawyer would give you that argument. There is nothing wrong with that.

Second, remember, Manion was a legislator.

I have seen a lot worse things going on in this body than ever went on there on that particular issue. I tell the Senator now almost every day in one of these two bodies someone brings up something. As chairman of a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee dealing with constitutional issues every day I have to admit something is probably unconstitutional.

If you are going to hold the man culpable that he never sit on the Federal bench because he supported a law that might be unconstitutional because it, in fact, differed from what was ruled constitutional, my gosh, there is not a man or woman in either of these bodies who sit here who could ever sit on the Federal bench.

Let us be honest about it. There was a distinction between the Indiana law compared to the Kentucky law, and that distinction was that the Indiana law did not make it mandatory to post the Ten Commandments. That is a very, very important constitutional distinction.

I personally believe that this Supreme Court or that then-Supreme Court would have found the Indiana law to be unconstitutional, too, but that is just a personal belief. They might not have.

Mr. KERRY. The Senator from Utah does not find it somewhat remarkable that a man we are thinking about elevating to the second highest court in this land was not capable in the face of repeated questioning in front of a committee where he knew he was going to be subjected to drawing these kinds of distinctions as an ex-legislator, who supposedly was drawing the distinction at that time, and was unable to and did not draw that distinction at that time and had to change his answer subsequently?

Mr. HATCH. If he was incapable, it was because of misleading questions by one Member of our distinguished body.

Mr. KERRY. The Senator is suggesting to me that this potential judge who is going to have to draw potential judgments——

Mr. HATCH. I am suggesting to you that before a man can answer questions about the comparison between two statutes he ought to at least be given the opportunity to examine both, or he should not be misled by a distinguished Senator's questions into believing that the two statutes were identical having not seen them for 5 years.

Now, when he finds that he was misled, then I think a question of common fairness dictates to the Senator, to me, to Senator METZENBAUM, and everybody else to say "You ought to be able to clarify that," because it is clear that he did not know what the question was because it was not right, it was not fair, it was not accurate, and it did not tell him there were distinctions between the Kentucky statute and the statute that he in fact and a whole raft of Democrats voted for in the Indiana Legislature, and that statute was decidedly different from the Kentucky statute.

Mr. KERRY. I say if it was——

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator makes a constitutional argument it was constitutional, although I personally would not do that——

Mr. KERRY. I say respectfully to my colleague that if it was in fact so distinguishable——

Mr. HATCH. It was

Mr. KERRY. And if this gentleman is indeed the quality kind of person we should be elevating to the second highest court in our country, when he comes before a body that he knows is going to be interested in asking him to explain his past, to tell me that the excuse is that he was misled by a U.S. Senator's questions does not do a lot to give this Senator confidence that when he is trying to discern between one question and another of attorneys who come before him in appellate brief he is going to have the ability to be able to do so on some things.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, does the Senator from Delaware have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has the floor.

Mr. BIDEN. I thank you.

I would like to make a point here that there are two separate issues relating to this case.

The first is whether or not Mr. Manion knew or should have known that the law that he voted for was unconstitutional or whether or not he believed it to be unconstitutional and voted for it nonetheless. That is one issue.

There is a second and utterly distinct issue that has no relevance to the first, and that is, is it appropriate when, in fact, the witness who receives a letter saying that "under the rules of the U.S. Senate the enclosed transcript of your remarks affords you an opportunity to review and correct but only changes in diction, expression, clarity, brevity, accuracy, or to correct any errors in transcribing are permitted," to change that testimony? Now, the question is, Is the sworn testimony under oath that was changed a change in diction, a change in expression, a change in clarity, brevity, accuracy, or to correct errors in transcribing? That was my question.

And I will submit for my colleagues who will read the RECORD and be told about it by their staffs and who may be listening to this, I would suggest that changing a sentence under oath from "I would say it would have been overturned; no question about it," to read, "Yes, I would say it probably would have been overturned," is a material change in a transcript.

Now, there may be an explanation for it. There may be an explanation that the witness did not make the change. There may be an explanation that he, in fact, thought this was no material change. There may be an explanation he thought it was a material change but he thought he had the right to do it.

Whatever the reason, it warrants some explanation, because it is highly unusual for a transcript to be changed like that when in fact the transcript was one taken under oath.

And it would seem to me if we look at motivation for the change, it is obviously in the interest of the witness to change his testimony from saying that "there is no question that it would have been overturned" to "probably." The reason why is simple for all my colleagues and we all see it. If, in fact, a State legislator votes for a law he believes to be unconstitutional and says there is no question it would be overturned, then, in fact, it raises the issue of whether or not he or she is upholding the constitutional sworn oath that he or she took to uphold the Constitution.

Now if it moves from "no question about it" to "probably" then there is no question because if it is only "probably" the accusation could not be made or the question could not be raised that, in fact, they were violating their constitutional oath.

So, I have a concern. The concern is that there was in fact a material change and, second, there is an apparent motive to change it for the benefit of the nominee. That being the case——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. No; I will not yield at this point.

So what I want to raise for my colleagues' consideration is the second of two issues relating to the so-called posting of the Ten Commandments legislation.

One relates to whether or not it was or should have been unconstitutional.

The second was why was the sworn testimony changed under circumstances which expressly forbid material changes to be made?

Now, with regard to the question of whether or not the case in question, the Kentucky case, would have permitted, and it was the second issue now, separate and distinct from the first one about changing sworn testimony, materially changing, separate and distinct, the issue of whether or not the Kentucky case was so different from the case in Indiana.

Let me read from the court decision.

The court held that:

. . . the mere posting of the copies——

That is the Ten Commandments.

. . . under the auspices of the legislature provides the "official support of the State . . . Government" that the Establishment Clause prohibits.

But then it went on to say that the opinion made clear that the Ten Commandments could be included where appropriate in a study of history, civilization, ethics, or comparative religion. But the Court concluded that the permanent posting of the Ten Commandments, in a classrooms and at times when they were irrelevant to the subjects under study, had a preeminently religious purpose, particularly since readers were admonished on a variety of entirely religious subjects, such as the proper method of worship, the avoidance of idolatry, and the keeping of the Sabbath Day. 449 U.S. at 41-42.

So this distinction my colleague makes that one said "mandatory posting" and the other just said "posting" is, if you read the decision, in this Senator's view, a distinction without a difference.

They made it clear that the other was also unconstitutional. The posting for any purpose other than the study of relevant religion, comparative religion, civilization history, et cetera.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. BIDEN. I yield for a moment. I wish to finish.

Mr. SIMON. I do not want to interrupt.

Mr. BIDEN. That is OK.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, there is a third question. The Senator may or may not have the answer, or maybe the Senator from Utah can get the answer, through the chief counsel of the committee—who changed the testimony. Was it the nominee? Was it someone else?

□ 2100

(Mr. TRIBLE assumed the chair.)

Mr. BIDEN. While I am finishing my statement, I would ask my staff to speak to the majority staff. Maybe they know the answer to that and it can be supplied for the Senator. I do not know the answer to that.

Now, let me move on, if I may, to a few other points that I would like to raise.

Again, now, we are talking about the circuit court of appeals. The argument has been made that somehow those of us who think this man is not qualified to sit on the circuit court of appeals must, first, prove our case, and, second—as if it is an inherent right, because you are nominated, to be put on the court—second, not only must we prove our case, if we make the argument that he is not qualified, either in attempting to prove our case—which is not our responsibility to prove our case; we leave the responsibility to the nominee and those who support him to prove their case, but assuming while we make that case that he is not qualified, the assertion is made that it is merely because we have a different ideological point of view than the nominee.

And I ask the rhetorical question once again: Out of 270 nominees that this President has submitted for consideration for advise and consent of the Senate since he has been President, if we wished to be political, why is it that there were only four rollcall votes asked? You might respond, "Well, maybe you knew you couldn't defeat the other people." But why is it that, in committee, in addition to that, we went on voice vote on 95 percent of these people? And some of the most conservative minds ever to be put on the bench have been placed on the bench, voted for by the Senator from Delaware, voted for by the Senator from the great State of Illinois, and voted for by the vast majority, overwhelming majority, of those who now oppose this nomination.

So I find it interesting that we are being political now because we pick 1—in fact we picked 4 out of 270 conservative appointments.

I do not think that makes any sense. I think that, in fact, it is evidence of the fact that there is not a strong argument for Mr. Manion.

Legislators have a right to disagree. Legislators do not have a right to vote for legislation that, in fact, is clearly unconstitutional or that they believe to be unconstitutional. Otherwise competent, small town attorneys have every right to be considered for the bench. But the measure for their consideration should be no less than big town attorneys. It should be one standard for all.

If you come from a large city and you are unqualified, you should not be on the bench. Merely because you come from a small town, does not mean you are automatic.

By the way, most people in my State would not consider South Bend a small town. South Bend is larger than our largest town. So I kind of take issue with the fact of what a small town South Bend is. It happens to be larger than the largest city in my State. If you want to talk about small towns, where I come from you are talking about towns of 10,000 or 20,000 people, 2,000 and 3,000 people.

But, again, I believe it is a red herring to suggest that this issue is about ideology, taking on a small town lawyer who otherwise is fully competent and capable. And if we even raise the issue, the burden is on us to prove beyond a reasonable doubt. This is a job for life. This is a job that in fact will affect the rights and privileges of Americans for a long time to come.

As I say, once again—and I am about to yield the floor because I have taken my share of the time for now, I will come back later this evening—the fact is this is not about ideology. This is not about whether Mr. Manion's view of the incorporation doctrine—and for everyone's edification, the incorporation doctrine is a crazy little thing that says, you know, the Bill of Rights applies to the States. That is the incorporation doctrine. The principle we settled about 70 years ago after a civil war and after some great tumult and turmoil, the basic principle has been settled.

It is true James Madison had questions about it, but that was 200 years ago before we had a civil war, before we had most of what in fact are the amendments that followed on, in fact all of the amendments that followed on from the First Ten Amendments, the so-called Bill of Rights.

I can understand that he has a view that says the Bill of Rights should not apply. I can understand that a man whose father was a very prominent member of the John Birch Society, I believe an organizer and a proponent of, and a distinguished man otherwise, I can understand why a son, out of loyalty to a father, would hold positions or state positions while the father was alive that are similar. I hope my son will be so loyal to me in some of the views that I have.

I even believe that the fact that this nominee has some very—what I think most people would agree would be—and I will read some of them later—some relatively extreme views, he is entitled to those views. He is entitled to have those views.

But I find it interesting that he does not remember some of those things. I find it interesting that he does not remember whether or not and under quite what circumstances and if he endorsed Larry McDonald's book. I am going to read excerpts later from the book so the public record will show the kind of things we are talking about. It is not just merely there is a book out there. You know, it is a kind of interesting book. And I will submit to my colleagues whether or not they think it clearly states what the Constitution is about.

I can understand him even having taken the position that the book makes sense. But I cannot understand how he does not remember it. I cannot understand how he does not remember the book. I cannot understand how he does not remember whether or not he specifically subscribed to it.

I can understand him sending the congratulatory or thank you note to members of the John Birch Society upon his father's passing. That is a noble, reasonable, and, in fact, I think very warmhearted thing to do. But I cannot understand why it was necessary to talk about the John Birch Society being in the forefront of our freedoms unless he believes that. But we do not even get to that. We do not even have to get to that point.

I raise them only as it relates to either the memory of this witness and his ability to remember facts in the past, or his credibility as to whether or not he is telling us now what he really remembered.

I also raise the issue of whether or not this young man has sufficient experience to be on the circuit court of appeals and whether or not his training adequately suits him to be on the second highest court in the land.

And I might add, in conclusion, it is not merely me that has raised that. My colleague from the State of Utah has been here almost as long as I have. He is almost as senior as I am. I doubt whether he can remember a time when 40 law school deans have taken it upon themselves to write to say this nominee is not qualified. I doubt whether—maybe there was a time; I do not remember it. But I surely think—and I read the list earlier, I will not repeat it—I surely think it is not merely what some might suggest is the Northern liberal establishment law schools. We are talking about law schools from all corners of this country, deans from all corners of this country, legal scholars like Philip Kurland, who, by the way, the Senator from Utah and I went to on occasion to get some constitutional support for our position on busing, which is to be against busing, a man who is not known for his liberal views.

So, this is not merely a group of 40 to 50 to 60 Senators who, in fact, think that they just want to play politics today. It is all about whether or not the man who is going to be put on the bench for his life is qualified to serve on that bench. He will be there, as I said, long after all of us are gone. God willing, his health holding up, he will be there long after all of us are gone.

□ 2110

And it seems to me we have no opportunity or right, I might add, to review his conduct other than if it is totally outrageous and criminal in nature once on the bench, and I have no doubt it would not be that were he on the bench if it was criminal in nature. Since this is the only chance we have to review it is now, it is not unreasonable for us to suggest that maybe all those law school deans, all those other people out there might not be wrong, and that merely by raising this issue suggests after we have already voted on 269 candidates for the court, appellate court as well as the district court, and that somehow all of a sudden we have turned liberal. What has happened all of a sudden is the caliber of the nominee has dropped off markedly. That is why we are here this evening. That is why this Senator is here this evening.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have enjoyed the remarks of the distinguished ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee as I always do. He is a very eloquent, very dynamic, very interesting and, I might add, a very intelligent man. He may very well be President of the United States someday. He paid me a compliment a few minutes ago. I will pay him one. But I can say one thing. He does qualify as a medieval philosopher with some of these tremendous arguments he has made, and I should be more specific since we are trying to be specific here. I think I should say a medieval scholastic philosopher because there is no question that when it comes to splitting hairs and finding just exactly the right twist to put on something he is as good as anybody I have ever seen. That is a compliment, not a negative remark. I know that he believes what he is saying, too, which also means a lot to me personally.

But let me say this. To make a fuss, as big a fuss as this very distinguished Senator has made about the fact that Mr. Manion goes back to the transcript and it is Mr. Manion who did, and clarified his testimony openly and according to standard committee procedure. Therefore, it is wrong to suggest this clarification was a deliberate error or an intentional disregard of appropriate conduct. I think is stretching it just a little bit. I could bring up the argument that it is really a change of clarity, it is not a substantive change in my opinion, but a clarification. You know, we could hypothetically ask whether, had the election been held 1 day later back in 1984, would Ronald Reagan have been elected President. I do not think anybody who knows anything about that election would say anything less but sure he would have been.

Mr. BIDEN. You would not suggest he could go back and change the vote, would you?

Mr. HATCH. No; but I would say this. I think on reflection if we wanted to be accurate since this question is hypothetical, there is a possibility that he could have lost. To be accurate, therefore, we probably would go back and say, well, probably he would have been but he may not have been. I mean there is a possibility he may not have been. This is analogous to Manion's clarifying efforts. So it is a change of clarity and one that I suggest that he should have made especially when he found out that he was misled by the distinguished Senator from Ohio. Be that as it may, I think we both have beaten that to death.

With regard to the 40 law deans, I will assert that there is not one conservative in all of those law deans. I think that is quite apparent on this particular letter. But turning to the letter itself, I ask unanimous consent that we put the letter in the RECORD—it is dated June 24, 1986.

The letter is printed earlier in today's RECORD.)

Mr. HATCH. That particular letter is very critical of Mr. Manion. There are a number of errors in that letter by these very important law deans, all of whom I respect, many of whom I admire. But nevertheless we will take one:

> The majority of the American Bar Association screening panel found him barely qualified.

That is not the rating the bar association gives. The fact was he had a qualified rating. To go a little bit further on what the facts were, not only was he rated qualified, but probably 11 out of 14 or I would say 10 to 13 of the panel's 14 members voted that he was qualified. One to four found him not qualified. That is not unusual. That has been going on for a long, long time, except that it has become an issue since Ronald Reagan has become President.

The bar association has been used in this regard. The fact is some have had minority reports before but it was never made an issue by anybody until Ronald Reagan became President. I think it is important to know——

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield on that, I can recall the Senator from Utah making an issue on——

Mr. HATCH. On the minority report? Not that I recall. I do not think we ever did that. I would be happy to apologize. But not that I recall. In fact, I do not recall voting against many of Jimmy Carter's judges. I did lead the fight along with Senator LEAHY, who deserves a great deal of credit, against the one, who was rejected by the Senate Judiciary Committee back in that time.

Let me make the point. A substantial majority of these illustrious members of that rating committee found him to be qualified which is not an easy rating to get. I think the distinguished Senator from Delaware would have to acknowledge that is a fine rating for anybody. Sure, it is nice to have a well-qualified or essentially well-qualified rating. But when people like Posner and Scalia and a whole raft of others who are some of the leading juridical minds in this country, leading legal minds in this country, give only that qualified rating, you know it makes you wonder about the system.

The reason that is so is because the bar association goes heavy on trial ratings. I cannot blame them for that except I think it is ridiculous when you have some of the greatest legal minds in the country just to rate him qualified when on the other hand I have seen them rate others exceptionally well qualified who I know the distinguished Senator from Delaware could beat in court every day of the week. Of course he could probably beat many people in court every day of the week. But be that as it may, I think it is ridiculous to get too caught up in the fact that maybe one person found Mr. Manion unqualified or maybe as many as three.

Manion replaces Judge Pell on the seventh circuit court of appeals. I might add Judge Pell is the only member of that panel whose background is a small town practice. So it is quite appropriate that we have a small town practitioner who has been called by virtually everybody including the Chicago group of lawyers headed by people who are very, very intelligent people but nevertheless a bar group which at the time was headed by Abner Mikva's former campagin manager.

There is nothing wrong with that. I am just saying it was a group of people. It was a small liberal bar group that basically would be expected not to support somebody with the conservative credentials that Mr. Manion had.

I would prefer to place a lot more reliance upon Steptoe and Johnson's Eugene I. Goldman who said I believe the Chicago counsel's findings including its findings that Mr. Manion has been found to be a competent and outstanding lawyer. You know that is the center. Here is a liberal, small bar group very disinclined to find much good in a small town conservative lawyer who found him to be a competent and outstanding lawyer. Mr. Goldman says:

I believe that the Chicago counsel's findings, including its finding that Mr. Manion has been found to be a competent and outstanding lawyer, are then consistent with the counsel's ultimate speculative conclusion that Mr. Manion will have difficulty with the legal issues presented to the 7th Circuit.

I think Mr. Goldman's endorsement, a Democrat, a person who has no ax to grind, who understands the importance of having good people on the bench, is a lot more important then the speculative disendorsement of this small, liberal Chicago group of lawyers.

Back to the deans' letter, to say barely qualified shows I think almost an unconscionable branch of decorum and truth in describing Mr. Manion.

Let me go to another one. They say, "We are also disturbed by the nominee's apparent lack of understanding of the role of the judiciary in protecting individual rights. This was manifested in his action as an Indiana State legislator in cosponsoring a bill that authorized posting the 10 Commandments in schoolrooms shortly after the Supreme Court had invalidated a similar Kentucky statute in Stone versus Graham."

I think to make a big fuss about that is the height of scholasticism because he was a politically elected legislator, and that bill passed 39 to 9. It passed in a bipartisan fashion. I have to admit legislators play all kinds of games, and they were irritated at the time and they very easily could have done that. So to make that a big cause celebre by these illustrious law deans is beneath their dignity. I think it is beneath the dignity of this body to make such a fuss about it.

□ 2120

I think it has been more than adequately explained away in the fact that Senator METZENBAUM'S questions misled Mr. Manion. I can tell you that that was not fair, it was not right. It was not intentional but it still does not make it any the more fair. And it certainly is not fair for these illustrious liberal law deans to send this letter supporting their particular liberal philosophies and not take that into consideration.

They go on to say, "Mr. Manion in a recent hearing conceded that the bills were virtually identical and explained his action as a kind of legislative protest against the Supreme Court."

That goes on every day in legislatures. That is part of the legislative process. It even goes on in this body.

The fact of the matter is that to rely on that as being actual fact, when they did not understand that he was misled by inappropriate questioning, by being misled into thinking that both of the bills were identical, virtually identical, they say, fine, but it still does not answer that question, nor does that make a distinction between legislators and judges.

Then they go on to say in the same hearing he was also reluctant to accept Supreme Court decisions as the law of the land, saying he preferred to give them as exercises which must be followed by lower Federal courts.

What he is saying is he accepted that as controlling precedent. I do not see anything wrong with that. I think the principle of exercises has long been an accepted principle of constitutional as well as common law.

You can go on and talk to each of these. I think it is beneath the dignity of these deans to make these points, but I believe in their zeal to do so they have done so well intentioned. I think they believe that Mr. Manion is not the greatest nominee that could be nominated for the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals. They are entitled to that belief.

On the other hand, they did not run for nor were they elected President of the United States. I might add they are entitled to their opinion. I even had the honor of putting this letter into the RECORD because I believe they are entitled to their opinion. I do respect a number of them as well.

Mr. Manion has participated in many trials, and his experience in trial practice has been denigrated here. He has participated in numerous Federal court cases. He is currently lead counsel in three cases, two involving securities and the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act and one diversity of jurisidiction case. Additionally, he is cocounsel in two patent cases and another diversity case.

A number of cases in which Mr. Manion was involved in the State courts involved cases that could have been brought in Federal courts but he chose the State court forum in the best interest of his client, or what he thought was the best interest of his client. Again, there is nothing wrong with that.

Look at the endorsement he does have, including Father Hesburgh.

Father Hesburgh is not known as a conservative in this country. As a matter of fact, I think most people who know Father Hesburgh would say he is a wonderful, liberal gentleman, as a matter of fact, one of the greatest men in this country. But the fact is he has endorsed Mr. Manion and he is the president of the University of Notre Dame.

Ordinarily, my colleagues who are finding so much fault with Mr. Manion would quote President Hesburgh on everything. They would rely completely on what he has to say. Here he says Manion would make an excellent addition to the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals. But all of sudden his opinion is not very much.

These 40 law deans have many errors in their letters, but their opinions should be taken.

I enjoyed the distinguished Senator from Delaware, some of his comments about small-time communities and how they rally around people and so forth, and he has the support of some of the people.

Well, he acknowledged that and I give him credit.

But I will tell you, if he did not have the support of his home bar, of those people in the area, if he did not have their support, if he did not have even the language of the Chicago Council, though I do not think that is important because they clearly show an evidence they do not know much about Indiana laws, maybe you could criticize him. But even the council says this is a man who basically is a good man, who basically will be fair, who basically will do a good job.

I think, too, it is important to point out, with regard to the doctrine of incorporation, that no less an authority than Justice Burger has criticized the Supreme Court for saying that the entire Bill of Rights is incorporated into the 14th amendment, therefore, all of the States have to comply.

But, what Mr. Manion said, and I agree with those, like Manion, who say that the doctrine of incorporation is law today—what Mr. Manion said years ago was he understands basically the theory of Mr. Burger and other authorities who questioned the historical basis for this doctrine. These authorities note that this was not what the Supreme Court should have done, that it was not really within the framework of the Constitution as it existed at that time. Manion, however, recognizes that it is the law today and he would sustain and uphold it.

I do not think many serious students of constitutional law today will come in and say that the doctrine of incorporation should not be followed. As a matter of fact, it is very difficult to say that today, even though there is a tremendous body of legal analysis and legal briefing and historical writing which says that the Supreme Court should never have decided that constitutional issue in that particular way.

I can put a lot of other information in, but I know my distinguished friend and colleague from Illinois is anxious to speak. I feel guilty that I have taken so much of his time this evening. I have so much respect for him.

Let me say in closing for this particular moment, what it really comes down to, if you really look at all these picayune little arguments against Mr. Manion. It is that he is not a big-shot lawyer, that we are used to big-shot lawyers around here, that they are the only ones who can really do the job, they are the only ones who can sit on these courts.

There are many who are not big-shot lawyers and I can name a whole raft of others, who have turned out to be distinguished judges, who were not the most illustrious lawyers in this country. But some became the best judges because they live in the real world and they should not be deprived of the opportunity, if they have these other qualifications, to sit on the bench.

The Chicago Council of Lawyers basically admits that he has these qualifications.

I personally believe that if you look at the virtual unanimous support of Indiana lawyers for Mr. Manion, you cannot ignore that.

I am not trying to distort or even lift out of context the comments of the distinguished Senator from Delaware, they were appropriate when he said that "I think you are a decent and honorable man."

That is what we need on the bench, decent and honorable men.

"But I do not think I can vote for you because of your political views."

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator finish the sentence?

Mr. HATCH. Let me say a couple of other things. Let me use the President's letter because I think he has a way of saying it better than anybody else.

Dan Manion's "political views" are close to my political views. In particular, Dan Manion's belief that Federal judges should interpret the law, and not impose from the bench their social or philosophical notions upon society, is my belief. That is the real reason this nomination is encountering such hostility.

So, let me state my position directly. I intend to fight for the nomination of Dan Manion; and I do not accept that there should be a hidden restrictive covenant in the confirmation process that reads: No conservative need apply.

What appears to be taking shape is an attempt by some Senators to use their "advise and consent" power to overturn the mandate of the American people—as expressed in 1980 and 1984.

This is not an issue of Republican versus Democrat. It is an issue of whether or not a President of the United States has the right to choose Federal judges who share his judicial philosophy, so long as they are qualified by reason of character and competence. Presidents of both parties have asserted that prerogative; and I will not surrender it.

If Mr. Manion is not competent, if he does not have the character, if he will not be fair, if he will not be impartial, those are the real arguments which we should consider. But I have not heard those arguments.

I have heard arguments like those made by the Chicago Council of Lawyers. You have heard them, too, and even though he was misled by questions and tried to correct it later, that was improper.

□ 2130

Even though he was misled by questioning and tried to correct it later, and he must have had an ulterior motive—an ulterior motive—to change that.

The fact of the matter is, let us not impose insurmountable, ludicrous arguments on the man when the fact of the matter is the basic argument is that he is too conservative.

Nobody is making the argument today that when he was 28 years of age, he got on his father's program and there were some off-the-wall remarks, at least in my view. He went to law school later and after a lot of those things, came to the place where he realized that maybe he was a little bit extreme at that time.

The real point is that he is just too conservative in the eyes of some of the Members of the U.S. Senate. But that is what Ronald Reagan has been called all his lifetime and now he is President of the United States, with an overwhelming mandate to nominate these people. When he has integrity, which the Chicago Council of Lawyers says he does—when he has character, which everybody says he does, Father Hesburgh and all the others—when everybody, even those who oppose him, admit that he would be impartial and fair—those are the types of qualities I would like to see in every judge, regardless of his ideological bent. Those are the things we look for consistently.

I have to admit that his father was a member of the John Birch Society and even though the distinguished Senator from Delaware says that is not much of an argument, he wrote the letter to the head of the John Birch Society office because they had been kind to him at the time of his father's death and said that they are at the forefront of constitutional battles.

It is a nice way of saying "Thanks for being kind to me, I am going to be kind to you."

And in fact, even some members of the John Birch Society are right, though not always. I have to admit that I differ with them in many ways. But they have a right to fight for the way they believe in the Constitution themselves. They are wonderful people who do it every day, who have given blood for this country, and who believe in this country the way the Senator from Delaware and I think we do.

The fact that he showed them a kindness back, I think, is pretty bad to criticize. The Senator from Delaware says that has no bearing here, and I agree with him, but it is amazing how many people have raised that issue here and how it has been distorted in the media—and, I must add, in this letter from these distinguished law deans in this country who, I think, have been known for accuracy in the past but will not be known for total accuracy in the future if anybody reads that letter carefully.

Again, I apologize to my dear friend from Illinois. I would like to rebut some further things. I may do them later. But I do apologize to the Senator for taking his time.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Utah for his generous remarks. I commend my colleague, Mr. BIDEN, for his leadership on this. He has, not only on this but in general in our Judiciary Committee, provided exemplary leadership.

Let me commend also my colleagues, Senator KENNEDY and Senator METZENBAUM, for the work they have done on this particular nomination.

The question, Mr. President, is not whether the nominee is a nice person. I have heard today about the good things he has done in his community. If we were voting for a neighbor, I would be happy to vote for Mr. Manion. We are voting for the second highest court in the land. There are, I think three reasons for turning him down.

The overwhelming reason is that of quality. The second, and I shall explain why, is a much less important reason—ideology. The gentleman, the nominee, is far to the right of Senator HATCH of Utah, to the right of Senator TRIBLE of Virginia, to the right of President Reagan.

A third reason has been brought up tonight by my colleague from Delaware: Changing sworn testimony.

In 11½ years in this body, I do not recall ever having seen that happen, and I have a response to my question to Senator BIDEN. The staff did check and it was the nominee who changed the testimony.

Mr. President, a little history. Those who wrote our Constitution intended originally that the Senate make the appointments. In fact, that was the way the Constitution was drafted until the last session of the constitutional convention. Then it was changed so the President would make the appointments with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The Senate has historically been involved with the district nominations, and I am pleased to say the district nominations, by and large, have been better than those of the appellate court. I am not at all sure we have not been abdicating our responsibilities to some extent on the appellate court nominations. And historically, the Senate has not hesitated to turn down appointments by a President. When a Chief Justice was nominated by George Washington, the U.S. Senate turned down that nomination and, as has been pointed out by Senator BIDEN, we have overwhelmingly approved the judges nominated by the President. Since I have been in this body, a year and a half, we have approved over 100 judges. We have had two rollcalls on this floor and on one of those two rollcalls, I voted for the nominee, in the case of Fitzwater from Texas. The proof is with the nominee. He, or as in some rare cases she—and they have been rare, as my colleague has pointed out—should be a stellar member of the bar to deserve this kind of nomination. Mr. Manion simply has not shown these qualities.

I ask myself, would I approve Mr. Manion to be a county judge in a rural county in Illinois or Delaware or Indiana or Virginia? I come to the reluctant conclusion that I could not approve this man to be a county judge, much less a judge on the second highest court of the land.

I shall be brief, Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Common Cause. I submit it for the RECORD not only because of its content but because I have been critical of Common Cause for not taking a stand on judicial nominees.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMON CAUSE,
Washington, DC, June 24, 1986.

DEAR SENATOR: I write to urge you on behalf of Common Cause to vote against the confirmation of Daniel A. Manion, Esq. to be a judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh District.

Common Cause has rarely opposed any confirmation of any individual Presidential nomination, and has only opposed a judicial nomination once, during the Carter Administration. We have followed and expect to follow this policy regardless of the nominee's ideology. For example, Common Cause did not oppose the nominations of Robert Bork and Antonin Scalia to the U.S. Court of Appeals.

In the case of Mr. Manion, however, we find that he is not qualified to serve in the lifetime judicial position to which he has been nominated. Mr. Manion's professional record and his demonstrated failure to understand the very nature of our constitutionalism reveal his lack of essential qualifications.

A U.S. Court of Appeals requires judges of strong professional training coupled with legal experience of a high quality. Unfortunately Mr. Manion is woefully lacking in those qualifications. Although the American Bar Association Committee found him minimally qualified, a minority judged him "unqualified". A review of the public record does not provide any basis for concluding that Mr. Manion has the qualifications necessary for this job.

Mr. Manion has had almost no experience in dealing with questions of federal law that form a major part of the work of the U.S. Court of Appeals. Of the ten cases listed by him as the "most significant litigated matters which you have personally handled", two involved ordinary highway accidents, two involved claims for breach of warranty on the sale or repair of a single motor vehicle (one of which grew out of a highway accident), and two were land condemnations.

The briefs submitted by Mr. Manion to the Senate Judiciary Committee as evidence of his professional qualifications are of low quality and reveal scant ability either to marshal facts in a manner that brings out the precise legal issues or to present a disposition of the legal issues with clarity and force. Obviously a high degree of these skills is a requisite in a judge of a U.S. Court of Appeals. Mr. Manion has not demonstrated such skills in other ways. He has published nothing in professional journals or scholarly publications. Nor have his sponsors pointed to any other kind of professional experience providing evidence of Mr. Manion's ability to perform the duties of a judge of the Court of Appeals.

Mr. Manion's lack of qualifications is also evident in his basic misunderstanding of the very nature of our Constitution. Mr. Manion's lack of understanding, if not distaste, for our constitutional system was revealed on several occasions by his endorsement of legislation stripping the Supreme Court of jurisdiction in order to circumvent constitutional decisions of which Mr. Manion disapproved. As President Reagan's first Attorney General, William French Smith, wrote in opposing such court-stripping: "The integrity of our system of federal law depends upon single courts of last resort having a final say on the resolution of federal questions. The ultimate result of depriving the Supreme Court of jurisdiction over a class of cases would be that federal law would vary in its impact among the inferior courts."

Mr. Manion's failure to understand the fundamentals of our constitutionalism is also exemplified by his co-sponsoring a bill in the Indiana legislature to encourage public schools in Indiana to post the Ten Commandments, immediately after the U.S. Supreme Court had held such a posting to be unconstitutional. Whatever one's view of the merits of the Court's decision, it was inconsistent with the fundamentals of our constitutionalism for Mr. Manion, a public official sworn to uphold the Constitution, to seek to counteract the constitutional rights of Indiana citizens by legislation encouraging disobedience to the First and Fourteenth Amendments as construed by the Supreme Court.

Mr. Manion's statement that the ruling in the Kentucky case was not a judgment binding on non-parties is equally disturbing. While technically correct, this view is fundamentally wrong in terms of our constitutional system. Constitutionalism depends upon voluntary compliance with binding Supreme Court interpretations, unless there is good reason to believe that the court may soon change its course. There was no reason whatever in this instance. The system would entirely break down if public officials in every state were, like Mr. Manion, to assert freedom to disregard the Constitution as interpreted by the Court until each official was bound by a judgment against him or her. Consider what this would mean in terms of school desegregation or police practices. As Justice Frankfurter wrote in Cooper v. Aaron 358 US 1, 26: "Compliance with decisions of this Court, as the constitutional organ of the supreme Law of the Land, has often, throughout our history, depended on active support by state and local authorities. It presupposes such support. To withhold it, and indeed to use political power to try to paralyze the supreme Law, precludes the maintenance of our federal system."

In 1977 Mr. Manion said about Larry McDonald's book, We Hold These Truths, that, "My personal observation is that it is one of the finest summaries of the history of our country—what has happened in the past, what happened to us and what we have to do about it." The book, in fact, attacked the most important constitutional developments in the past half century.

The men and women who make able federal judges come from a variety of backgrounds and experiences. Although tested legal competence is usually to be desired, a man or woman whose experience in public life has fitted him or her to recognize and understand the basic tenets of our constitutional and legal system may become an effective appellate judge. Mr. Manion fails on both of these counts, lacking both the professional background and the commitment to our constitutional system that is necessary to serve as a federal appellate judge.

For these reasons, Common Cause strongly urges you to oppose Mr. Manion's nomination.

Sincerely,

ARCHIBALD COX,
Chairman.

Mr. SIMON. Let me quote from the letter from the Chicago Council of Lawyers, and I shall in a moment speak of the Chicago Council of Lawyers briefly. The council says in their letter to us, in which they find him not qualified:

Despite the positive information concerning Mr. Manion's personality and baisc competence as a lawyer, the Council is very concerned about the fact that Mr. Manion lacks experience in dealing with questions of federal law and federal constitutional issues. He also lacks experience with the kinds of complex federal litigation which he would have to review as a judge of the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals. Moreover, the quality and extent of Mr. Manion's legal experience even in state court does not demonstrate the high level of legal expertise which the Council feels should be possessed by judges of the Seventh Circuit. Finally, Mr. Manion has not demonstrated any scholarly interest in state and federal law or constitutional issues.

Manion has never argued a case before the Federal circuit court of appeals, never been the lead counsel in a Federal trial court, never published any kind of scholarly writings. As to his briefs we are not being picky, with all due respect to my friend from Utah.

Senator EAGLETON made a magnificant statement earlier this afternoon. He did something that showed some creativity—and we are going to miss Senator EAGLETON in this body—he sent copies of the briefs—and I would again remind this body that I asked the nominee to send his five best briefs—to some legal scholars around the country. Here is one, Cy Vance, former Secretary of State, served under Republican and Democratic administrations. Cy Vance says:

Individually and collectively, these briefs are barely adequate. They are far below the standard of legal analysis and writing required of a Federal appellate judge. Two of the briefs are poorly organized, wordy and hard to follow. Their arguments do not wash. All of the briefs suffer from inadequate attention to spelling, grammar and syntax.

I will not quote from all these letters, but there are just a couple other quotations in these letters that I think are worth reading to the body. Here is one from Dean Griswald, former Solicitor General of this Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator suspend for a moment. It seems that the voice amplification equipment is rubbing against the Senator's coat and there is some background distortion. We want to assure the Senator's remarks are recorded not only for history but also audibly.

Mr. SIMON. We will get another. All right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Much improved.

Mr. SIMON. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from Illinois is once again recognized.

Mr. SIMON. I thank the Chair; I particularly want the Senator from Virginia to hear me because I know he is waiting breathlessly to hear what I have to say to determine how he is going to vote.

Dean Griswald, former Solicitor General, under both a Democratic and Republican President, said in his letter:

I am reminded of a situation which arose some 50 years ago when President Roosevelt appointed as solicitor general, a fine and kindly man who had never had a case in the Federal courts. His lack of experience soon became apparent, causing concern not only in the executive branch but in the Supreme Court. He was replaced by Stanley Reed, who was, of course, an excellent solicitor general and later distinguished Supreme Court Justice. But a judge of the court of appeals, once confirmed and appointed, has life tenure and cannot be replaced. The time to make a distinguished appointment is now.

Lloyd Cutler, one of the distinguished lawyers of our country, sent this response to Senator EAGLETON:

I do not know Mr. Manion. I have no opinion as to his character, integrity or judicial demeanor but based on my review of the briefs he submitted to your committee, I do not believe he possesses the capacity for legal analysis and exposition or the degree of carefulness required for appointment to the Federal bench, especially the Federal appellate bench. If these briefs had been submitted to me by an applicant for a junior position in our law firm I would have voted against offering him a place.

That is pretty powerful stuff.

The Wall Street Journal, June 23, quotes Philip Kurland, professor at the University of Chicago, who they described as a conservative constitutional scholar as saying, "This is probably the worst appointment they've had," talking about the administration.

My good friend from Utah says small town lawyers should not be rejected. My friends, he is not being rejected because he is from a small town.

First of all, South Bend has a population of 107,000 people. I come from a town of Makanda, IL which has 350 people. That is a real small town. Let me just give you a few examples of people who have been approved just recently by the Bar Association, have received a well-qualified rating, much above the rating of this gentleman: Melvin Brunetti from Carson City, NV, population 35,000; Duross Fitzpatrick, from Cochran, GA, population 5,000; Charles Lovell, Great Falls, MT, 58,000; Thomas McAvoy, Binghampton, NY, population 54,000; Alan McDonald from Yakima, WA, population 48,000.

Clearly that is not a factor.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter from the Chicago Council of Lawyers be placed into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CHICAGO COUNCIL OF LAWYERS,
April 9, 1986.

Re Daniel Manion
Senator PAUL SIMON,
Dirksen Senate Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SIMON: The following is the Chicago Council of Lawyers' report on Daniel Manion's qualifications to be a judge on the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

The Chicago Council of Lawyers believes that in order to be found qualified for appointment to the United States Court of Appeals, a candidate must have outstanding intellectual qualifications as demonstrated by performance in practice or scholarship. The most outstanding candidates should have established an exemplary record in both areas.

The Council has conducted an extensive review of Mr. Manion's personal background and legal career. We evaluated written biographical information and examples of his legal writing. The Council also received a list of references from Mr. Manion. This list included lawyers and judges who knew Mr. Manion and who had practiced with or against Mr. Manion. In addition, the Council developed its own list of Indiana lawyers. On March 24, 1986, seven members of the Council's Federal Judicial Evaluation Committee participated in a two-hour conference call with Mr. Manion during which we discussed Mr. Manion's legal background and experience, his judicial philosophy, his sponsorship of creationism legislation, and has views on issues such as the exclusionary rule, abortion, affirmative action, and the handling of criminal appeals.

PERSONAL QUALITIES

Mr. Manion has a high reputation for integrity, conscientiousness, and fairness. The reports from South Bend lawyers also indicate that Mr. Manion has excellent interpersonal skills, and that lawyers who work both with and against him like and respect him. Many of the lawyers to whom we talked also thought that despite his reputation for political conservatism, Mr. Manion would struggle to be fair in ruling on cases which present issues on which he has strong political views.

LEGAL EXPERIENCE

Mr. Manion was admitted to the Indiana Bar in 1973. He then spent eight months in the Indiana Attorney General's office handling criminal appeals and land condemnation cases. Mr. Manion left the Attorney General's office in 1974, when he joined his present firm. Since 1974, he has had a general civil practice consisting primarily of personal injury defense, commercial litigation, and small claims defense work. He has tried numerous small cases in state court. Mr. Manion has participated in twelve trials to varying degrees in federal court; however, he has not yet had the responsibility for being first chair in a federal trial. He told us he has never handled a case in which a federal constitutional issue was involved. He also told us that he has never argued a case in the Seventh Circuit.

The majority of lawyers to whom we talked regarding Mr. Manion's legal experience felt that he was a competent lawyer. A few lawyers told us that Mr. Manion was an outstanding lawyer. All vouched for his forthrightness and his adherence to high ethical standards.

Despite the positive information concerning Mr. Manion's personality and basic competence as a lawyer, the Council is very concerned about the fact that Mr. Manion lacks experience in dealing with questions of federal law and federal constitutional issues. He also lacks experience with the kinds of complex federal litigation which he would have to review as a judge of the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals. Moreover, the quality and extent of Mr. Manion's legal experience even in state court does not demonstrate the high level of legal expertise which the Council feels should be possessed by judges of the Seventh Circuit. Finally, Mr. Manion has not demonstrated any scholarly interest in state and federal law or constitutional issues.

In conclusion, the Chicago Council of Lawyers is not confident that Mr. Manion will be able to deal adequately with the difficult legal issues which are routinely presented to the Seventh Circuit. Based on the foregoing, the Council finds Mr. Manion to be not qualified to be a judge on the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Very truly yours,
ROBERT G. PERKINS,
President.

Mr. SIMON. The Chicago Council of Lawyers has been described by my colleague from Utah as a small group of liberal lawyers. This small group of lawyers happens to be the most active in the city of Chicago, about 1,400 lawyers. They include liberals, conservatives, moderates, people of every hue. The president of that group is a fellow named Bob Perkins from the oldest law firm in the city of Chicago. I cannot think of the name right now, but it was founded by Robert Todd Lincoln. That group of lawyers has approved a number of conservative nominees from this body.

Do you want me to move over to that desk over there? All right.

Just as one example, just recently, they approved Judge Harry Linenwebber, who has been active in the Right to Life movement, who is well-known as a very conservative Republican, former Republican State legislator in Illinois, and a number of others like that. Clearly, that description of the Chicago Council of Lawyers is not an accurate description.

In addition to the statement read by Senator BIDEN on the law school deans, I ask unanimous consent to enter into the RECORD a letter by the dean of the University of Pennsylvania Law School and the dean of the University of Chicago Law School.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 11, 1986.

Hon. ROBERT DOLE,
Majority Leader,
Hon. ROBERT BYRD,
Minority Leader.
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS DOLE AND BYRD: The Senate of the United States will soon consider the nomination of Daniel A. Manion to serve as a Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. We are deeply concerned about the decision.

The federal courts play a critical role in our country's governance structure. The Circuit Courts of Appeal, in particular, are called on to decide complex issues which have substantial impact on the lives of many citizens. It is important that these decisions be made honestly, sensitively, and intelligently. Moreover, they must be made in a way which maintains public respect for the judiciary. That is not an easy task. It can be accomplished only if the President nominates and the Senate confirms persons who combine special qualities of intellect, training in the law, experience in wrestling with relevant questions, breadth of experience, and capacity for exercising reasoned judgment. There are many good people, decent lawyers, who nevertheless do not meet these special standards, and therefore, should not be appointed as judges of a United States Court of Appeals.

We believe that the case has not been made that Daniel A. Manion meets these special standards. The facts developed by the Senate Judiciary Committee do not show the high standards of competence and relevant experience which the public has a right to expect from an appointee to the federal bench. It is particularly disturbing that the Chicago Council of Lawyers, whose committee of investigation included one of our colleagues, concluded that Manion's professional qualifications were inadequate. A minority of the American Bar Association's screening panel also found Manion unqualified.

It is vital to the health of the process by which judges are appointed that the Senate be prepared to withhold consent when the President nominates as a judge a person whose qualifications do not meet the high standards necessary to assure that our courts continue to play a wise and constructive role in the complex task of governing this country. The Manion nomination is an appropriate time to signal the Senate's insistence on the requisite quality of judicial nominees and we urge you to vote against the nomination.

Sincerely,

ROBERT H. MUNDHEIM,
GERHARD CASPER.

Mr. SIMON. The final point I would like to make, Mr. President, to my colleagues is on the point of ideology. Clearly we have ample reasons beyond ideology for rejecting this particular nominee. But I think there are reasons of ideology also. We should not have huge swings in the law. When there is an indication that someone is too far to the right or to the left and is rigid in that position, I believe we have not only the right but the obligation to take a look at those positions.

The law should not be a pendulum swinging back and forth. There ought to be some stability to the law. And clearly in the case of Mr. Manion, he has expressed views that put him beyond the views of at least 97 Members of this body. His comments about the book by Congressman Larry McDonald as one of the finest summaries of the history of our country—and that book clearly has views that are just far, far out—is but one example.

□ 2150

I asked the nominee in the Judiciary Committee about the John Birch Society. I said:

Mr. Manion, I have a letter written by you to the John Birch Society on August 27, 1979 . . . in which you say your members are certainly the people who are on the front line of the fight for constitutional freedom.

The nominee was frankly evasive. When I asked him whether or not he believes what the John Birch Society says, Mr. Manion says: "Senator, I do not have any idea, other than those two things you have mentioned. I couldn't tell you what the policies of the John Birch Society are."

I said: "But you have a general impression?"

I will not go through all of this, but he says: "I don't know what issues, what their stands are on the Constitution or any other issues of current affairs."

I asked: "But you do not have either a plus or a negative impression of the John Birch Society, then?"

Mr. Manion said: "Well, I am not a member or I was not. I guess I have to judge each issue on its own."

Here is a man whose father is one of the cofounders of that organization. I certainly do not want to impose his father's views on him, but I think he has to have some idea whether the John Birch Society represents what he believes or not.

One final point, and that is when he mentioned that he was not a member of the American Bar Association. He has every right not to be a member of the American Bar Association, but I asked him why he was not a member of the American Bar Association. He said he was not a member of the bar assocation because they were sponsoring these exchange visits with the Soviet Union, lawyers in the Soviet Union.

Again, he has every right to do that, and if you were to take each of these in isolation, I think you could defend each of them. But together they provide a mosaic, and that mosaic is not one that suggests that here is someone who ought to be on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Again, the question is, Do we have someone who is a stellar member of the bar, who ought to be approved? The answer clearly is that he should not be approved. I think the evidence is overwhelming. I hope this body does what it should do.

Let me add that I hope we resist the overtures from the White House. I understand that power that is in the White House. I understand that they have favors to grant. But we have an obligation not simply to this administration but to the future, and as we face our obligation to the future, I think it is very clear that we should reject this nominee.

I thank my colleagues.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, my affable and innovative colleague from the State of Utah, who, with surprising insight, labels me a scholastic out of the Thomist School, points out——

Mr. HATCH. Not out of the Thomist School. The Stylites School—St. Simeon Stylites. He was a saint. That was quite a compliment.

Mr. BIDEN. I thought the Senator referred to me as a scholastic scholar, and I wanted to thank him for that reference. My mother would thank you, particularly I hope she is watching.

However, I must say that I have never seen anyone who can, with a smile, do to an argument and/or a colleague such damage.

I should like to respond, if I may, to a couple of points that my distinguished colleague made.

He pointed out, for the purpose of—and I think it is a reasonable position for him to aspire to—for the purpose of discrediting the 40 law school deans—he knows them better than I. I know none of them. I may know one or two of them. I do not know that I do. He pointed out that they are all liberals. It is amazing, this liberal conspiracy that abounds in this country. They are all liberals, and they have made three tragic mistakes in their letter.

Mr. HATCH. Four.

Mr. BIDEN. Four. Excuse me.

One of those four is their reference to the fact that he seemed reluctant to accept the Supreme Court decision such as Brown against Board of Education as the law of the land, saying he preferred to view them as stare de-cisis, which must be followed by the Federal courts.

On page 41 of the transcript, Mr. Manion says:

I think that Supreme Court decisions, as they interpret the Constitution, does establish what we call stare decisis; and that is that those are precedents that do establish the interpretation for that particular issue or that particular part of the Constitution. Some call it the law of the land; I think that is kind of a term that is just used. I would rather call it a precedent that must be followed in the courts.

Then, on page 66, further commenting on this area, he said:

If it is more widespread, if it applies to laws, and there are similar laws throughout the country, the other laws would be affected by that Supreme Court decision, and any lower court where those other laws where challenged would be bound by the Supreme Court decision, assuming the laws were the same laws.

Now, it seems to me that the 40 law school deans were correct in making the distinction here, the distinction that I believe Mr. Manion made, and that is that he saw the Brown decision as stare decisis and not law of the land. "Stare decisis" means that lower courts had to follow it but that the Supreme Court would not necessarily, nor should they necessarily, be bound by the Brown versus Board of Education decision. That is the point that was being made here.

The reason for that point being made is that Mr. Manion—and I will not cause the Official Reporters of the U.S. Senate to have apoplexy by suggesting that this entire book be put in the RECORD, but I will read a few excerpts from the book "We Hold These Truths," by Lawrence Patten McDonald.

Mr. Manion interviewed Dr. McDonald in 1977 during a radio program sponsored by the "Manion Forum," a show he sometimes hosted. At that time, this nominee endorsed "We Hold These Truths," the book I have in my hand, with the following phrase:

My personal observation is that it is one of the finest summaries of the history of our country—what has happened in the past, what happens to us, and what we have to do about it.

Further quoting:

In your book, you bring down some very justified criticism of the Supreme Court that interprets the Constitution.

Further quoting:

We hope that other people in Congress, as well as all of the people listening to this program, will read your book, "We Hold These Truths," so that they can realize that solutions to our problems are available.

This is one of the more fascinating books I have read, and I must admit that I have not read it all, relating to an interpretation of the Bill of Rights, the Constitution, the law of the land.

Mr. Manion, in praise of this book as such an insightful view of American history—I assume he read the book—said, referring to page 94 of the book:

In May, 1954 (Brown v. School Board), the Warren Court, by unanimous vote, overturned a Kansas state law under which school boards at Topeka and elsewhere were operating racially segregated public schools, providing separate but equal facilities for each racial group, in conformity with the separate-but-equal doctrine. The Warren Court said it had concluded, from looking into books and statements by sociologists and psychologists, that segregating black children from white children in public schools is bad for blacks, no matter what kind of facilities are provided, and no matter what the Fourteenth Amendment or any other part of the Constitution provides. The Warren Court claimed authority under the Fourteenth Amendment to hear and decide the Brown case, but acknowledged that the Amendment was not intended to affect the operation of public schools.

All previous Supreme Court changes of the Constitution had been twistings to make it yield authority for the President and Congress to do anything that met with Supreme Court approval. In the Brown case, the Court arrogated unto itself authority that was superior not only to that of Congress and the President but also to that of the Constitution itself. As expanded and developed by later Court decisions, as followed by lower courts (both federal and state), and as enforced by federal legislative and executive power, the 1954 Brown decision means that the Supreme Court has the power to order any person or group of persons anywhere in the United States to do anything a majority of the Court Justices might, at the moment, think is the sociologically correct thing to be done. It has this power no matter what the Constitution says or the people (including the Members of Congress and President) might want. The Supreme Court may reverse its own far-reaching decisions at any time, because its decisions are not based on the Constitution, but on books and other influences operating upon the Justices. That is the inevitable consequence of the Warren Court's revolutionary 1954 decision.

Now I listened to his statement when he made it about the distinction between the law of the land and stare decisis, not a resounding endorsement of what all Americans today take as a basic, fundamental law of the land that separate but equal is unequal.

I read his statements, transcripts of the programs where he endorses this book and many ideas of similar novelty contained in the book.

The book goes on talking about equality of voting. It says:

Four other constitutional amendments have damaged electoral processes in a subtle but dangerous way.

Wait until you hear what these dangerous subtleties are.

The Fifteenth Amendment (approved in 1870) prohibits State or Federal abridgement of the right to vote because of race.

My comment: Outrageous principle, is it not?

The Nineteenth Amendment (adopted in 1920)—

My insertion, another subtle but dangerous thing.

The Nineteenth Amendment extends the same prohibition to sex.

The Twenty-Fourth Amendment (ratified in 1964) prohibits poll taxes as voter qualifications for Federal elections.

My insertion, is that not outrageous?

Back to quoting:

The Twenty-Sixth Amendment—

The fourth of these dangerous things.

(approved in 1971) prohibits the abridgement of the right to vote because of age, of any person 18 years old or older.

My insertion, radical view.

Back to quoting the book.

All of these are cause amendments—

C-a-u-s-e amendments—

serving some political or sociological cause which had organized pressures and public support behind them; but they all were unnecessary.

Let me tell you what is unnecessary now. It was unnecessary to say you could not abridge the right to vote based on race. McDonald says that is unnecessary.

The 19th amendment—it was unnecessary to say women should have the vote, could not prohibit them from voting, as I might add we did until this amendment was passed. That was unnecessary.

Another unnecessary and dangerous thing that occurred is that we passed the 26th amendment saying those radical 18-year-old kids would have a right to vote. Oh, but would they vote.

And also the 24th amendment that does another dangerous thing. It gets rid of a poll tax. What an outrageous notion, how dangerous?

Quoting from the book,

If sufficiently valid to animate authentic public support the causes could have been served as fully and well at the State level without damaging the Federal Constitution.

Damaging the Federal Constitution to guarantee by amendment that blacks, women, and 18-year-olds should be able to vote—damaging the Constitution, saying there should be no Federal poll tax.

There are other provisions, and I will not keep the Chair up much longer and I realize we are going fairly late here, but there are other instances where quotations, and I am not taking it out of context—if anybody challenges I will be delighted to read the whole book tonight and educate the American public listening if there are any insomniacs out there and/or anyone in here as to what Mr. Manion cites as one of the finest summaries of the history of our country and a book that will give us solutions to our problems.

Hold on folks—salvation is on the way.

Reading on page 40 of the book talking about the Bill of Rights, the author said:

But in no case, in any jurisdiction, did due process mean a court looking into the fairness or constitutionality of the law in question. That was another legal matter entirely.

Translated, that means that the argument is that in this fine interpretation of the Constitution, the due process clause does not allow a court to go in and say, does that State law abridge due process?

Again, when we say does it warrant us asking Mr. Manion about whether or not this book is something he subscribes to, asking him to explain whether or not when he said the things he said about this book he was merely being gracious or polite or what was he doing?

I would assume that if we had a nominee who believed all these things, and I do not know that Mr. Manion does, but if we had a nominee who believed all these things, I doubt there would be anybody on the floor or very few people on this floor who would come to defend the principles outlined in this book.

To suggest that—i wonder if there is anybody here—possibly the distinguished colleague who just walked by me might wish to defend the assertion that the 15th amendment, the amendment guaranteeing the blacks, women, and 18-year-olds have the right to vote is a dangerous precedent.

(Mr. SIMPSON assumed the chair.)

Mr. BIDEN. Let us assume that Mr. Manion held these views for the sake of discussion. Would anyone in here say that the Senator from Delaware was making ideological argument to suggest that a man or woman who held those views should not be on the Supreme Court, the circuit court of appeals, or the district court of the Federal judiciary?

I would think it would be totally within the rights of any Senator here to suggest that maybe we should not put a man or a woman on the Federal bench who held those views, totally out of the main stream of American politics or who views decisions relating to those guarantees as merely stare decisis and not the law of the land. I am not sure that we would not say maybe that person should not be on the court.

I doubt whether or not if someone came forward and made the argument that we should eliminate one of the branches of Government, which would be a reasonable thing—other nations do not all have three coequal branches of government—I suspect if someone came along and said we should eliminate one of them or we should ignore one, we would say here notwithstanding the fact he or she may be a decent, honorable person, maybe we should not put that person on the court.

I mean, you know, there are certain basic things we accept, I hope.

And it was the lukewarm, at best, endorsement of the Brown decision that gave pause to some of us, coupled with the assertions made about how good this book was, coupled with the assertions made about the John Birch Society, coupled with the way in which the nominee answered the question relating to whether or not he viewed the Brown decision as the law of the land, coupled with the change in testimony under oath, without at least this Senator knowing about it, that do at least raise the question of whether or not, notwithstanding everything else, there would be reason enough on the merits of what I have just stated to vote against this nominee.

But again let us go back to the comment that was made by many here today that this nominee has no significant experience in the Federal courts.

□ 2210

My worthy opponent in this matter, the distinguished Senator from Utah, cites several cases in which the nominee is now lead counsel in Federal courts. Diversity jurisdiction is one of those. Does anyone know what diversity jurisdiction means? It means one of those cases you are arguing whether or not which State court has jurisdiction, to go to a Federal court to decide that. Not what you would call a constitutional issue.

I do not know of any very complicated cases, great antitrust cases, complicated cases related to constitutional principles, significant cases relating to any other aspects of the practice of law that Mr. Manion has been involved in.

Now, again, I do not think it is unreasonable to suggest that someone who is going to be dealing with decisions we cannot even fully comprehend at this moment, that he is likely to be, if he reaches his life expectancy—which I sincerely hope he does—he is likely to be 30 years from now—if he is confirmed, 30 years from now brings us well into the next century—he is going to be making decisions about things such as cloning of genes, decisions about relating to phenomenal technological advances, complicated new corporate arrangements, international law impacting upon trade and commerce, questions about biomedical technology that take us far beyond where we are today.

It seems to me we have a right to ask whether or not, in his tenure as a legislator, whether or not, in his practice of the law, whether or not, in his academic background or whether or not, in his personal dealings on matters that are pro bono that he is involved in, he has demonstrated the ability to grasp, grapple with, sort out, and adjudicate complex questions and issues.

Now, again, it is not the burden upon the Senator from Delaware to prove that he does not possess those capabilities. It is the burden of those suggesting he should be a judge—particularly in light of the fact that so many diverse peopl- have raised the question of his capability—to prove that he possesses these qualities.

I have heard that his fellow practitioners liked him. I have heard that he has been in Federal court a couple of times, or several times. I have heard that he is from a small town—we keep using the small town. I do not know, the Senator from Utah acts like he is from New York or California. I do not know where he is getting off talking about small towns. His State is like mine, real small. His State is like mine. I do not know that Salt Lake City—I do not know whether there is any town bigger than South Bend—where I come from, South Bend is a big town, not a small town.

I hear that "small town" lawyers like him. I hear that he is an affable fellow. I hear he is a decent, nice guy. Fine. Does that meet the burden of demonstrating a significant grasp of the Constitution? What is there in his entire background that he ever indicates—other than what he said to us under oath or he said in his radio program—that he has any knowledge, comprehension, or understanding of the Constitution?

Well, he graduated from law school. That is one thing. He passed the bar examination. That is another thing.

What else is there? Has he tried any cases? Not that I am aware of. Maybe he has and has not told us about it.

The only times I know he has commented on consequential decisions of constitutional import have been times that leave one at least wondering about either his commitment to or depth of knowledge about it, including this whole controversy over whether or not he sponsored and/or voted for a law that, in fact, was unconstitutional.

You know, the Arkansas Legislature voted unanimously some years earlier on a law that was later declared totally unconstitutional. Other legislatures have done that. It is called political pressure—political pressure to yield to the whims of the moment.

The State of Delaware Legislature, my State, prior to the Supreme Court ruling, said separate but equal was equal and voted that way; voted for an amendment that kept in place in our constitution laws saying separate but equal was equal because it was very unpopular to do otherwise.

I have no doubt in my mind that it is very unpopular in Indiana or Delaware to vote against the posting of the Ten Commandments. I believe strongly in the Ten Commandments. I am a Christian. I practice my religion. I believe in it deeply.

But it is one thing to believe that, to adhere to, to attempt to adhere to, to teach your children the Ten Commandments and to kneel down at night and pray with them, and another thing to say that, under our Constitution, they should, can, or must be posted in the classroom.

But, admittedly, it would be very unpopular to vote against that in any legislative body in the country. But it would also be unconstitutional to do so.

So every time Mr. Manion has spoken to that that I can find, every time he has been involved in anything that mentions the Constitution of the United States of America, or some aspect relating to it, he has left me with less than overwhelming confidence about his grasp, understanding, and devotion to it.

Yet we are told he is a decent man. We are told he is a man that is liked by his colleagues. We are told that he graduated from a prestigious university, which he did.

Well, I do not know whether that meets the burden of demonstrating he knows something about the Constitution, especially, I might add, once again, when he even countenances this bunch of—how can I say it—this very ineloquent document called "We Hold These Truths," one of the most absurd renditions of constitutional history and theory that has been written, in this Senator's opinion. It is preposterous.

How someone who we are about to put on the circuit court of appeals, assuming they are aware of this, would not say, "Mr. McDonald, this is garbage," I do not know.

Let us assume—and I say and mean this with all sincerity. Congressman McDonald was tragically killed in the bombing of the Korean aircraft along with his family.

But, notwithstanding that, assume today, for the sake of discussion, that we had a nominee before us and we asked him to read this book and then comment on it; come back 2 days later, after having read it, and say: "What do you think of this book?" this nominee for the curcuit court of appeals.

And he then said to us, after reading it—and I read you some excerpts from it, and I can assure you they are consistent with the entirety of the book—he came back and said:

> Well, my personal observation, Senators, is it is one of the finest summaries in the history of our country. What has happened in the past, what has happened to us, what they have done to us, those dangerous things, the 15th, 16th, 18th, 25th amendments, and what we have to do about those things that happened.

What would we say? What would you all say? Would you say, if then, JOE BIDEN said, "Well, wait a minute now. I am not sure I want to put you on the Federal bench interpreting my rights for the next 30 years."

Would you turn to me and say: "Oh, BIDEN, you are nothing but an ideological wag, a Democrat who is just trying to stop good, solid conservative minds from sitting on the bench"?

□ 2220

Would you say that to me? I respectfully suggest you would join me in saying you are right, BIDEN. This nice, affable, large town, medium town lawyer who has done some courageous things in his personal life and overcome some tragedy should not be on the bench especially when you along with me would have voted for 266 or 268 of the previous nominees that came up. I would invite my colleague—by the way, this is not coming up at the last minute. This was raised at the hearing, my colleague from Utah and all my other colleagues had the chance. I am sure they took it home and read it, every word of it—I am being facetious. But I invite anyone to come and tell me after they have read this book that in fact from their personal observations this is one of the finest summaries in the history of our country, or that it represents justified criticism of the Supreme Court of the United States of America.

This is crazy.

You know, we have a right, and an obligation to deal with the philosophy of a nominee as much as the President does.

I remind my learned colleague from Utah that up until literally the last moment in a compromise move in order to get the Constitution passed, up until the last moment the draft of the Constitution said "The President of the United States shall have nothing to do with choosing the Federal judges". It said it by its absense. It said that was the province of the Congress, in this body. But in a compomise at the end we said, well, the President will choose and we will dispose of it.

So, it became part of the Constitution with advise and consent. Then the President comes along, this President, a fine, decent, honorable man, who will go down in history as one of the most popular Presidents in American history, and I might note parenthetically with whom every public opinion poll shows that the majority of people disagree with him on his social agenda but agree with him on everything else—goes out and sets as his litmus test not only the choice of generally conservative people but people who agree with him on the very delicate issues which is his right to do of his social agenda, a social agenda he has not been able to get passed through the Judiciary Committee controlled by Republicans, has not been able to get past the U.S. Senate controlled by Republicans, has not been able to get past the U.S. House of Representatives controlled by Democrats, and is not law now because the American people do not want it to be law.

He comes along, and he says, "I want these people on the bench. I want Manion." He chooses them and he has made no bones about it, as Mr. Meese as his chief chooser makes no bones about it, that there is a certain test they all must pass relating to ideology. Then he says when we dare raise the issue of whether or not the philosophy of a nominee is within the mainstream of American public opinion, he says, "Shame on you, no ideology; OK for me but not you. I can apply litmus tests, but don't you do that."

Look, if in fact Mr. Manion who everyone agrees lacks a significant experience dealing with the constitutional questions, lacks total experience, totally lacks experience, but let us just say significant, a man who has never served in the court before, a man who does not come from a scholarly background, a man who has not held a position of Senator, Governor, Attorney General dealing with complex issues, if in fact he had come along and said when asked what he thinks about Brown versus Board of Education, if in fact he had said Brown versus Board of Education is law of the land, it is in fact a principle that is now enshrined in the Constitution, our view of the Constitution, one which I strongly support and one which I think was long overdue in coming—if he said with regard to this book when he interviewed Mr. McDonald: "Mr. McDonald, your book is replete with errors and your view of the direction this country should be taking is one that I strongly disagree with, I happen to believe that the amendment giving blacks, guaranteeing blacks the right to vote, the amendment guaranteeing that 18-year-olds can vote, the amendment that abolished once and for all the poll tax, the dreaded poll tax, that they are good things, not dangerous things"—if he had said those things I would have, notwithstanding the fact that he has no experience; think well, maybe he at least has a gut feeling and understanding about the Constitution.

But he did not say that. There is nothing on his record to indicate a scholarly knowledge of, or a practical knowledge of, the application of constitutional law, and the only time he speaks to it he speaks to it in such gibberish that he is either so sensitive to other people's feeling that he is willing to let basic constitutional principal go undefended, or he is sympathetic to the views that are expressed, or perish the thought, were he on the court he would have reluctance following the principles.

Look, you know what is really at stake here? What is at stake here is not Daniel Manion. My colleague from the State of Alabama said at another matter, "When there is a choice between an individual's aspiration to the court and the Constitution, I must side with the Constitution." What is at stake here is not the nomination of Daniel Manion. What is at stake here is what we, the U.S. Senate, are about to say about the Federal courts. What is at stake here is how each of us feels about the role and the standing of the second highest court in the land, the circuit court of appeals. We can adopt a principle that in fact we have such a low regard for the court we can put people on the court for whom we have grave doubt about their abilities. We can say that. We have a right to say that. But I hope we would be ashamed to say that.

We can say that the circuit court of appeals does not demand excellence. We can say that. We have a right to. But shame on us. We can say that we will take a chance on putting on the circuit court of appeals someone who has failed to demonstrate excellence.

□ 2230

We can say that.

But what does it say we think about the Federal court system?

You know, the American Bar Association has been mentioned here a number of times in terms of its qualifications. The guide, and all it is is a guide—we are not bound by an ABA decision. If they say the nominee is totally unqualified, we can reject that. If they say they are highly qualified, we can reject that. Our job is to look beyond the recommendation.

As I look beyond the recommendation of the ABA, as I look beyond the recommendation of Mr. Manion's colleagues from a large size town of South Bend, as I look beyond the recommendation of the former president of the institution from which Mr. Manion graduated, I see a man who should not be on the circuit court of appeals.

When we decide on how we are going to vote on Mr. Manion, whether or not we are being philosophers or just simple U.S. Senators, we have the unpleasant task of saying to our colleagues and to the country what we think about the court based on who we decide should be on the court. All across America people have spoken about what they thought about the court, the standards which they believe are required.

In editorials, in letters, in comments and references relating to some of what Mr. Manion has produced. I do not believe Mr. Manion should be a judge, period. I do not believe Mr. Manion has been completely forthright with us in terms of his recollection of events. I do not believe Mr. Manion had any right to materially change, as I believe he did, the transcript relative to what he had said.

I do not believe Mr. Manion has the excellence that should be demanded of nominees for the circuit court of appeals.

I do not believe Mr. Manion has demonstrated his ability to write with clarity and judgment on a court where the only thing he gets to do is write.

I do not believe Mr. Manion ought to be in a position where notwithstanding any good intentions he may have, he will, in fact, do the court justice and shed great promise and pride upon his ability.

I do not believe we are doing anybody a favor, most of all Mr. Manion, putting him on the court, notwithstanding the fact that I am sure he would feel that way.

So, as I conclude my comments, I would say that we who oppose Mr. Manion have a right to do it and are correct in our doing it on three fronts: One, the lack of demonstrable capabilities required of the court; two, a lack of clarity relating to his memory; and three, his apparent, in the absence of anything else, views and interpretations of certain aspects of constitutional law.

I yield the floor and will respond if need be to anything the Senator from Utah may have to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would be very loath to say anything at this late hour for fear there might be a response. I will say that I have enjoyed listening to the distinguished Senator, my colleague from Delaware. I think much of what he has said can be responded to and I think we have responded to it earlier this evening.

I ask unanimous consent to place into the RECORD at this point a legal analysis of Mr. Manion's briefs which has been prepared by the Department of Justice, which I think may answer some of the questions which have been raised this evening.

I believe that all of the objections to Mr. Manion have been answered and certainly can be answered in much greater detail. But we will leave that for another time and another place.

I just hope that our colleagues realize that this is a good man, found by his legal community to be a good man, one who is capable of performing this task. I am not saying that there are not others who are equally or better capable than he is. That is always the case in every nomination. But the President does support Mr. Manion.

I believe he is not only capable but I go along with the attorneys in this area, with Father Hesburgh, the president of the University of Notre Dame and other noted authorities that we have quoted, including Democrats and Republicans, who have done so in a bipartisan way. I hope that our colleagues will support Mr. Manion's nomination and support the President in submitting him.

I ask unanimous consent that the matter I referred to be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEGAL ANALYSIS OF MANION'S BRIEFS

Some opposing the confirmation of Daniel A. Manion to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit suggest that Mr. Manion cannot spell. Others claim his legal briefs do not reveal sufficient substantive quality.

As this Department has indicated previously, these arguments against Mr. Manion are baseless. Many who rely upon such assertions do so as a pretext for opposing Mr. Manion's nomination on ideological or partisan grounds. To further illustrate this point, this Department has reviewed Mr. Manion's legal work in several recent cases in light of the criticisms made of this same work by the so-called "Chicago Council of Lawyers," a small liberal bar group headed by Abner Mikva's former campaign manager.

Before focusing on specific cases, we wish to note that of all the cases reviewed by the "Council," Mr. Manion was successful in all but one. To avoid any actual or apparent unfairness on our part, we start with the critique of the one case in which a decision unfavorable to Mr. Manion's client was rendered.

Bearman v. University of Notre Dame (Mr. Manion represented the University of Notre Dame).

In Bearman, the plaintiff sued the University of Notre Dame for injuries she received while attending a football game. Ms. Bearman alleged that the University was negligent in allowing an intoxicated fan to fall on her and break her leg. The trial court summarily entered judgment for the University; the Indiana Court of Appeals reversed, finding that the plaintiff should have been given an opportunity to present her case to the jury. The two briefs under discussion here are briefs Mr. Manion filed in behalf of the University in an effort to sustain the initial judgment of the trial court. The first is a "Petition for Transfer" to the Indiana Supreme Court.[1] The second brief is Mr. Manion's "Memorandum in Support of Appellee's Petition for Rehearing," which was filed in the intermediate appellate court, and subsequently included as an attachment to the Petition.

The "Council" reviewed Mr. Manion's briefs, and essentially tried to second-guess Mr. Manion's handling of this case. The "Council" claimed (somewhat ungrammatically) that the briefs did "not articulate in the most effective fashions [sic] the reasons for reversal of the Bearman court's opinion." For the reasons set forth below, we believe that the "Chicago Council's" opinion both mistakes Indiana law and misperceives the factual context of the case.

The "Council" advanced two major objections. First, they thought that Mr. Manion's briefs would have been more convincing to the Indiana Supreme Court if they had emphasized the law from states other than Indiana. This would certainly be a curious proposition to argue to anyone experienced in state litigation. Even a cursory review of the Indiana Rules of Appellate Procedure demonstrates that this proposition is contrary to Indiana procedural law. Rule 11 sets forth the grounds on which a petition for transfer must be based.[2] They include:

---

[1] A petition for transfer is much like a petition for certiorari in the federal system.

[2] A petitioner is permitted to depart from this list only for a demonstrated "special need." See Baker v. Fisher, 296 N.E. 2d 882, 883 (Ind. 1973).

(a) That the opinion or memorandum decision of the Court of Appeals contravenes a ruling precedent of the [Indiana] Supreme Court,

• • • • •

(c) That there is a conflict between the opinion or memorandum decision and a prior opinion of the [Indiana] Court of Appeals stating concisely the conflict and opinion in which it occurs. . . .

Ind. Code Ann. AP. 11(B)(1) (Burns 1984).

The stated grounds do not include an argument that the law of other jurisdictions is somehow better than Indiana's. Mr. Manion properly emphasized prior Indiana decisions.[3]

Second, the "Council" suggests a "better" argument than the one Mr. Manion employed. Mr. Manion pointed out that the defendant University had never had an incident of this type in its long history of sponsoring football games.[4] Thus, he argued, past experience demonstrated that it was reasonable for the University not to anticipate such problems. Relying upon substantial Indiana precedent, Mr. Manion argued that the University was under no duty to guard against or control the actions of individual fans. See Memorandum in Support of Appellee's Petition for Rehearing at 5.

The "Council" thought Mr. Manion should have argued that the very character of college football games is such that one should not expect drunken behavior. Apart from displaying a certain heartwarming innocence, this argument is not obviously superior to Mr. Manion's. It is instead a strained attempt at second-guessing Mr. Manion's handling of the case. Given the inaccurate and the unmeritorious nature of the "Chicago Council's" comments, we think they have no relevance to a confirmation proceeding in the United States Senate.

True, Mr. Manion was unsuccessful in this appellate proceeding, and ultimately on remand, after a jury trial handled by one of Mr. Manion's associates, judgment was entered against the University. That fact, however, probably says more about the need for tort reform than Mr. Manion's advocacy.

Indiana v. Sumney, Mr. Manion represented Mr. Sumney; Mr. Manion prevailed).

The "Council" criticizes Mr. Manion for using contractions and colloquialisms in this land condemnation suit in which Mr. Manion challenged successfully the sufficiency of the State's condemnation award. (Mr. Manion secured and sustained on appeal a jury award of $75,000 in a case where the State offered only $10,000). Once again, however, the "Council's" elitism ignores Indiana practice. The Supreme Court of Indiana, itself, uses the expressions which the "Council" finds objectionable. See. e.g., Bieghler v. Indiana, 481 N.E.2d 78, 83 (Ind. 1985) (diminutives); Murphy v. Indiana, 477 N.E.2d 266, 269 (Ind. 1985) (contractions); Anderson v. Indiana, 466 N.E.2d 27, 29, 30 (Ind. 1984) (contractions); Baker v. Fisher, 296 N.E.2d 882, 883 (Ind. 1973) ("most any"). No doubt the "Council" would agree that a lawyer should not be "more correct" than the Supreme Court.

The "Council" similarly misses the point when it criticizes Mr. Manion's brief for "rigidly follow[ing] the form of the appellant's brief." Both appellant and Mr. Manion followed the rather precise form required by Indiana Rule of Appellate Procedure 8.3. See Ind. Code Ann. AP. 8.3.(A), (B) (Burns 1984). Apparently, the "Chicago Council" did not bother to research Indiana law before they leveled their criticisms at Mr. Manion.

Finally, the "Council's" gratuitous one-liner, "[t]he brief is neither clear nor forceful," is simply wrong. The brief contains numerous subheadings to assist the reader. See, e.g., Brief of Appellee, at 10, 17, 19, 20.[5] Most Indiana lawyers would find the clarity and force of the brief to be amply illustrated by Mr. Manion's success in the matter.

Culver Educational Foundation v. Indiana Civil Rights Commission (Mr. Manion represented Culver; Mr. Manion prevailed)

In this case, the "Council" grudgingly admits that Mr. Manion's brief "reflects some aptitude for analyzing a legal issue and developing a reasonable argument concerning that issue." However, once again, the "Council" gratuitously asserts that the brief does not "communicate Mr. Manion's arguments in any effective manner." Once again, this is simply false. Mr. Manion's brief contains numerous headings and subheadings to assist the reader. In fact, such subheadings appear on virtually every page. See, e.g., Hearing Brief of Petitioner at 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11.

Mr. Manion likewise cites extensive caselaw to his advantage and includes appropriate cases from the United States Supreme Court. Moreover, the fact that Mr. Manion cites recent cases (including one which had been handed down only two months earlier, Andre v. Bendix Corp., 774 F.2d 786 (7th Cir. 1985)) indicates that the brief was thoroughly researched. See Hearing Brief of Petitioner at 4.

Both the "Council" and this Department reviewed the briefs in several additional cases. While Mr. Manion won all of them, the "Council" disregards substance and instead merely notes that the briefs contain typographical errors. Based on these errors, the "Council" argues that Mr. Manion cannot spell. This argument is at best disingenuous, and at worst, condescending. These so-called spelling, grammatical and "syntactical" errors are really just garden variety typographical errors. True, they should have been discovered and corrected. However, busy people involved in important matters frequently delegate proofreading to others—and often are disappointed with the result. The various spelling, grammatical and syntactical errors in the attached "Dear Colleague" letter provide a good example. Certainly, this Department does not mean to impugn the abilities of those Senators who authored this letter. Such a leap in logic would be terribly unfair. It is a similar unfairness that we ask you not to visit upon Daniel A. Manion.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I would like to ask unanimous consent that the letter from the deans be inserted in the RECORD.

(The letter is printed earlier in today's RECORD.)

Mr. BIDEN. I have nothing further to say on Mr. Manion until tomorrow morning, except to suggest that the only reason we have kept the Senate in this late, I say to my distinguished colleague from Wyoming, is because tomorrow morning we will only have about 15 minutes to 1 hour to discuss this issue. That is why we went as late as we have. The Senator from Delaware, as everyone knows, would long ago have been on a train going back to his small town in Wilmington, DE, but for that.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is that a promise?

Mr. BIDEN. That is a promise, if the Senator will vote no. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. HATCH]. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I do know that the hour is late, obviously, and the occupant of the chair has been very patient. The leadership appreciates that. The leadership also appreciates the going forward with some of the material tonight so it does not take us on into the late hours tomorrow afternoon. That is a good prospect for us and I appreciate that.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, after conferring with the acting minority leader, I would like to inquire if he is in a position to pass on any of the following calendar items: Calendar item 677, S. 2147 and Calendar item No. 689, S. 2095.

Mr. BIDEN. There is no objection on this side, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the calendar items just identified be considered en bloc and passed en bloc and all committee-reported amendments be considered agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROCUREMENT CONTRACTS FOR CERTAIN NOT-FOR-PROFIT ORGANIZATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2147) to extend the authorization for not-for-profit organizations operated in the interest of handicapped and blind individuals to receive procurement contracts under the Small Business Act, which had been reported from the Committee on [3] Mr. Manion did argue, as a third ground for transfer, that the lower court erroneously decided a question of first impression under Indiana law (See Rule 11(b)). On that point, he properly devoted over three pages to the law of other jurisdictions. See Appellee's Petition for Transfer, at 2; Memorandum in Support of Appellee's Petition for Rehearing, at 7-10.

[4] The intermediate appellate court had relied on Comment (f) to the Restatement of Torts (Second) 344 (1965). That comment states in relevant part:

[A defendant] may, however, know or have reason to know, from past experience, that there is a likelihood of conduct on the part of third persons in general which is likely to endanger the safety of the visitor, even though he has no reason to expect it on the part of any particular individual. If the place or character of his business, or his past experience, is such that he should reasonably anticipate careless or criminal conduct on the part of third persons, either generally or at some particular time, he may be under a duty to take precautions against it, and to provide a reasonably sufficient number of servants to afford a reasonable protection.

[5] Likewise the "Council's" allegation that Mr. Manion speculates on "possible" testimony is rather disingenuous. It is clear from context that Mr. Manion is simply exploring hypothetical questions in order to rebut appellant's arguments. See, e.g., Brief of Appellee at 8, 14.

Small Business, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That section 15(c) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1) As used in this subsection:

"(A) The term 'Committee' means the Committee for Purchase from the Blind and Other Severely Handicapped established under section 1 of the Act entitled 'An Act to create a Committee on Purchases of Blind-made Products, and for other purposes', approved June 25, 1938 (41 U.S.C. 46).

"(B) The term 'public or private organization for the handicapped' has the same meaning given such term in section 3(e).

"(C) The term 'handicapped individual' has the same meaning given such term in section 3(f).

"(2)(A) During each of the fiscal years 1987 through 1991, public or private organizations for the handicapped shall be eligible to participate in programs authorized under this section in an aggregate amount for each year of not more than $50,000,000.

"(B) In each of the fiscal years 1987 through 1991, no more than $8,000,000 of the $50,000,000 authorized for participation by subparagraph (A) may be placed on the procurement list maintained by the Committee pursuant to section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to create a Committee on Purchases of Blind-made Products, and for other purposes', approved June 25, 1938 (41 U.S.C. 47).

"(3) The Administrator shall monitor and evaluate such participation.

"(4)(A) Not later than 10 days after the announcement of a proposed award of a contract by an agency or department to a public or private organization for the handicapped, a for-profit small business concern that has experienced or is likely to experience severe economic injury as the result of the proposed sward may file an appeal of the proposed award with the administrator.

"(B) If such a concern files an appeal of a proposed award under subparagraph (A) and the Administrator, after consultation with the Executive Director of the Committee, finds that the concern has experienced or is likely to experience severe economic injury as the result of the proposed award, not later than 30 days after the filing of the appeal, the Administrator shall require each agency and department having procurement powers to take such action as may be appropriate to alleviate economic injury sustained or likely to be sustained by the concern.

"(5) Each agency and department having procurement powers shall report to the Office of Federal Procurement Policy each time a contract subject to paragraph (2)(A) is entered into, and shall include in its report the amount of the next higher bid submitted by a for-profit small business concern. The Office of Federal Procurement Policy shall collect data reported under the preceding sentence through the Federal procurement data system and shall report to the Administration which shall notify all such agencies and departments when the maximum amount of awards authorized under paragraph (2)(A) has been made during any fiscal year.

"(6) For the purpose of this subsection, a contract may be awarded only if at least 75 percent of the direct labor performed on each item being produced under the contract in the sheltered workshop or performed in providing each type of service under the contract by the sheltered workshop is performed by handicapped individuals.".

SEC. 2. Not later than September 30, 1990, the General Accounting Office shall prepare a report describing the impact that contracts awarded under section 15(c) of the Small Business Act have had on for-profit small business concerns for fiscal years 1987 through 1989. The report shall be transmitted to the Senate Committee on Small Business and the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 3. There is established within the Small Business Administration a task force on purchases from the blind and severely handicapped which shall consist of one representative of the small business community appointed by the Administrator of the Small Business Administration and one individual knowledgeable in the affairs of or experienced in the work of sheltered workshops appointed by the Executive Director of the Committee for Purchase from the Blind and Other Severely Handicapped established under section 1 of the Act entitled 'An Act to create a Committee on Purchases of Blind-made Products and for other purposes', approved June 25, 1938 (41 U.S.C. 46). The task force shall meet at least once every six months for the purpose of reviewing the award of contracts under section 15(c) of the Small Business Act and recommending to the Small Business Administration such administrative or statutory changes as it deems appropriate.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 2147, legislation which would reauthorize the eligibility of sheltered workshops operating for the benefit of the blind and handicapped to compete for Federal Government contracts set aside for small businesses. This legislation is cosponsored by Senators KERRY, COCHRAN, NICKLES, SARBANES, QUAYLE, BAUCUS, INOUYE, MATSUNAGA, PRESSLER, GORE, RIEGLE, HOLLINGS, and D'AMATO and was favorably reported by the Senate Small Business Committee by a vote of 17-0 on May 21, 1986. I urge my colleagues to join in supporting passage of this bill which will provide important employment opportunities for our Nation's disabled citizens.

Sheltered workshops are nonprofit organizations which provide work for handicapped and blind workers. They provide a rare opportunity for our Nation's most disadvantaged citizens to be productive in a work environment and to earn an honest wage. Until September 1983 the workshops were allowed to submit competitive bids for Government contracts. We tried in the last Congress to restore that authorization as part of an omnibus small business bill, but for reasons unrelated to the merits of the legislation, the proposal died in conference.

During Senate Small Business Committee consideration of S. 2147, we heard convincing testimony that there is a compelling need for additional employment opportunities for persons with severe handicaps. A recent study by Louis Harris & Associates indicates that two-thirds of the handicapped are not working, even though an overwhelming majority want to work, and over half fall below the poverty line. Great strides toward employment are being made through the Rehabilitation Act, the Developmental Disabilities Act, and the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act. But clearly not enough has been done so far. The reestablishment of the authority of rehabilitation facilities to bid on small business set-aside contracts will provide an important source of meaningful jobs for severely disabled persons.

Let me take a moment, Mr. President, to explain how the program works and why S. 2147 offers an exciting opportunity for the thousands of handicapped and blind individuals throughout the country. And let me do so in concrete terms which will humanize this program. At the committee hearing on S. 2147, we heard very eloquent testimony from Dwight Whittaker, the executive director of a workshop in Idaho Falls, ID, who was representing NARF, the National Association of Rehabilitation Facilities. Mr. Whittaker's workshop had for several years entered into a 15(c) contract with the General Services Administration for the manufacture of survey stakes and hubs. This contract provided real meaningful work for over 150 disabled individuals in a rural part of the country. It did so in the context of providing needed items to the Federal Government at competitive prices. Without the benefit of the 15(c) program, the workshop would not have been able to put those handicapped people to work, and since expiration of the program in 1983, the workshop has been unable to renew the contract.

As Mr. Whittaker put it:

As a result of the lapse of previously enacted authority, the rehabilitation facilities have lost and continue to lose the opportunity to train and employ the disabled citizens of this great country. When small business set-aside privileges were available to the rehab facilities, they proved to be a valuable source of training and employment opportunities for many severely disabled and blind individuals.

Another example was provided by William Wolk, execuive director of the South Shore Rehabilitation Center in North Quincy, MA. Mr. Wolk showed a film entitled, "Right to Work" which featured a 30-year-old woman, Mary Ann, who was both retarded and autistic. The film showed Mary Ann working on a urinary leg bag for the Veterans Administration under a contract awarded through this program. Mary Ann's father spoke about the miracle and change in his daughter's life brought about through her employment at the workshop. As Mr. Wolk stated, the miracle was that she had had the opportunity to work, and in Mr. Wolk's judgment reauthorizing this program is the vital link to creating real job opportunities for people like Mary Ann who are not presently employable in the competitive workforce.

Under the 15(c) program which S. 2147 seeks to renew, the handicapped and blind will find opportunities for real work more quickly. If a Federal agency needs to buy a particular item, it will place a notice in the Commerce Business Daily, soliciting bids. The workshop, along with other eligible suppliers, submits its bid, and if it comes in as low bid, it will receive the contract. It will succeed on its merits because it offers a quality product at a competitive price. And it will obtain the work assignment quickly, and without significant delays involved under Javits-Wagner-O'Day. That is the essence of section 15(c) and that is why it is such a vital addition to other Federal programs for the benefit of the handicapped. It allows sheltered workshops to enter the market for Government procurement contracts and to bid on them competitively.

Mr. President, the committee also heard concerns raised by small business owners that reauthorization of this program would cause them economic loss. The bill as reported out by the committee makes several improvements over previous laws, and I believe it strikes a fair and reasonable balance between the concerns of sheltered workshops and those of small business. Specifically, the bill establishes:

An annual $50 million cap on the contracts which can be awarded under section 15(c) of the Small Business Act.

An annual $8 million cap on the contracts awarded under section 15(c) which can subsequently be transferred over to the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Program;

An appeals process which gives the Administrator of the SBA the opportunity to adjudicate claims that an award of a contract to a workshop would cause a small business severe economic injury;

A 5-year sunset clause which should allow adequate time to study the program; and

A GAO study of the impact of the legislation by 1990.

With respect to the $50 million cap on awards under 15(c), this legislation reduces by one-half the $100 million limitation under previous enactments of this program. When workshops were eligible to bid under section 15(c) from 1981–83, less than $10 million in awards was actually made to workshops out of a total of $38 billion in contracts to small businesses. This represented, in fact, a miniscule one-fourth of 1 percent of the set-asides. As further protection for small businesses, S. 2147 establishes an $8 million limitation on contracts awarded under the 15(c) program which can subsequently be transferred over to the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Program and an appeals process to protect small business concerns that may suffer adverse economic impact.

The legislation requires that within 10 days of a proposed award to a sheltered workshop under the 15(c) program, a small business concern which has experienced or is likely to experience severe economic injury may file an appeal of the proposed award with the Administrator of SBA. The Administrator must decide the appeal within 30 days after it is filed. This appeals provision is intended to address the concern that workshops may have some sort of advantage over the for-profit companies and may therefore cause undue adverse economic impact. As in any appeals process, the burden of proof rests with the appellant to prove its case.

The grounds for appeal remain severe economic injury to the small business concern. The committee report sets forth several factors that the Administrator is encouraged to consider in deciding severe economic injury. In his review of appeals, the Administrator should not lose sight of the purpose of the program which is to provide employment opportunities for the disabled. It would be a distressing development contrary to the intent of the committee if the goal of providing meaningful work opportunities to the handicapped was defeated.

It is anticipated that the SBA Administrator will use this appeal authority judiciously and not permit the process to evolve into a general challenge every time a workshop is the successful bidder on a set-aside contract.

Mr. President, this legislation has the support of the National Association of Rehabilitation Facilities, the National Industries for the Severely Handicapped, the Association for Retarded Citizens of the United States, the National Easter Seal Society, Goodwill Industries of America, the National Association of Jewish Vocational Services, the General Council of Workshops for the Blind, and the National Industries for the Blind. I urge my colleagues to support it, so that once the House of Representatives acts, this important program can be reauthorized.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I rise as an original cosponsor of S. 2147, reauthorizing eligibility for sheltered workshops for the severely handicapped to compete for small business set-aside contracts. I support passage of this important legislation. However, I would like to take this opportunity to raise some concerns I have regarding language in the committee report (S. 99-318) accompanying S. 2147.

Throughout consideration of this legislation in the Small Business Committee, every effort was taken to ensure for-profit small businesses were not adversely affected—and indeed, this is important. I feel strongly that sheltered workshops for the handicapped should be given the same consideration. The purpose of this legislation is to provide work for the severely handicapped, and we must keep this very important goal in mind.

In previous legislation, the Administrator of the Small Business Administration and the Executive Director of the Committee for Purchase from the Blind and Other Severely Handicapped [CPBOSH] shared a dual adjudicative authority. Under S. 2147, the Administrator possesses this authority. Consultation with the CPBOSH Executive Director is required in this bill, and I want to stress this fact. The CPBOSH Executive Director possesses a wealth of experience in matters concerning handicapped employment and his or her advice will help to ensure bids submitted by sheltered workshops are given adequate and serious consideration. While the possibility of adverse impact on for-profit small businesses should be considered, adverse impact on handicapped employment must also be considered. In the case of new contracts, the appeals process should not come into play.

This leads me to my second point. On page 8 of the committee report there are six factors listed to be taken into consideration during the appeals process—five of which apply only to for-profit small business. I would like to urge that all six of these factors apply not only to for-profit small businesses, but to sheltered workshops employing severely handicapped individuals as well. The unemployment rate for the severely handicapped is astonishing, and sheltered workshops are virtually the only organizations which exist solely to provide these people with jobs.

In conclusion, I want to again stress that the primary purpose of this legislation is to provide employment for the severely handicapped. I wholeheartedly agree that this should not be accomplished at the expense of for-profit small businesses. But, I am concerned that the workshops may be prohibited from winning any set-aside contracts because of a possibility of adverse impact. It should be stressed that the phrase "severe economic injury" means just that, severe injury. I hope that this will be kept in mind during the 5 years this authorization runs, as well as the spirit of helping the handicapped who cannot always help themselves.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 2147, legislation that will enable sheltered workshops to bid competitively for Federal Government contracts set aside for small businesses. The intent of this reauthorizing legislation is straightforward; it is designed to assist disabled citizens in gaining employment.

71-059 O-87-22 (Pt. 11)

At hearings before the Subcommittee on the Handicapped, and in my travels throughout my home State, I have witnessed firsthand the tremendous value to handicapped individuals to be able to contribute both as taxpayers and as workers in our society. And, not only is it fulfilling to an individual to be able to work, but it is essential to ones self-esteem and motivation. Despite the fact that disabled persons have an overwhelming desire to work, the employment statistics are still quite grim. According to a recent Harris survey, in America today there are over 20 million unemployed handicapped citizens of working age who want to work, yet due to a lack of available jobs, a staggering 60 percent of this Nation's disabled citizens are not working. This devastating figure stands in sharp contrast to the overall national unemployment rate which is roughly 7 percent, and makes passage of this bill so very important.

Keeping all of this in mind however, I am still quite cognizant of the concerns that many small businesses share regarding a potential loss of jobs. Let me allay some of these concerns by pointing out that S. 2147 places an annual $50 million cap on the amount of contracts that can be awarded under section 15(c) of the Small Business Act. It also includes an annual cap of $8 million on the amount of awarded contracts that can subsequently be transferred over to the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act. And finally, this legislation establishes an appeals process under which the Administrator of the Small Business Administration is able to review a challenge to an award to a sheltered workshop if it warrants such action. In determining the viability of an award, the Administrator is encouraged to consider a variety of factors that could culminate in severe economic injury to a small business.

I would like to take just a moment, before continuing my statement, to clarify with my good friend from Connecticut the full intent of the language regarding the appeals process. It is my understanding that the Administrator of the Small Business Administration will confer whenever possible with the Executive Director of the Committee for the Purchase from the Blind and Other Severely Handicapped in determining the basis of an appeal.

Mr. WEICKER. That is correct. Because the Committee for Purchase has such an extensive background with Government contracts and sheltered workshops, its input into the appeals process is truly valuable.

Mr. KERRY. Would my colleague from Connecticut also assist me in explaining the need to reduce excessive and burdensome appeals which could detract from the purpose of our legislation which is to assist handicapped persons in competitively securing employment.

Mr. WEICKER. The committee report directs the Administrator of the Small Business Administration to promptly dismiss frivolous appeals. It is certainly not our intent to allow the appeals process to be dragged out and thereby offer small businesses an avenue to delay contract awards to sheltered workshops.

Mr. KERRY. In this same vein, can I then assume that the timeframe we have included in our legislation regarding the appeals process is to be strictly adhered to in order to prevent lengthy disputes, and should not be subject to waivers which will cause undue delays.

Mr. WEICKER. Again the Senator is correct. We are all aware of how lengthy and arduous an appeals process can sometimes be, and for that reason we have placed strict time limits into the legislation's appeals process.

Mr. KERRY. I thank my colleague from Connecticut for clarifying this for me.

I want to applaud the Small Business Committee for acting so quickly and unanimously in support of this legislation which is so vital to ensuring employment for America's handicapped population. I urge my fellow colleagues to follow the committee's example and pass this critical legislation that will improve the lives of disabled citizens across our Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendment is agreed to.

The bill (S. 2147) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN COMMUNITY COLLEGE AUTHORIZATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2095) to reauthorize the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 and the Navajo Community College Act, which has been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Amendments of 1986".

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) GRANT PROGRAMS.—Subsection (a) of section 110 of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1810(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "1985, 1986, and 1987" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990", and

(2) by striking out "such fiscal years" in paragraphs (2) and (3) and inserting in lieu thereof "the fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990".

(b) ENDOWMENT PROGRAM.—Section 306 of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1836) is amended by striking out "1985, 1986, and 1987" and inserting in lieu thereof "1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990".

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

(a) SATISFACTORY PROGRESS.—Subsection (a) of section 2 of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1801(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (6),

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (7) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and", and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(8) 'satisfactory progress toward a degree or certificate' has the meaning given to such term by the institution at which the student is enrolled.".

(b) INDIAN STUDENT COUNT.—Subsection (b) of section 2 of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1801(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out ", in accordance with the standards and practices of the appropriate accrediting agency or the institution at which the student is in attendance," in paragraph (5),

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) as paragraphs (4), (5), and (6), respectively, and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) Credits earned by any student who has not obtained a high school degree or its equivalent shall be counted toward the completion of the Indian student count if the institution at which the student is in attendance has established criteria for the admission of such student on the basis of the student's ability to benefit from the education or training offered. The institution shall be presumed to have established such criteria if the admission procedures for such studies include counseling or testing that measures the student's aptitude to successfully complete the course in which the student has enrolled. No credits earned by such student for purposes of obtaining a high school degree or its equivalent shall be counted toward the computation of the Indian student count.".

SEC. 4. OPERATION AND IMPROVEMENT GRANTS.

Paragraph (2) of section 108(a) of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1808(a)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) $5,820,".

SEC. 5. CONTRACTS UNDER INDIAN SELF-DETERMINATION AND EDUCATION ASSISTANCE ACT.

Subsection (b) of section 109 of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1809(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) No tribally controlled community college for which a tribe has designated a portion of the funds appropriated for the tribe from funds appropriated under the Act of November 2, 1921 (42 Stat. 208; 25 U.S.C. 13) may be denied a contract for such portion under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450 et seq.) (except as provided in that Act), or denied appropriate contract support to administer such portion of the appropriated funds.".

SEC. 6. REPORT OF FACILITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 112 of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1812) is amended—

(1) by striking out "Administrator of General Services" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary", and

(2) by striking out "enactment of this subsection" in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "enactment of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Amendments of 1986".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 113(a) of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1813(a)) is amended by striking out "Administrator of General Services" and inserting in lieu thereof of "Secretary".

SEC. 7. NAVAJO COMMUNITY COLLEGE.

Section 5 of the Navajo Community College Act (25 U.S.C. 640c-1) is amended—

(1) by striking out "the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1984, and for the three succeeding fiscal years" in subsection (a)(1) and inserting in lieu thereof "each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990", and

(2) by striking out "for any fiscal year" in subsection (b)(1) and inserting in lieu thereof "for each fiscal year".

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today in support of Senate bill 2095, a bill to reauthorize the 1978 Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act.

Education for Indian youth is a must. Education for young Indians opens the door of opportunity. Older Indians of any age must also have the chance to further their knowledge. Collectively, these first Americans will benefit from educational opportunities available at the reservation tribal colleges.

Currently, there are 21 tribal colleges operating with the assistance of this legislation, including 1 on each of the 7 Indian reservations in my home State of Montana. Nine of the colleges are fully accredited, six are candidates for accreditation, and six are in precandidacy status. This is no small accomplishment for a program that has been in operation for only 8 years. It reflects the desire and commitment of Indian tribes to provide quality, relevant education in the local community to meet the needs of reservation residents.

The tribal colleges offer varied degree programs, including business, nursing, arts, and science; some are 2-year institutions and others have 4-year degree programs. In addition, the colleges serve the local community by offering courses in adult education, vocational education, and high school equivalency. The colleges play a very special role in the lives of tribal members, many of whom are older than the norm, with no experience at traditional colleges and who are first generation college students.

The impact on Indian people, reflected by the growth in the number of colleges and the number of students served, is due to the ability of the colleges to respond to the unique and special needs of Indian students in a reservation setting. Many graduates of 2-year programs go on to complete a 4-year program elsewhere; others from 4-year programs go on to postgraduate work.

The tribes can be very proud of this success and Congress can be proud of making it possible through passage of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978.

The bill before us today will extend authorization of this act through fiscal year 1990. In addition, the bill clarifies the act with regard to student eligibility. It is a must bill to assure continued funding stability for tribal colleges. I urge its unanimous passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was order to be engrossed for a third reading, reading the third time, and passed.

□ 2240

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF SBA PILOT PROGRAMS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to consideration of Calendar No. 699, H.R. 2787, extending SBA pilot programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state it.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2787) to extend through fiscal year 1988 SBA Pilot Programs under section 8 of the Small Business Act.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 2194

(Purpose: To authorize funds for a Technology Transfer Institute to benefit small business)

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator WEICKER and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON], for Mr. Weicker, proposes and amendent numbered 2194.

On page 1, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

TITLE I—SMALL BUSINESS PILOT PROGRAMS

On page 1, line 3, strike out "Section 1." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 101.".

On page 2, line 1, strike out "Sec. 2." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 102.".

On page 2, line 5, strike out "Sec. 3." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 103.".

On page 2, after line 8, insert the following new title:

TITLE III—TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER INSTITUTE AUTHORIZED

Sec. 201. (a) The Secretary of Education (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to provide financial assistance, in accordance with the provisions of this title, to pay the Federal share of the cost of construction and related expenses for the establishment of the Technology Transfer Institute at the University of Bridgeport, located at Bridgeport, Connecticut, to be used to revitalize the competitiveness of small business industry in America, particularly in the international marketplace, and to serve as a regional demonstration center transferring emerging technology to small businesses.

(b)(1) No financial assistance may be made under this section unless an application is made at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary may reasonably require.

(2) The Federal share may not exceed 50 percent of the cost of the project authorized by this title.

(c) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums, not to exceed $10,000,000, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title. Funds appropriated pursuant to this section shall remain available until expended.

TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER INSTITUTE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 2787

● Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, evidence from all sources shows us that America is experiencing an alarming and unprecedented slippage of its position as the preeminent leader in the international industrial, economic, and technological marketplace. Our economy shifted dramatically over the last decade from that of the old smokestack industry to one based primarily on high technology, service industries and small business. Our ability to regain the marketshare we have lost will be very dependent upon the continued investment and innovativeness of the small entrepreneur.

The role of the university in providing the degree of science and technology base needed for a strong national defense and for the health and wellbeing of the U.S. economy has been amply proven. The small business has an important role to play in the process of new technological innovation, new product development and the creation of jobs. The chance to become competitive relies extensively on collaborative efforts between the university and the small entrepreneur. However, the benefits of such collaboration are being hindered. While the university is often a powerhouse of new technology resources, there exists no mechanism for transferring the technology and information resources from the university laboratory to the small business venture. New technology and talent developing at universities is never utilized to the degree that it could by the small entrepreneur.

The war against foreign competition can be won. But it requires the kind of commitment that existed during the early 1970's, before America became so sure of itself that it ceased making effort to remain competitive. We need productive partnerships among Government, small industry, and universities to build upon our industrial and technological resources in order to regain the competitive advantage among our foreign adversaries. A technology transfer institute, as authorized in this amendment, will demonstrate the effectiveness of this kind of partnership and Federal involvement. The return on this commitment will far exceed the initial dollars invested.

I urge the adoption of the amendment.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2194) was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I am pleased that today the Senate is considering H.R. 2787, a bill to extend through fiscal year 1988, two Small Business Administration [SBA] pilot programs which are designed to enhance SBA's ability to assist firms participating in the section 8(a), Minority Business Development Program.

The statutory authority for both programs expired on September 30, 1985. The House of Representatives unanimously approved this legislation on December 16, 1985. Following a full committee hearing on the bill, the Senate Small Business Committee, without objection, reported out H.R. 2787 on May 21, 1986.

The principal program authorized by H.R. 2787 is the Pilot Procurement Program. This program gives SBA increased authority to select and reserve contracts from an agency designated by the President to provide technically sophisticated multiyear contracts for the 8(a) program and to test the feasibility of this approach as a business development tool for the program.

This pilot program has been previously extended by the Congress. It was originally authorized in Public Law 95-507 for a period of 2 years—from October 1978 to September 30, 1980 and it was extended for 1 year by Public Law 97-481 until September 30, 1981. During those years the Department of the Army was designated by the President as the pilot agency. In the 97th and the 98th Congresses, I sponsored legislation to reauthorize the program in a civilian agency; in 1983 under Public Law 98-47 the program was extended until September 30, 1985. The Department of Transportation [DOT] was the designated pilot agency under this latest extension.

The program, over the past 2 years with DOT, has provided new and exciting opportunities for minority-owned firms. One midwestern firm was awarded a highly technical contract to design, manufacture, and test radio control equipment for the Federal Aviation Administration. Another small company located in California will design, develop, and produce 600 airport remote monitoring systems for FAA. These high-technology electronic systems will play a major role in automating the maintenance of FAA's landing systems in airports throughout our Nation. These two awards are examples of the nontraditional, long-term, higher dollar contracts received by 8(a) pilot participants. I might also add that both contractors are performing well and meeting the challenge of these sophisticated requirements. All minority contractors who testified at the hearing unanimously endorsed extension of the program. They strongly felt that without the pilot authority they would not have been awarded such challenging contracting opportunities. Thus, I firmly believe the pilot should be extended so that SBA and DOT can build on their experience to make more "quality" contracting opportunities available to minority-owned firms.

The second pilot program extended by this legislation is the Surety Bond Waiver Pilot Program. Under this program, SBA can waive bonding requirements for a section 8(a) start-up firm to help the firm gain Government contracting experience or establish a "track record". Since it was originally authorized in 1978, SBA has never utilized this authority. By extending this pilot the SBA will once again have the opportunity to test the bond waiver authority so that Congress can evaluate its usefulness as a business development tool.

Mr. President, those of us who have followed the evolution of minority business development in recent years have seen progress. Most notable is the advancement made by minority business through the Federal procurement process. But there is still much to be done. By approving this legislation we will continue on a progressive course and assure a rightful place for minority-owned businesses in our Nation's economic mainstream.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that letters from the Latin America Manufacturers Association, the National Association of Minority Contractors, the National Federation of 8(a) Companies, and the Black Presidents Roundtable, supporting this legislation, be printed in the RECORD.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation. SBA has been operating without this pilot authority for nearly 1 year. As a result, I believe certain unique contracts for minority businesses are being lost.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LATIN AMERICAN MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION,
May 14, 1986.

Senator LOWELL WEICKER,
U.S. Senate, Small Business Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WEICKER: Soon you will be considering H.R. 2787, a Bill which would extend the 8a pilot program through FY '88. The purpose of this letter is to request your support for passage of this Bill. I will briefly outline our reasons in this letter.

The 8a pilot program has given the SBA a significant tool to help leverage larger, more technical requirements for minority firms from the Department of the Army and the Department of Transportation, the two agencies wherein the pilot authority has been used on a test basis. There is absolutely no doubt that the types of requirements let by the Army and DOT would not have occurred without the pilot program.

LAMA was directly involved with two large pilot requirements, so we speak from direct, first-hand experience. These requirements were:

(1) The 6HP military standard engine (MSE) for the Army built by Wedtech in the South Bronx—$30 million (more or less).

(2) The RMMS system for the FAA being developed and built by New Bedford Panoramex (NBP) of Santa Fe Springs, California—$40 million (more or less).

Beyond a shadow of a doubt, these requirements would not have been awarded to these firms were it not for the pilot program. The Army resisted the MSE 8a award strenuously for over two years, claiming that Wedtech was not capable of performing the requirement. The pilot authority was the only reason the Army's repeated attempts to pull back the MSE requirement were unsuccessful. Wedtech has produced a first class MSE which the Army has rated as excellent. As a consequence of this pilot program award, Wedtech has won other Army MSE requirements (different horsepower units) on a competitive basis, and is supplying other major companies with crankcase castings for other MSE engines (these castings are the most critical item on the MSE).

The DOT RMMS award to NBP is a more recent pilot program award. Under the leadership of Secretary Dole, DOT (unlike the Army) cooperated fully with SBA when the President assigned the pilot program to the Department of Transportation. FAA officials identified a number of significant projects for the pilot program. As a result of FAA's evaluation of the 8(a) firms submitted by SBA, NBP was selected for the RMMS requirement. NBP was a new entry into the 8(a) program and, although the firm had no track record in direct government contracting, the firm did have an outstanding technical capability and track record in private industry. Because of NBP's complete lack of experience in direct government contracts, there is simily no way a major requirement like the RMMS system could have gone to NBP outside of the pilot program.

It is clear to us that the pilot authority works. It is clear that the pilot authority is needed, particularly in the military agencies wherein we still encounter great resistance to the award of larger, more technical requirements to 8(a) firms. For your review, I have attached copies of my testimony to the House Small Business Committee on the subject of the pilot program. In this testimony, I have provided several detailed examples illustrating the unwarranted resistance that 8(a) firms encounter at Federal agencies. These examples clearly show that the pilot authority is needed by SBA.

We disagree sharply with SBA over the need for this authority. It is reprehensible for SBA to take the position that the authority is not needed, particularly when the record clearly shows that SBA is unable to provide most of its 8(a) firms with contract support. We feel the pilot authority could be used by SBA in more creative ways. If the pilot program were placed at the Navy, for instance, SBA could request, at the beginning of each fiscal year, that the major Navy buying activities reserve a certain number of requirements with which to support its portfolio of 8(a) companies. By resisting the pilot authority, the SBA is disregarding one of the most effective tools available for securing a meaningful level of contract support for its 8(a) companies and a means for securing a much more equitable distribution of requirements among 8(a) firms.

There is one other major argument for the retention of the pilot authority and for its placement in DOD. That is the 5% minority enterprise goal recently required by the Congress and implemented by Deputy Secretary Taft. Direct contracting by the four defense agencies (Army, Air Force, Navy & DLA) with minority firms hover around 2% or less. Achieving the 5% goal is going to require special efforts and receptivity to new approaches.

The pilot program authority can be an extremely useful tool in helping DOD meet the 5% goal. It can be used to reserve larger, more technical requirements for the 8(a) program. It can be used to identify and reserve a wide variety of requirements so that the bulk of the 8(a) firms which currently receive little or no 8(a) contracts can actually begin receiving meaningful support from the SBA 8(a) program. And finally, the pilot authority managers with poor histories of 8(a) support can be caused to improve their minority contracting.

As you read this letter, please bear in mind that we are talking about a business program, not a giveaway program. Under no circumstances should 8(a) firms be awarded requirements unless they can perform them in a technically competent manner, within the required time frames and delivery schedules, and at a fair market price established by the buying agency. Front organizations and other abusers of the 8(a) program should be aggressively identified and eliminated from the program. LAMA has been in the forefront of the push for severe criminal penalties for front organizations.

Please accept our appreciation for your thoughtful consideration of the ideas contained herein. We urge your support for the continuation of the pilot program.

Yours truly,

LOU ARRANGA,
Chairman.
STEPHEN DENLINGER,
President.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF 8(a) COMPANIES,
Falls Church, VA, May 15, 1986.

Hon. LOWELL P. WEICKER, Jr.,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WEICKER: The National Federation of 8(a) Companies representing 2,800 firms across the country, fully supports H.R. 2787 to extend through Fiscal Year 1988 the Pilot Program under Section 8 of the Small Business Act.

The Federation has previously testified on this matter before the House Small Business Committee. A copy of the testimony is attached.

The Pilot Program, to the extent that it has been implemented in the Department of Army and the Department of Transportation, has benefitted the 8(a) Program in providing significant opportunities in the high-tech arena. This is very important. Historically, 8(a) companies were given opportunities primarily in low-tech work such as janitorial and food services. If we are to join the mainstream of the economy of this country, we need to have the opportunities to work in the most advanced state-of-the-art. This is the only way we can develop the technology, managerial and financial resources to go beyond the 8(a) program into the competitive arena.

Your support of minority business development and of H.R. 2787 will be appreciated by minority entrepreneurs in your state.

Sincerely,

ELIZABETH L. PAN,
President.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MINORITY CONTRACTORS,
Washington, DC, May 14, 1986.

Hon. LOWELL P. WEICKER, Jr.,
Chairman, Senate Small Business Committee, Washington, DC.

Subject: H.R. 2787.

DEAR SENATOR WEICKER: The National Association of Minority Contractors (NAMC) is a full-service, non-profit, trade association, established in 1969 to address the needs and concerns of minority construction contractors nationwide. Our membership of 3,500 contractors presently spans across 45 states. We strongly urge you to support H.R. 2787 when it comes up for vote in the Senate Select Committee on Small Business.

NAMC testified in support of such bill before the House Small Business Committee in November, 1985, and we submitted written testimony to the Senate Select Committee on Small Business this past March.

We sense that there might be some reluctances to support this bill because of the tenuous position of the Small Business Administration (SBA) as well as the recent draft report of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights (CRC) recommending suspension of minority business set-aside programs.

With regard to the SBA, please keep in mind that regardless of the Administration's future plans for such agency, the Small Business Administration currently exists as an independent agency of the federal government. Such agency must administer those programs mandated by Congress with integrity and efficiency until directed otherwise by Congress. We ask that you not allow speculation to affect your vote in this matter. As you will see below, the passage of H.R. 2787 is crucial not only for minority entrepreneurs but for the entire American economy.

In 1981 the Center for Systems and Program Development, Inc. in Washington, D.C. conducted a survey among minority-owned firms in the Washington Metropolitan area, among which 8(a) firms are heavily represented. The survey indicated that employment among these minority businesses greatly exceeded the national averages.

Estimated employment for the 250 firms represented by the sample showed a total of 14,234 employees. Many of these employees in professional, technical and managerial categories would not find comparable positions in either the public or non-minority private sector if their jobs were terminated.

During the rest of the 1980s the importance of minority-owned businesses as employers will likely increase. The Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) projects slower employment growth in the goods-producing sectors through 1990. However, BLS also projects that employment demand in those retail non-goods producing areas, in which minority-owned firms are concentrated, will increase by as much as 8 percent. During the decade of the 1980s, total employment in the goods-producing sector is projected to grow by 5 to 7 million persons, compared to about 20 million in the non-goods producing industries.

The contributions of MBEs as employers are made even more clear when the impact of these firms on unemployment is assessed. In 1980, an estimated 3.15 million persons were unemployed each week. If unemployment benefits of $100 per week were paid to these persons, $315 million a week would be required. The collapse of MBEs could represent an additional outlay of $100 million in Federal unemployment benefits, since persons employed by MBEs would not have easily found jobs in either the public or private sectors in 1980, a recession year. Put another way, the continued survival of MBEs in 1980 could have saved the Federal government $100 million a week or $5.2 billion for the year.

The implications of these data and projections are clear. Minority entrepreneurs will have to employ at expanded levels to offset weak and declining labor demand in the goods producing and public service sectors severely impacted by reduction in Federal spending. H.R. 2787 gives one outlet for meeting this demand.

The Surety Bond Waiver Component of H.R. 2787 is also urgently needed—now more than ever. A nationwide study which NAMC has just completed under a grant from the SBA, indicates that lack of the availability of bonding is the number one reason given by minority contractors for being unable to perform large construction contracts. Frequently, the minority contractors has successfully bid on a contract but was not eligible to perform due to the unavailability of bonds to minority enterprises in today's stringent marketplace. Such problem causes the loss of jobs, tax revenues and entrepreneurial initiative. The bond waiver would go a long way toward eliminating this problem.

So far as the draft report of the CRC is concerned, I might remind you that this report was effectively contradicted by numerous reputable organizations, legislators, government agencies (including the SBA) and even by the Commission's own members. Not only did the Commission vote to table the report, but President Ronald Reagan even expressed his support of minority business set-aside programs.

President Reagan's support sent a much-needed signal from our nation's leadership to the country's number one employer of minorities—minority business enterprises. The message as, "We support you and we're behind you." We ask that you do the same by voting for H.R. 2787.

Very truly yours,

RALPH C. THOMAS III,
Executive Director.

ASSOCIATE CONSULTANTS V LEWIS,
Washington DC.

Senator LOWELL P. WEICKER, Jr.,
Washington DC.

SIR, the Black President's Round Table Association; and organizaton of minority businessmen, supports H.R. 2787, a bill to extend the SBA Pilot Program under section 8 of the Small Business Act.

We believe that this act will continue to strengthen the small and minority business community and will contribute to the overall economic well-being of the country.

We respectfully request your positive vote for H.R. 2787.

Respectfully,

LAWRENCE A LANDRY,
Member, Executive Committee,
Black President Round Table Association.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL FOUNDATION ON THE ARTS AND HUMANITIES ACT OF 1965 AMENDMENTS

Mr. SIMPSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to H.R. 5036, dealing with the arts and humanities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5036) to make technical corrections to the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 2195

(Purpose: To revise the age category limitation on the allocation of funds)

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I sent an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator KERRY and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] for Mr. KERRY, proposes an amendment numbered 2195.

Mr. BIDEN. I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following new section:

ALLOCATION LIMITATIONS FOR EDUCATION OF THE HANDICAPPED ACT

SEC. 2. Section 611(a)(5)(A)(i) of the Education of the Handicapped Act is amended by inserting after "children" the first time it appears the following: "aged five to seventeen, inclusive,".

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, my amendment is basically a technical amendment designed to address an inconsistency with the funding allotment formula in Public Law 94-142, the Education of All Handicapped Children's Act.

Public Law 94-142 provides for a free and appropriate education for all handicapped children ages 3 to 21. However, there exists a 12-percent Federal funding cap in the law that is based on the number of handicapped children a State serves, as compared to the number of general school age children ages 5 to 17 in that State. Here lies the inconsistency. States that serve handicapped children outside of the general age category—which today a majority of the States do—are being unfairly penalized for serving this additional population. And this certainly was not the intent of the drafters of Public Law 94-142 or the Congress who passed this law a decade ago.

Under current law we have witnessed a tragic inequity in the availability of services. Handicapped children outside of the traditional school age range have not had universal access to special education. My amendment makes an essential change in the formula which will in fact give States the necessary added incentive to serve those handicapped youth who can ultimately benefit from proven, critical educational services that Congress has historically supported.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support this technical amendment which will assist States in providing educational services for handicapped children.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2195) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CARL D. PERKINS VOCATIONAL EDUCATION ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of H.R. 4841, dealing with the Carl Perkins Vocational Education Act, which is being held at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4841) to amend the Carl D. Perkins Vocational Education Act with respect to State allotments under the Act.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 11:17 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4515) making urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes; it recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 9, 24, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 39, 48, 55, 58, 60, 63, 64, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 73, 74, 86, 88, 94, 99, 103, 113, 125, 133, 138, 140, 153, 158, 159, 160, 165, 166, 167, 170, 171, 173, 174, 183, 188, 189, 190, 191, 194, 198, 206, 207, 208, 211, 214, 221, and 222 to the bill, and agrees thereto; it recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 10, 11, 15, 18, 20, 22, 23, 25, 28, 40, 42, 44, 45, 50, 54, 59, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 84, 87, 91, 93, 95, 96, 97, 98, 101, 107, 108, 109, 111, 112, 120, 122, 128, 131, 132, 134, 136, 143, 144, 154, 155, 162, 163, 168, 172, 175, 176, 179, 180, 182, 184, 186, 187, 192, 216, and 218 to the bill, and agrees thereto, each with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate; and that the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 114 and 199 to the bill.

The message also announced that the House has passed the following bills, without amendment:

H.R. 3006. An act to correct certain inequities by providing Federal civil service credit for retirement purposes in the case of certain individuals who performed service as National Guard technicians before January 1, 1969; and

H.R. 3559. An act to amend the act establishing a Commission on the Bicentennial of the Constitution of the United States to clarify the status of employees of the Commission, to raise the limits on private contributions, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House has agreed to the following concurrent resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H. Con. Res. 345. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress concerning democracy in the Republic of Korea.

At 5:14 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bill, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H. Con. Res. 4060. An act to amend title 5, United States Code, to provide that the full cost-of-living adjustment in annuities payable from the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund shall be made for 1987, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House has agreed to the following concurrent resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H. Con. Res. 347. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress concerning the human rights in North Korea, and the reduction of tensions on the Korean peninsula.

S. 2180. An act to authorize appropriations for activities under the Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974; and

S. 2414. An act to amend title 18, United States Code.

The message further announced that the House has agreed to the following concurrent resolution, without amendment:

S. Con. Res. 152. Concurrent resolution authorizing changes in the enrollment of S. 2414.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled joint resolution:

S.J. Res. 365. Joint resolution welcoming the Afghan Alliance.

The enrolled joint resolution was subsequently signed by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

At 3:30 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bill, with amendments, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

S. 1073. An act to amend the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Improvement Innovation Act of 1980 for the purpose of improving the availability of Japanese science and engineering literature in the United States, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

MEASURES REFERRED

The following bill was read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 3006. An act to correct certain inequities by providing Federal civil service credit for retirement purposes in the case of certain individuals who performed service as National Guard technicians before January 1, 1969; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

H.R. 4060. An act to amend title 5, United States Code, to provide that the full cost-of-living adjustment in annuities payable from Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund shall be made for 1987, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

The following concurrent resolutions were read, and referred as indicated:

H. Con. Res. 345. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress concerning democracy in the Republic of Korea; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

H. Con. Res. 347. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress concerning the human rights situation in North Korea, and the reduction of tensions on the Korean peninsula; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bill was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 3559. An act to amend the act establishing a Commission on the Bicentennial of the Constitution of the United States to clarify the status of employees of the Commission, to raise the limits on private contributions, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, June 25, 1986, she had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled joint resolution:

S.J. Res. 365. Joint resolution welcoming the Afghan Alliance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. WEICKER, from the Committee on Small Business, without amendment:

S. Res. 434. An original resolution to urge the President to submit to the Senate a nominee for the position of Administrator of the Small Business Administration.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources:

Joyce Doyle, of New York, to be a member of the Federal Mine Safety and Health Review Commission for a term expiring August 30, 1992;

Diana D. Denman, of Texas, to be a member of the National Museum Services Board for a term expiring December 6, 1990; and James S. Rosebush, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the National Museum Services Board for a term expiring December 6, 1989.

(The above nominations were reported from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources with the recommendation that they be confirmed, subject to the nominees' commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.)

By Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Armed Services:

M.D.B. Carlisle, of the District of Columbia, to be an Assistant Secretary of Defense.

(The above nomination was reported from the Committee on Armed Services with the recommendation that it be confirmed, subject to the nominee's commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.)

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, from the Committee on Armed Services, I report favorably the attached nominations.

Those identified with a single asterisk (*) are to be placed on the Executive Calendar. Those identified with a double asterisk () are to lie on the Secretary's desk for the information of any Senator since these names have already appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and to save the expense of printing again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The nominations ordered to lie on the Secretary's desk were printed in the RECORD of June 11, June 16, and June 19, 1986 at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

JUNE 25, 1986

(The above nomination was reported from the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation with the recommendation that it be confirmed, subject to the nominee's commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.)

By Mr. ROTH, from the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

Evelyn E. Crawford Queen, of the District of Columbia, to be an associate judge of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia for a term of 15 years.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. CHAFEE (for himself, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. PELL, and Mr. SIMON):

S. 2596. A bill to require the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to conduct a study of the adverse effects that the pollution of the environment caused by discarding or dumping of plastics on land and in the waters have on the environment, including the effects on fish and wildlife, to make recommendations for eliminating or lessening such adverse effects, and to require the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to control the pollution of the environment caused by the discarding of plastic on the land and in water; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. DANFORTH:

S. 2597. A bill to amend the Tariff Schedules of the United States to provide a temporary suspension of the duties imposed on certain extracorporeal shock wave lithotripters; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. PELL:

S. 2598 A bill to authorize grants to States to enable States and local educational agencies to meet priority educational needs in the areas of school dropouts, programs to combat illiteracy, programs for the gifted and talented, and for basic skills instructions for secondary school students, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

By Mr. DOMENICI (for himself and Mr. BINGAMAN):

S. 2599. A bill to declare that the United States holds certain public domain lands in trust for the Pueblo of Zia; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. WILSON (for himself, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. LUGAR, and Mr. TRIBLE):

S. 2600. A bill to amend section 201(g) of the Social Security Act to modify the manner in which payment is made from the Social Security Trust Funds for the cost of printing and mailing checks for benefits payable under titles II, XVI, XVIII and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. DIXON:

S.J. Res. 368. Joint resolution to designate the month of October 1986, as "National Spina Bifida Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ARMSTRONG:

S.J. Res. 369. Joint resolution to designate July 3, 1986, as "Let Freedom Ring Day", and to request the President to issue a proclamation encouraging the people of the United States to ring bells on such day immediately following the relighting of the torch of the Statue of Liberty; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. WEICKER, from the Committee on Small Business:

S. Res. 434. An original resolution to urge the President to submit to the Senate a nominee for the position of Administrator of the Small Business Administration; placed on the calendar.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. CHAFEE (for himself, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. PELL, and Mr. SIMON):

S. 2596. A bill to require the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to conduct a study of the adverse effects that the pollution of the environment caused by discarding or dumping of plastics on land and in the waters have on the environment, including the effects on fish and wildlife, to make recommendations for eliminating or lessening such adverse effects, and to require the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to control the pollution of the environment caused by the discarding of plastics on the land and in water; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

(The remarks of Mr. CHAFEE and the text of the legislation appear earlier in today's RECORD.)

By Mr. DANFORTH:

S. 2597. A bill to amend the Tariff Schedules of the United States to provide a temporary suspension of the duties imposed on certain extracorporeal shock wave lithotripters; to the Committee on Finance.

DUTY SUSPENSION ON LITHOTRIPTERS

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, current law permits nonprofit institutions that are established for educational or scientific purposes to import "instruments and apparatus" for their use duty-free if articles of equivalent scientific value are not being manufactured in the United States. This provision was enacted in 1966 to permit the United States to implement the Florence Agreement relating to international trade in scientific and educational devices.

Recently, several of our nonprofit hospitals and universities have sought to use this duty-free privilege to import extracorporeal shock wave lithotripters. The lithotripter is a medical device that permits the treatment of kidney stones without invasive surgery. The patient is immersed in water and subjected to ultrasonic high frequency sound waves which destroy the kidney stones. The device, which has recently been approved by the FDA for use in the United States, is presently made only by a West German company.

The nonprofit institutions that have imported lithotripters have encountered a very narrow interpretation of the duty-free privilege by the Commerce Department. Basically, Commerce believes that devices that can be used for therapeutic purposes are not scientific or educational instruments. Apparently, Commerce believes that the treatment of patients or the education of medical personnel does not fit within the objectives of the law. In some cases, Commerce has even disregarded advanced research projects requiring the use of lithotripters in concluding that the device is not eligible for duty-free treatment.

Commerce's interpretation is open to serious question, and at least one court has found their regulations too restrictive. Nonetheless, a legal challenge to the Commerce position would be time-consuming and costly, especially for nonprofit organizations. Rather than having the issue settled in court, the extension of temporary duty-free treatment to the importation of lithotripters by nonprofit institutions seems a reasonable solution. Accordingly, the bill I introduce today would allow those institutions to import lithotripters until the end of 1988 without duty. The bill would not affect the imports of lithotripters by profitmaking hospitals or providers of medical services and would assure that the spirit of the Florence Agreement is carried out.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2597

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXTRACORPOREAL SHOCK WAVE LITHOTRIPTERS.

Subpart B of part 1 of the Appendix to the Tariff Schedules of the United States is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new item:

"912.14	Extracorporeal shock wave lithotripters imported by nonprofit hospitals and research or educational institutions (provided for in item 709.15 or 709.17, part 2, schedule 7).	Free	No change	On or before 12/31/88".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) The amendment made by section 1 shall apply with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption on or after the date that is 15 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 or any other provision of law, upon proper request filed with the appropriate customs officer on or before the date that is 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, any entry, or withdrawal from warehouse, for consumption—

(1) which was made after December 31, 1983, and before the date that is 15 days after the date of enactment of this Act, and

(2) with respect to which there would have been no duty by reason of the amendment made by section 1 if such entry were made on the date that is 15 days after the date of enactment of this Act, shall be liquidated or reliquidated as though such entry or withdrawal had been made on the date that is 15 days after the date of enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. PELL:

S. 2598. A bill to authorize grants to States to enable States and local educational agencies to meet priority educational needs in the area of school dropouts, programs to combat illiteracy, programs for the gifted and talented, and for basic skills instruction for secondary school students, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

TARGETED EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE ACT

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the Federal financial share of public education represents about 10 percent of the total dollars spent on schooling in this country. That 10 percent, however small it may seem to be, carries a most important responsibility. It demonstrates clearly that there is a Federal role to be played in education, and it defines a series of critically important national education priorities. In doing so, it helps lay the foundation for developing the character of the next generation to whom we will inevitably pass the mantle of leadership.

I am deeply concerned that we are failing to pay heed to this fundamental responsibility. Pressure to balance the budget has all but paralyzed our stewardship over elementary and secondary education. Fiscal responsibility remains—as it should—our primary national foundation. But we cannot abdicate our responsibility for taking action in those areas where we see need. For there are critical problems that continue to cry out for Federal attention.

This responsibility brings to mind the words of the wonderfully articulate Adlai Stevenson:

To look squarely at the issue of education is to face nothing less than the central question of whether civilization is to prove a fulfillment of divine and national purpose—or whether it is to prove a bitter mockery.

It is impossible to fix a price tag on the cost wrought by our failure to nourish and cultivate young minds. All studies, however, indicate clearly that massive educational inadequacy holds our future hostage. It sentences us to the ever-increasing price of welfare, unemployment and crime. It lays to waste our productive potential. And, it jeopardizes our national and economic security.

Class after class of high school dropouts sap the strength of our economy. Secondary students systematically graduate without sufficient reading ability. The number of illiterate adults remains constant. And our most promising national resource—gifted and talented students—is wasted by the absence of sufficiently challenging academic programs.

Because of my deep concern in this regard, I am today introducing legislation which is mindful of two polar objectives. This legislation remains true to the national pressure for fiscal responsibility. But just as important, it responds to the call to cultivate our lost and untapped human potential.

My legislation, the Targeted Educational Assistance Act [TEAA], is revenue neutral. It represents no additional cost to the American taxpayer. But, it addresses the very grave need in four priority educational areas: school dropouts, illiteracy, programs for the gifted and talented and basic skills for secondary students.

Quite simply, this legislation calls for a major redirection of use of chapter 2 block grant funds. In effect, it would target use of these funds to four areas of paramount national need. Just as our forefathers protested an excessive tax by dumping tea into the harbor, so the TEAA Act which I introduce today protests our failure to deal with these four problems in an adequate and effective manner.

As the Federal education dollar tightens, we must ensure that these dollars are directed to areas of greatest need. Under current law, chapter 2 funds can be used for virtually any educational program. Henceforth, under the TEAA Act, chapter 2 funds will be redirected to programs of dropout prevention, to combat illiteracy, to provide basic skills instruction for secondary students, and to challenging programs for the gifted and talented.

The TEAA bill preserves the current formula for allocating funds to both State and local educational agencies. It also maintains the power held by each SEA and LEA to determine its own priorities for how the funds shall be spent, so long as they are directed to one of these four priority areas.

School dropouts, illiteracy, functional illiteracy, and the special needs of the gifted and talented have long been placed on the front burner of national concern. Their claim to this position is easily demonstrable.

Our national dropout rate remains unacceptably high. Over 25 percent—or 1 million students—drop out of school each year. The human cost of dropping out is immeasurable; the economic cost is staggering.

A study by UCLA estimates that each class of school dropouts will represent a cost to our Nation of $200 billion over their life span. These figures are comprised of the sharp loss in productivity and generated taxes, as well as the cost of incarceration, unemployment and welfare assistance. The cost of dropping out will haunt us across the economic spectrum. In 1950 each American retiree had 17 workers paying his or her Social Security benefits. By 1992 each retiree's benefits will be supported by only three people. Such a society lets its youth population go to waste at its own peril.

Sadly, this deplorable situation will only become more threatening as time goes on. The recent drive toward excellence—for tougher standards and increased course requirements—may push students who are close to the brink of dropping out of school over that edge. In many urban areas where the dropout rate is already 80 percent, we cannot afford to allow that to happen.

The dropout rate in my own State of Rhode Island is 26.6 percent. Most of these dropouts are from the lower end of the economic ladder. Unfortunately for them, leaving school only serves to permanently entrench the cycle of poverty that their families have endured for generations.

Without basic skills, these high school dropouts have scant chance of achieving even a minimum standard of living. Without a decent job, these youth have a tremendous incentive to turn to crime. Ironically, it is cheaper to adequately educate a student than to keep that youth in jail. The cost of incarceration in Rhode Island is close to six times that of a high school education: $21,000 for incarceration versus $3,600 for high school. It would well serve the interests of our States therefore, if the Federal Government were to target some sorely needed funds into saving—and not squandering—this precious human capital.

Another area of human tragedy—that of illiteracy—has a dramatic impact on dropout levels. The inability to read while going through school has a devastating effect on a student's sense of self-esteem. Leaving school becomes an unfortunate but preferable option.

It is estimated that well over 26 million people in this country cannot read. Tasks which we perform as reflexes are impossible for people who cannot read. Reading a newspaper, selecting cans of food, filling out a job application, and understanding a note sent home from school are beyond the reach of these people. Lack of reading ability forces an individual into perilous battles with prescription labels, traffic signs, and poison warnings. And, the consequences of massive illiteracy levels are acutely felt in every aspect of American life: in the workplace and in the home.

Illiteracy is cause for concern and alarm. In a comparison with other nations, the United States falls far short of even a respectable rank. Out of 158 member nations of the United Nations, the United States ranks an unimpressive 49th.

While 26 million people are illiterate, it is estimated that a far greater number of citizens are functionally illiterate, meaning that they read below an eighth grade level. Functional illiteracy among minority youth may run as high as 40 percent. Thirteen percent of all 17-year-olds have inadequate reading, writing, and comprehension skills.

Many of these students graduate from high school year after year. School systems lack the resources to ensure that each student can perform well on reading tests. Tragically, these inadequacies are immediately felt in the workplace. Those students who are able to obtain employment fail or fall behind on the job. This forces business and industry to spend $40 billion annually to train employees. Fast-food chains have had to switch their keyboards from words to pictures to improve the performance of their work force.

The military suffers the consequences of inadequate schooling as well. The Defense Department allocated close to $100 million over the past 6 years solely for basic skills training and remedial education for new recruits. In fact, the military has turned its weapons operations manuals into comic books so that recruits may better learn to operate them.

Clearly, there is overwhelming need for a saturation of compensatory education in our secondary schools. Failure to invest money in compensatory education and dropout prevention is to my mind penny-wise and pound-foolish. It costs only $500 to provide a year of compensatory education to a student before he or she gets into academic trouble. It costs over $3,000 when one such student repeats one grade once.

Outside of remedial education, there is another area where educational investment at an early stage will reap rewards manyfold in coming years. That investment is in the education of our gifted and talented children. There are 2½ million gifted and talented students in this country. Fifty percent of these students have never been identified. For those known to be gifted, curriculum is often inadequate. Roughly half of these students achieve below their ability level.

This country ransoms its future when it fails to push our best and brightest to the full limits of their abilities. Without a challenging education, many of these students will leave school altogether. In fact, close to 18 percent of high school dropouts are gifted and talented students.

The technological complexities of the coming age will require—as never before—the most sophisticated minds. Not only will we be called upon to produce the technology itself, but we will be required to recognize the ethical consequences of that knowledge as well.

The issues I have just described have reached the point of educational crisis. Yet, they have been left unattended, and are perilously close to a point of boiling over. To my mind, we have an obligation to commit Federal resources to address these needs.

The chapter 2 block grant provides a fitting vehicle for responding to this call. A major evaluation of the chapter 2 block grant by the Department of Education recognizes that funds which had served disadvantaged children are now directed toward other purposes.

With the need so great and the dollar so tight we cannot afford to continue to allow this money to be used for general purposes. Concentrating chapter 2 funds on these four priority concerns would at least ensure that the needs of dropouts, of the illiterate population, of educationally disadvantaged high school students, and of the gifted and talented are being addressed.

Toward that end, I am reminded of the words of Hubert Humphrey who said:

> The ideal, of course, is an educational system that will train rather than chain the human mind, that will uplift rather than depress the human spirit, that will illuminate rather than obscure the path to wisdom, that will help every member of society in the full use of his natural talents.

Too many students remain outside the grasp of this noble ideal. Those who do not reach to the full limits of their natural talents—dropouts, the illiterate, the gifted and talented and the functionally illiterate—lay a shaky foundation upon which to build this Nation.

I have long held that the real strength of this Nation is measured not by our weapons of destruction, nor by our machinery of construction, nor even by the amount of gold in Fort Knox. It is measured instead by the sum total of the education and character of our people.

We as a nation are diminished when we fail to educate one-quarter of our citizenry. We are crippled when 26 million people cannot read. And we as a people lose when 2.5 million students cannot be challenged to reach their full potential.

No citizen should have to live below the level of his full ability. It is my great hope that we in this Chamber can work together to achieve this ideal. We cannot afford in good conscience to turn our backs on a population which has nowhere else to turn.

To my mind, it is crucial that we move quickly to address these very grave problems. For, what we have at stake is no less than the future health, vitality and economic security of this great country. I commend the legislation we are introducing today to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle and urge them to join me in cosponsoring this very important bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2598

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Targeted Educational Assistance Act".

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. Section 561(a) of the Education Consolidation Improvement Act of 1981 (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Act") is amended to read as follows:

"(1) school dropout prevention programs;

"(2) programs to combat illiteracy;

"(3) programs for the gifted and talented; and

"(4) basic skills instruction programs for elementary and secondary school students.".

STATE AND LOCAL APPLICATIONS

SEC. 3. (a) Section 564(a)(3) of the Act is amended by striking out "subchapters A, B, and C" and inserting in lieu thereof "subchapters A, B, C, and D".

(b) Section 566(a)(1) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(1) sets forth the planned allocation of funds under this chapter, for programs authorized by one or more subchapters of this chapter which the local educational agency intends to support, including the allocation of funds required to implement section 586;".

SCHOOL DROPOUT PREVENTION PROGRAMS

SEC. 4. Subchapter A of chapter 2 of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"SUBCHAPTER A—DROPOUT PREVENTION PROGRAM

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 571. The purpose of this subchapter is to reduce the number of elementary and secondary school students who do not complete elementary and secondary school education.

"USES OF FUNDS

"SEC. 572. (a) Funds allocated for use under this subchapter shall be used by State and local education agencies to establish and demonstrate—

"(1) programs to identify potential dropouts and prevent them from dropping out;

"(2) programs to identify and encourage children who have already dropped out to reenter school and complete their elementary and secondary education; and

"(3) model systems for collecting and reporting information to officials of local educational agencies on—

"(A) the number, ages, and grade levels of the children not completing elementary and secondary education, and

"(B) the reasons why such children have dropped out of school.

"(b) Activities authorized under this subchapter may include—

"(1) the establishment of school district or school-level policies, procedures, and plans for dropout prevention and school reentry;

"(2) guidance and counseling services, including peer interaction activities;

"(3) ombudsman or mentor services for potential school dropouts;

"(4) development and implementation of extended day or summer programs, designed to address poor achievement, language deficiencies, or course failures;

"(5) the establishment or expansion of work-study, apprentice, or internship programs;

"(6) projects designed to use the resources of the community to provide services to the local educational agency or potential school dropouts;

"(7) the evaluation and revision of program placement of students at risk;

"(8) reviewing curriculum relevancy;

"(9) activities designed to improve student motivation and the school learning environment;

"(10) training for school personnel to identify children at risk of dropping out, to intervene in the instructional program with support and remedial services, to develop realistic expectations for student performance, and to improve student-staff interactions; and

"(11) other services and activities which directly relate to the purpose of this subchapter.

"(c) In order to conduct the activities authorized by this subchapter, each State and local educational agency may use funds reserved for this subchapter to make grants to and enter into contracts with local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, community-based organizations, and other public and private agencies, organizations, and institutions.".

SPECIAL PROGRAMS FOR THE GIFTED AND TALENTED

SEC. 5. Subchapter B of chapter 2 of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"SUBCHAPTER B—SPECIAL PROGRAMS FOR THE GIFTED AND TALENTED

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 574. It is the purpose of this subchapter to permit State and local educational agencies to use funds available for this subchapter to plan, develop, operate, and improve programs designed to meet the special educational needs of gifted and talented children.

"AUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES

"SEC. 575. Activities authorized under this subchapter may include—

"(1) support programs which are designed to meet the educational needs of gifted and talented children at the preschool, elementary, and secondary levels;

"(2) providing for inservice teacher training of personnel to teach gifted and talented children;

"(3) providing for the special needs of disadvantaged gifted and talented children from low-income families; and

"(4) providing instructional equipment and materials including software.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 576. For the purpose of this subchapter, the term 'gifted and talented children' means children, and whenever applicable youth, who are identified at the preschool, if applicable, elementary, or secondary school level as possessing demonstrated or potential abilities that give evidence of high performance capability in areas such as intellectual, creative, specific academic, or leadership ability, or in the performing or visual arts, and who, by reason thereof, require services and activities not ordinarily provided by the school.".

PROGRAMS TO COMBAT ILLITERACY

SEC. 6. Subchapter C of chapter 2 of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"SUBCHAPTER C—PROGRAMS TO COMBAT ILLITERACY

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 578. It is the purpose of this subchapter to permit State and local educational agencies to use funds available under this subchapter to reduce the number of children and adults who are functionally illiterate.

"AUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES

"SEC. 579. (a) Activities authorized under this subchapter may include—

"(1) the planning, development, and operation of programs which are designed to improve the basic literacy skills of the student and adult population;

"(2) training of personnel to teach basic literacy skills;

"(3) programs for the recruitment and training of volunteers;

"(4) outreach, guidance, and counseling services; and

"(5) programs which use the resources of the community to help develop and implement solutions for the problem of illiteracy.

"(b) In order to conduct the activities authorized by this subchapter, each State and local educational agency may use funds reserved for this subchapter to make grants to and enter into contracts with local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, libraries, museums, and other public and private agencies, organizations, and institutions.".

BASIC SKILLS INSTRUCTION

SEC. 7. The Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating subchapters D and E as subchapters E and F, respectively; and

(2) by adding after subchapter C, as amended by section 6, the following new subchapter:

"SUBCHAPTER D—BASIC SKILLS INSTRUCTION

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 580. It is the purpose of this subchapter to permit State and local educational agencies to use Federal funds available for this subchapter to improve basic skills instruction for economically disadvantaged secondary school students.

"ACTIVITIES AUTHORIZED

"SEC. 581. (a) Activities authorized under this subchapter may include—

"(1) the planning, development, and operation of programs designed specifically to increase the basic skills proficiency of educationally and academically disadvantaged secondary school students;

"(2) teacher training, inservice, or retraining in basic skills instruction;

"(3) the payment of a salary supplement for teachers for providing after school or evening instruction to students; and

"(4) guidance and counseling services.

"(b) Each State and local educational agency conducting activities authorized under this subchapter shall make every effort, in carrying out such activities, to consult with parents of students in need of basic skills instruction.

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 582. For the purpose of this subchapter, the term 'economically disadvantaged secondary school students' means students aged 14 to 17, inclusive, who are counted under section 111(c) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as modified by chapter 1 of this Act, in the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the determination is made.".

By Mr. DOMENICI (for himself and Mr. BINGAMAN):

S. 2599. A bill to declare that the United States holds certain public domain lands in trust for the Pueblo of Zia; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

PUEBLO OF ZIA LAND TRANSFER

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the New Mexico Congressional Delegation has very carefully analyzed this relatively small transfer of about 1,840 acres of land from the Bureau of Land Management [BLM] to the Pueblo of Zia. We are fully in support of this request and ask the concurrence of our colleagues in declaring that the United States hold these lands in trust for the Pueblo of Zia. This bill is being introduced simultaneously in the Senate and in the House of Representatives.

The land in question is currently held by the Bureau of Land Management for grazing permitees. The Pueblo of Zia is the current permit holder of the 1,840 acres known as the Parada Piedra allotment. This allotment is completely surrounded by the Zia Pueblo Reservation. Passage of this legislation would consolidate the Zia Pueblo lands. To achieve this consolidation goal, the Pueblo also purchased the Estrella Garcia Ranch. The ranch was about 320 acres and has been placed in trust for the Zia Pueblo by administrative action.

This action to add 1,840 acres to the Pueblo of Zia makes good sense because there is no better use for this land that is encompassed by Pueblo of Zia land is currently being used by them. The Pueblo of Zia is currently almost 118,000 acres in size. The addition of the Parada Piedra allotment would enlarge the acreage to about 120,000 acres. In addition to the Tribal Council Resolution and the All Indian Pueblo Council Resolution of support for this action, the county commission of Sandoval County supports this transfer. In their resolution, the Sandoval County Commission states that "by such transfer, no lands would be removed from the tax rolls, nor would the rights of any adjacent landowners be impaired, nor would the use of any existing roadways or utility services be impeded."

The three major interested non-Indian parties are Plains Electric Generation and Transmission Cooperative, Inc., Yates Petroleum, and Merle Chambers. The former has an easement across the subject lands, and the latter two have oil and gas leases on the land to be placed in trust for Zia Pueblo. As regards the electric company easement, this bill provides for permission to renew the right-of-way at a fee to be determined by the BLM to be the fair value. This bill also protects the existing oil and gas leases and rights of ingress and egress across trust lands in order to reach lands subject to these continuing leases.

In its letter of support, the New Mexico State Office of the BLM states that the "land involved is completely surrounded by Indian land and isolated from other lands administered by the Bureau of Land Management, making it difficult for BLM to give proper management attention to the area. Therefore, strictly from a range management standpoint, transfer of the land to trust status for Zia would incorporate the land involved into the Pueblo's land, thus becoming eligible to benefit from the Bureau of Indian Affairs [BIA] range improvement programs and better able to achieve its maximum potential for grazing use." The State BLM Office concluded, "We are unaware of any negative consequences that would result to the United States or third parties as the result of such transfer."

I believe, Mr. President, that the BLM position is reasonable and that this transfer will actually serve to improve the land usage with the assitance of BIA funds. The BLM letter also states that the "Pueblo has proven to be a responsible manager, having sharply reduced the grazing of the area to allow the range to improve." All indications are that these improvements will continue with even greater incentives on the part of the Pueblo as the beneficiary of trust lands held for its use.

Another significant aspect of this land transfer is the protection of several religious shrines on the subject land. These shrines are still in use today, and, sadly many have been looted by non-Indians with little or no understanding of their purpose. There are sacred springs on this land, and rituals are conducted to maintain the Indian belief that their own old supernatural beings must know that the Indians are doing their part and that, hence, they, the supernaturals, must cooperate by doing theirs. Both efforts are necessary, according to Indian lore, "if Nature is to function for the coming season as through all time in the past." Thus, the shrines, which have been described to us by the Pueblo of Zia are still in use today and will be better protected under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. President, this bill is important to the people of Zia Pueblo. They are the current users of the land, and passage of our bill will enhance their ability to protect and use this land in a manner that will be beneficial to all. Therefore, the New Mexico Congressional Delegation endorses this bill, and we ask the concurrence of our colleagues.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2599

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Section 1. All rights, title, and interests of the United States in the surface and mineral estates (including oil and gas) of the following lands under jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management of the Department of the Interior that are situated within Sandoval County in the State of New Mexico are hereby declared to be held by the United States in trust for the benefit and use of the Pueblo of Zia:

Southeast quarter of the northeast quarter and the southeast quarter of Section 24, Township 15 North, Range 1 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian;

All of Section 25, Township 15 North, Range 1 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian;

South half of the southwest quarter and the southeast quarter of Section 26, Township 15 North, Range 1 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian;

All of Section 35, Township 15 North, Range 1 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian; and East half of the northeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 3, Township 14 North, Range 1 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian, Containing 1,840 acres, more or less.

SEC. 2. (a) Upon enactment of this Act and subject to the other provisions of this Act, the lands described in section 1 shall be administered in accordance with the laws generally applicable to property held in trust by the United States for Indian tribes.

(b) All gross receipts (including, but not limited to, bonuses, rents, and royalties) which—

(1) are derived by the United States from any contract, permit, or lease relating to the surface or mineral estate in the lands described in section 1, and

(2) are received by the United States after the date of enactment of this Act.

shall be administered in accordance with the laws generally applicable to receipts from property held in trust by the United States for Indian tribes.

SEC. 3. All lands described in section 1 and all the receipts from such lands referred to in section 2(b), shall be exempt from Federal, State, and local taxation so long as such property is held in trust by the United States. No distribution of such receipts to tribal members shall be considered as—

(1) income or resources of such members for purposes of any such taxation, or

(2) income or resources of such members for purposes of denying or reducing (or otherwise utilized as the basis for denying or reducing) financial assistance or other benefits to such member, or the household of such member, under the Social Security Act or any other Federal or federally assisted program.

SEC. 4. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all applications for mineral leases involving the lands described in section 1, including oil and gas leases, pending on the date of enactment of this Act shall be rejected and the advance rental payments returned to the applicants.

SEC. 5. (a) Nothing in this Act shall deprive any person (other than the United States) of any lease, right-of-way, mining claim, grazing permit, water right, or other right or interest which such person may have in the surface or mineral estate of any lands described in section 1 on the day before the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) The water rights appurtenant to the lands described in section 1 shall be those water rights that are appurtenant to such lands under State law on the day before the date of enactment of this Act. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to create or affect any water rights other than those that are appurtenant to such lands under State law on the day before the date of enactment of this Act.

(c)(1) Nothing in this Act shall affect the right-of-way over any lands described in section 1 for a 115-KV transmission line by Plains Electric Generation and Transmission Cooperative, Inc., granted by the Bureau of Land Management of the Department of the Interior on April 18, 1961, and bearing identification number NM0149992.

(2) Plains Electric Generation and Transmission Cooperative, Inc., and its successors and assigns, shall be permitted to renew the right-of-way described in paragraph (1) under rules and regulations of the Secretary—

(A) to the same extent and in the same manner as would be permitted had this Act not been enacted, and

(B) for fees which are not greater than the fair value as determined by the Bureau of Land Management of the Department of the Interior.

(3) No charge, fee, or tax may be imposed by the Pueblo of Zia on any lands, facilities, activities, or revenue in connection with the right-of-way described in paragraph (1), except for fees charged with respect to any renewed right-of-way described in paragraph (2).

(d)(1) Nothing in this Act shall affect—

(A) the oil and gas lease issued on May 1, 1983, by the United States to Yates Petroleum Corporation, bearing Serial No. NM 55801,

(B) the oil and gas lease issued on December 1, 1977, by the United States to Merle C. Chambers, Denver, Colorado, bearing Serial No. NM 31557,

(C) any other oil or gas leases that were valid and subsisting on the day before the date of enactment of this Act,

(D) any rights, terms, conditions, and covenants (both express and implied) granted under any oil or gas lease referred to in any of the preceding subparagraphs, and

(E) reasonable access (including but not limited to rights of ingress and egress) across lands described in section 1 or which are otherwise owned by or under the control of the Pueblo of Zia insofar as it may be necessary to cross such lands in order to reach lands subject to any oil or gas lease referred to in any of the preceding subparagraphs.

(2)(A) Notwithstanding section 2(a), the lands described in section 1 which are subject to the leases described in paragraph (1) shall continue to be administered by the Bureau of Land Management of the Department of the Interior in conformity with the laws and policies applicable to oil and gas operations on the public domain.

(B) All gross receipts from any leases described in paragraph (1) shall be administered in accordance with the laws generally applicable to receipts from property held in trust by the United States for Indian tribes.●

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, today I join my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from New Mexico, Mr. DOMENICI, to introduce legislation to convey a small parcel of land to the Pueblo of Zia. This transfer has the support of the entire New Mexico delegation and similar legislation will be introduced on the House side by the New Mexico Members.

This legislation conveys 1,840 acres of land now under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management [BLM] to the Bureau of Indian Affairs to be held in trust for the use and benefit of the Pueblo of Zia. This land presently forms an island within the current Pueblo boundary. Because it does not have legal access to the island, the Bureau of Land Management has not been able to conduct range management activity, nor has the Bureau of Indian Affairs taken responsibility for the lands because jurisdiction falls under the BLM. Because of this no mans land status, the Federal Government does not adequately supervise and manage this land. I believe that the bill we introduce today vests responsibility to the people who have the greatest interest in the land—the Pueblo of Zia.

While I support this transfer, it by no means presents my general preference for handling land issues within the Federal Government. Land in the public domain should not be transferred on a wholesale basis unless unique or extraordinary circumstances warrant such a transfer. On close analysis of the facts in this request, I believe that the interest of the public and of the parties involved are better served if the 1,840 acres are put into trust status.

I have tried to approach such land matters in as systematic a manner as possible. And although I readily acknowledge that each case is different, there are four major considerations that I use to guide me in tribal land transfer requests. My first consideration looks to the tribe's prior attempts, if any, to seek the land in question through congressional action, and/or any attempts to seek money damages either before the Indian Claims Commission or the Court of Claims. In this instance, the Pueblo of Zia has not made any previous request for congressional action nor, according to their attorneys, did they receive any damages for the tract of land. My general concern is that there must be some end to these types of cases and the goal of Congress should be to look at these requests in terms of whether they duplicate previous efforts. It behooves Congress to restore land when necessary but to refrain from doing so if equitable redress has already been achieved. I am satisfied that the Pueblo meets this concern.

The Pueblo's legal rights and equitable interests in the land are the third and fourth considerations that I find important. Although the Pueblo does not own the land outright, it does own the surface rights. In 1981 it purchased the grazing rights of the "Estrella Garcia Grazing Rights Allotment," which is the 1,840 acres in question. Since legal title demonstrates ownership and in this instance the Pueblo only has surface use, the equitable interest of a possessory act of occupancy, which is distinct from an outright property interest, helps us analyze the Pueblo's interest in the land. According to Prof. Florence Hawley Ellis of the University of New Mexico, the area has been occupied by the Pueblo of Zia since the 1300's. More importantly, the historical documentation and current information persuade me that the Pueblo continues to actually, exclusively, and continuously use the land. Zia religious leaders regularly visit the known eight religious sites on the 1,840 acres and the Zia potters continue to collect white, black, and red paints from a known site on this land. The Zia's longstanding historic and religious attachment to the land and the several major religious shrines at which the Zia worship convince me of the Zia's equitable interest. Further, the Zia plan to use the land for additional grazing, points to it's continued use for future generations.

The last and fourth consideration that influences my decisions on these types of issues, is the impact of the proposed transfer on third parties. Invariably the land a tribe seeks to have restored to it has a history of competing use and ownership. Consequently, we in Congress become factfinders—weighing the various interests—and then reaching the best result possible. Third party interests include the extent of surface use and who has that use; preexisting interests and legal rights such as easements, rights of way, memorandums of agreement, and water rights appurtenant to the land; and the public's present use of the land and how extensive that is. In the present case the Pueblo of Zia owns the grazing rights to the 1,840 acres, which means that unlike other situations this land has one surface user. There are however preexisting rights to the land in the form of two oil and gas leases owned by Yates Petroleum and a Mr. Merle Chambers. Also, Plains Electric Generation and Transmission Cooperative has a right-of-way for a transmission line. These legal rights are protected in the legislation, and the Pueblo and these entities have reached a compromise on the language to be included in this legislation. Further, the bill specifies that water rights appurtenant to the land shall be those rights existing under State law at the date of enactment of the bill and no new water rights are created or conveyed.

I believe that the legislation overall adequately addresses any preexisting rights and other interests and, when weighed against the almost exclusive use of the land by the Pueblo, the public interest is at a minimum. Also, Sandoval County where this land is located, supports the proposed transfer. I ask that a letter from the Sandoval County Board of Commissioners appear in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. Also, I ask that a letter from Charles Luscher, State director of the Bureau of Land Management also appear at the conclusion of my statement. Mr. Luscher states in his letter that,

> We are unaware of any negative consequences that would result to the United States or third parties as the result of such transfer. The Pueblo has bought out the non-Indian ownership interest, and there are no other adjacent based lands that would entitle anyone else to acquire the grazing lease. Specific interests are protected in the proposed bill.

Mr. President, I believe that this legislation carefully weighs the various interests involved and seeks the most equitable solution possible. I urge my colleagues to favorably support this bill.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION No. 05-09-85

Whereas, the County of Sandoval, State of New Mexico, is the heart of Indian country, containing numerous Indian reservations, among them the Pueblo of Zia; and

Whereas, the County of Sandoval is keenly interested in the welfare of the Indian people of Sandoval County, the preservation of Indian religion and tradition, the economic development of its Indian tribes, and the consolidation of Indian land for further development of reservations; and

Whereas, the Pueblo of Zia has acquired, through the use of its own money and resources, rights to a parcel of land encompassed by its reservation lands, known as the "Estrella Garcia grazing allotment," composed primarily of rights to BLM leases and consisting of approximately 1,840 acres located in Sandoval County, New Mexico, and

Whereas, the Pueblo of Zia desires that such BLM lands be taken by the Untied States in trust for the Pueblo of Zia, in order that, by so doing, the lands of the Pueblo would be consolidated and would be amenable to certain benefits by the Bureau of Indian Affairs which are not presently available;

Whereas, by such transfer, no lands would be removed from the tax rolls, nor would the rights of any adjacent landowners be impaired, nor would the use of any existing roadways or utility services be impeded;

Now Therefore Be It Resolved That the County Commission of Sandoval County, New Mexico, does encourage the efforts of the Pueblo of Zia in consolidating its lands and improving its economic base for the benefit of the Zia people, and does give its support and approval to any Federal legislation or administrative action which would transfer the described land, composed of 1,840 acres, from its present status as BLM land to land held in trust by the United States of America for the Pueblo of Zia.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR, BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT,
Santa Fe, NM, March 27, 1986.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
U.S. Senator, SD-434 Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DOMENICI: This office, in consultation with our Albuquerque District Office, has reviewed the proposed bill "to declare that the United States holds certain domain lands in trust for the Pueblo of Zia," proposed to be introduced by you, which would declare certain land to be held in trust for the Pueblo of Zia.

The land involved, which consists of 1840 acres administered by the Bureau of Land Management, is not located near any paved roads or developed areas. Its only practical value is as grazing land; we are aware of no other development potential on the property. The Pueblo of Zia acquired the base fee land and grazing permits in 1979, and since then has managed the ranch to some extent as part of its larger grazing area. The Pueblo has proven to be a responsible manager, having sharply reduced the grazing of the area to allow the range to improve.

The land involved is completely surrounded by Indian land and isolated from other lands administered by the Bureau of Land Management (BLM), making it difficult for BLM to give proper management attention to the area. Therefore, strictly from a range management standpoint, transfer of the land to trust status of Zia would incorporate the land involved into the Pueblo's land, thus becoming eligible to benefit from the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) range improvement programs and better able to achieve its maximum potential for grazing use.

We are unaware of any negative consequences that would result to the United States or third parties as the result of such transfer. The Pueblo has bought out the non-Indian ownership interest, and there are no other adjacent base lands that would entitle anyone else to acquire the grazing lease. Specific interests are protected in the porposed bill. The 115-KV transmission line of Plains Electric Generation and Transmission Cooperative, Inc., is specifically provided for in the proposed bill, as are the two oil and gas lessees, Yates Petroleum Corporation (Serial No. NM 55801) and Merle C. Chambers (Serial No. NM 31557). Any other persons are protected by Section 5 of the proposed bill, which recognizes "any lease, right-of-way, mining claim, grazing permit, water right, or any other right or interest which such person may have" in the land.

If we can provide any additional information, please feel free to contact us.

Sincerely,

CHARLES W. LUSCHER,
State Director.●

By Mr. WILSON (for himself, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. LUGAR, and Mr. TRIBLE):

S. 2600. A bill to amend section 201(g) of the Social Security Act to modify the manner in which payment is made from the Social Security Trust Funds for the costs of printing and mailing checks for benefits payable under titles II, XVI, and XVIII of such Act; to the Committee on Finance.

MAILING OF SOCIAL SECURITY CHECKS

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, the deficit problem is of paramount interest to us all, and the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law makes a concerted effort to address this national pariah. I want to stress for the record my unwaivering support for the deficit reduction law despite the many unpopular decisions made to achieve a balanced budget by fiscal year 1991. Unfortunately, an unintended effect of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is in need of congressional action.

As we all know, the Social Security Trust Funds have been protected from sequestration orders under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law. All Social Security recipients have been assured that their benefit checks will not be cut. We are all well aware of the fact that Social Security moneys belong to the American people—not to the Federal Government.

Mr. President, after careful study I have discovered that the moneys necessary to print and mail these very same Social Security benefit checks are subject to sequestration. The problem, Mr. President, is inherent in the current process in which the Financial Management Service receives its funds, and can easily be corrected. All we need to do is perform a simple accounting, or technical adjustment, which will not increase Federal spending.

Mr. President, the Financial Management Service is responsible to issue all Social Security benefits checks. FMS currently seeks an annual appropriation from Congress to pay for all costs associated with mailing the checks. FMS later bills the Social Security Trust Funds, managed by the Secretary of the Treasury, for it expenses related to the checks, and the trust funds then pay the General Fund of the Treasury. Under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, FMS' budget request would be subject to sequester, as all Government agencies' budgets are. This could jeopardize FMS' ability to continue ensuring all Americans that all benefit checks would be issued and mailed on time.

To solve this problem, I am introducing legislation which proposes to do no more than change this particular process. It will permit the transfer of funds from the trust funds directly to the Financial Management Service rather than to the General Fund. FMS will therefore no longer have to go to Congress for an appropriation for mailing costs. At the same time we would be guaranteeing that FMS will be able to mail all benefit checks on time.

If we do not adjust the appropriation process for the costs necessary to issue and mail all benefit checks, the Financial Management Service will be faced with a no-win situation—on one hand the responsibility to mail out all checks but faced with a possible postage rate increase in the face of a mandated cut.

Mr. President, under my bill the Financial Management Service will continue to receive all the moneys necessary for it to provide its most vital service to all Social Security benefit recipients. This bill will tell all Americans, unequivocally, that they can rest assured—all benefit checks will continue to be processed and mailed on time.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2600

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. METHOD OF PAYMENT FOR COSTS OF PRINTING AND MAILING CERTAIN BENEFIT CHECKS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 201(g) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401(g)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5)(A) The Managing Trustee of the Trust Funds (which for purposes of this paragraph shall also include the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund established by title XVIII) is directed to pay from the appropriate Trust Funds to the Secretary of the Treasury the amounts estimated by the Managing Trustee to be the stationery, printing, and postage costs to be incurred by the Financial Management Service of the Department of the Treasury with respect to the issuance of benefit checks under titles II, XVI, and XVIII of this Act during a three-month period.

"(B) amounts paid to the Secretary of the Treasury under subparagraph (A) shall be credited to the Financial Management Service and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, shall be available for expenditure by the Financial Management Service for the purposes specified in such subparagraph.

"(C)(i) No payment may be made under paragraph (1) for any item or service for which payment is made under subparagraph (A).

"(ii) Amounts paid to the Secretary of the Treasury under subparagraph (A) shall not be considered to be administrative expenses of the Trust Funds.

"(D) If it subsequently appears that the estimates under subparagraph (A) for any three-month period were either too high or too low, appropriate adjustments shall be made by the Managing Trustee in future payments.

"(E) A final accounting of payments made pursuant to subparagraph (A) for any fiscal year shall be made at the earliest practicable date after the close thereof.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective on October 1, 1986.●

By Mr. DIXON:

S.J. Res. 368. Joint resolution to designate the month of October 1986, as "National Spina Bifida Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(The remarks of Mr. DIXON and the text of the legislation appear earlier in today's RECORD.)

By Mr. ARMSTRONG:

S.J. Res. 369. Joint resolution to designate July 3, 1986, as "Let Freedom Ring Day," and to request the President to issue a proclamation encouraging the people of the United States to ring bells on such day immediately following the relighting of the torch of the Statue of Liberty; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LET FREEDOM RING DAY

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, on July 4, 1986, Americans will celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Statue of Liberty. This is a celebration of our heritage as Americans. One way to take part in the celebration is to "Let Freedom Ring."

Today, I am introducing a resolution designating July 3, 1986, as "Let Freedom Ring Day." The resolution requests the President to issue a proclamation encouraging that bells across the country would ring simultaneously at 10:53 p.m. eastern standard time. The bell ringing would immediately follow President Reagan's lighting of the torch at the Statue of Liberty.

The Statue of Liberty symbolizes traditional values we Americans believe in—liberty, justice, freedom and opportunity. These were the basic values our ancestors came to America in search of. Many of our ancestors made the trek to America on boats via New York Harbor and their first glance of the United States was the Statue of Liberty.

It is difficult to imagine a world without the values that have become part of our everyday lives. What if we were not allowed to practice our own religions, or say what we felt, or write what we thought? America became a melting pot of races, religions, ideas, and dreams. Our ancestors came in search of what they could not find in their native countries.

As the 100th anniversary of the Statue of Liberty draws near, let us reflect on what it means to be an American. One way to take part in the celebration is to "Let Freedom Ring." The sound of bells ringing in every State across this great land of ours reminds us that we are Americans and we do enjoy the values of liberty, freedom, justice, and opportunity.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 434—URGING THE PRESIDENT TO SUBMIT A NOMINEE FOR THE POSITION OF ADMINISTRATOR OF THE SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. WEICKER, from the Committee on Small Business, reported the following original resolution; which was placed on the calendar:

S. RES. 434

Whereas President Reagan on April 7, 1986, signed the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-272);

Whereas Title XVIII of Public Law 99-272 maintains the Small Business Administration as an independent agency and authorizes funding for its business loan, disaster, and management assistance programs through fiscal year 1988;

Whereas the provisions of Title XVIII of Public Law 99-272 are based on the congressional budget for fiscal year 1986, which embodied the three-year agreement reached with the administration regarding the future of the Small Business Administration;

Whereas the Senate and House, in budget resolutions for fiscal year 1987, have retained the Small Business Administration as an independent agency and assumed the continuation of the Small Business Administration's business lending, management assistance, and disaster loan programs;

Whereas 45 out of 51 State sessions of the White House Conference on Small Business have recommended that the Small Business Administration be retained as an independent agency;

Whereas small businesses, which lead the Nation in job creation and innovation, are a vital segment of our economy as recognized by President Reagan's proclamation declaring May 18-24, 1986, as "National Small Business Week";

Whereas the Small Business Administration is the only Federal agency whose sole mission has been to serve our Nation's small businesses;

Whereas the best interests of this Nation's small business community are served through maintaining an independent Small Business Administration with both management assistance and financial programs;

Whereas since the resignation of Mr. James Sanders as Administrator of the Small Business Administration on March 31, 1986, there has been an Acting Administrator at the Small Business Administration;

Whereas certain actions of the Acting Administrator of the Small Business Administration have tended to undermine the morale of the Small Business Administration, as he would eliminate major small business programs, thereby directly contradicting the course of action for the Small Business Administration agreed upon by Congress and the President in the Combined Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That—

(1) it is the sense of the Senate that the Nation's 15 million small businesses deserve to be represented by an independent agency with a permanent Administrator who is committed to promoting all of the agency's programs; and

(2) the members of the United States Senate urge the President to submit immediately to the Senate for confirmation a nominee to be the Administrator of the Small Business Administration.

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to join the distinguished Senator from Connecticut as an original cosponsor of a Senate resolution urging the President to submit to the Senate a nominee for the position of Administrator of the Small Business Administration, It is imperative that this position, which has been vacant since the resignation of James Sanders on March 31, be filled promptly.

The Small Business Administration, an independent agency which represents this Nation's 15 million small businesses, has had misguided leadership since April 1, when Mr. Charles Heatherly was appointed Acting Administrator. On this April Fools Day, Mr. Heatherly dismissed 6 of the 10 Regional SBA Administrators simply because they were ardent supporters of the programs and policies of the SBA—the very programs and policies they were charged to administer. Since that time, Mr. Heatherly has continued to pursue a course of action to dismantle the SBA and to transfer some of its programs to the Department of Commerce.

Mr. Heatherly's actions and arrogance fly in the face of the President's signing of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act on April 7 which included a 3-year reauthorization of the Small Business Administration. This law achieves over $2.5 billion in savings, while maintaining SBA's essential functions. These cutbacks, therefore, are consistent with the President's goal of reducing spending; however, it maintains the framework of a vital agency.

Mr. President, small businesses are the backbone of this Nation. These business enterprises are repsonsible for the creation of more jobs and inventions than any other segment of our economy. The importance of small businesses and the role these firms play in our economy cannot be underestimated and, certainly, should not be ignored.

Mr. President, I strongly support this resolution and urge our colleagues to do the same.●

● Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I rise to speak in support of this original resolution, just reported by the Senate Small Business Committee, strongly urging President Reagan to submit a nomination for the office of Administrator of the Small Business Administration. Since March 31, when Jim Sanders resigned as SBA Administrator, SBA has been headed by an Acting Administrator, Mr. Charles Heatherly, whose qualifications for that position have never been reviewed by the Small Business Committee or by the Senate, as is required by law under the Small Business Act.

First, I want to commend the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, Senator SASSER, for having introduced a similar resolution in April which I cosponsored. Second, Chairman WEICKER has my highest commendation for calling our committee together to markup an original resolution on this subject.

I have been deeply concerned, Mr. President, about Mr. Heatherly's dedication to his job and about the implications of this situation for our Nation's 14 million small businesses, their owners and employees who pay taxes to support SBA and who are entitled to services in return for their tax dollars. I do not say this because I am concerned about the dedication of SBA's 4,000-or-so employees across the country. I say this because Mr. Heatherly, who seems to me to have slim qualifications for the job of Administrator to begin with, has spent a large amount of his time peddling the President's proposal to abolish SBA and liquidate its loans to raise money for the Federal deficit. This proposal has been advanced for the last 2 years by the Office of Management and Budget, and for 2 consecutive years Congress has concluded that it was not in the national interest to eliminate the only Federal agency specially designed to serve the most vibrant sector of our economy.

One would think that President Reagan agrees with this judgment, since he signed a 3-year reauthorization for SBA on April 7 of this year. That bill was based on legislation which Senator WEICKER, our distinguished chairman, and I drafted in 1985, S. 408, and which was the subject of 3 days of hearings in the Small Business Committee. That bill saved $2.5 billion in Federal spending over the next 3 years, while at the same time restructuring the agency so as to make it more efficient and effective.

The trouble with Mr. Heatherly, however, is that he doesn't seem to have read the paper for the last 2 years, because he is still telling business people and bankers that SBA is about to be closed down. Sadly, some people may have even made business decisions—such as not opening or expanding a business—based on Mr. Heatherly's statements that SBA would not be around to help. And there is no doubt that Mr. Heatherly's statements have had a devastating impact on morale within SBA.

Incidentally, Mr. Heatherly has made a number of blustery statements to the press about the supposed failings of both SBA and of Members of Congress. I will not now dignify those statements with a reply. In the event that the President should choose to nominate Mr. Heatherly to be Administrator, there will be time enough to examine both his qualifications and his intentions.

Advice and Consent by the Senate is the procedure which the Founding Fathers prescribed in the Constitution as the means by which Congress would oversee the President's selection of executive officers. It is the Senate's duty to consider such nominations carefully, but before we do that, the President must first send us a nominee.

In any event, Mr. President, this resolution now makes clear that the time has come to give SBA a permanent, full-time and dedicated Administrator who believes in small business, who believes that the Nation's small businesses should have an indepdendent voice within the executive branch of the Federal Government, and who is enthusiastic about carrying out that job. This resolution sends a strong message to the President. I urge the Senate to act promptly and pass this resolution.●

(b) This section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

LAUTENBERG AMENDMENT NO. 2178

Mr. LAUTENBERG proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following section.

SEC. . INTERNATIONAL MEASURES FOR SEAPORT AND SHIPBOARD SECURITY

The Congress encourages the President to continue to seek an agreement through the International Maritime Organization on matters of international seaport and shipboard security, and commends him on his efforts to date. In developing such agreement, each member country of the International Maritime Organization should consult with appropriate private sector interests in that country. Such agreement would establish seaport and vessel security standards and could include—

(1) seaport screening of cargo and baggage similar to to that done at airports;

(2) security measures to restrict access to cargo, vessels, and dockside property to authorized personnel only;

(3) additional security on board vessels;

(4) licensing or certification of compliance with appropriate security standards; and

(5) other appropriate measures to prevent unlawful acts against passengers and crews on board vessels.

SEC. . MEASURES TO PREVENT UNLAWFUL ACTS AGAINST PASSENGERS AND CREWS ON BOARD SHIPS.

(a) REPORT ON PROGRESS OF IMO.—The Secretary of Transportation and the Secretary of State, jointly, shall report to the Congress by December 31, 1986, on the progress of the International Maritime Organization in developing recommendations on Measures to Prevent Unlawful Acts Against Passengers and Crews On Board Ships.

(b) CONTENT OF REPORT.—The report required by subsection (a) shall include the following information—

(1) the specific areas of agreement and disagreement on the recommendations among the member nations of the International Maritime Organization;

(2) the activities of the Maritime Safety Committee, the Facilitation Committee, and the Legal Committee on the International Maritime Organization in regard to the proposed recommendations; and

(3) the security measures specified in the recommendations.

SIMON AMENDMENT NO. 2179

Mr. SIMON proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra, as follows:

At the end of the resolution, add the following new section:

SEC. . It is the Sense of the Senate that the Secretary of State substantially strengthen the foreign language training of foreign service officers and other diplomatic personnel who may serve in embassies overseas, and to work toward early implementation of a program focusing on acquisition and retention of effective linguistic skills throughout a foreign service officer's career.

McCONNELL AMENDMENT NO. 2180

Mr. McCONNELL proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. . DENIAL OF BENEFITS UNDER THE GENERALIZED SYSTEM OF PREFERENCES TO THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA.

(a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the exports of the Republic of Korea to the United States have grown at an average annual rate of nearly 16 percent since 1981, United States exports to the Republic of Korea grew at an average annual rate of approximately 3 percent during that period with a decrease of 2 percent in 1985;

(2) in 1985 the United States imported from the Republic of Korea merchandise worth $10,013,085,000, the Republic of Korea only imported merchandise from the United States of a value of $5,720,136,000, resulting in a United States trade deficit of $4,292,949,000;

(3) in 1985 the United States extended to the Republic of Korea preferential treatment under the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) program for certain products it exports to the United States worth $1,655,000,000, making the Republic of Korea the second largest beneficiary under such program;

(4) the Republic of Korea persists in maintaining the following acts, policies, and practices which are unreasonable, unjustifiable, or discriminatory and which burden or restrict United States commerce:

(a) the domestic market of the Republic of Korea is closed to cigarettes made in the United States to the extent that—

(i) it is illegal for citizens of the Republic of Korea to possess cigarettes made outside the Republic of Korea, and

(ii) a citizen of the Republic of Korea possessing foreign cigarettes is subject to a fine of up to $1,161.44, imprisonment, and loss of employment,

(B) the importation into the Republic of Korea of all beef and pork from the United States has been effectively banned since May 1985 event though, prior to the ban, the United States supplied most of the high-quality beef imported into the Republic of Korea,

(C) the Office of National Tax Administration of the Republic of Korea is scheduled to require that all distilled spirit products be manufactured with a minimum proportion of local raw materials after January 1987,

(D) the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries of the Republic of Korea restricts the importation of many United States agricultural items by refusing to grant import approval to those items, including fresh oranges, canned fruit cocktail, grape juice, wine, alfalfa products, edible meat offals, walnuts, fresh grapes, sausages, canned beef and pork, canned peaches, concentrated orange juice, other fruit juices, and canned corn and dried peas,

(E) the issuance of an import license for United States manufactured goods must have the recommendation of the Korean industry association whose members compete with the imported good, which has an adverse effect on many United States products, including agricultural chemicals, soda ash, automotive parts, cosmetics, nylon carpets, loudspeakers, electric hand tools, razors and razor blades, machine tools, personal computers, electric shavers, cameras, and construction equipment,

(F) the importation of computers and peripheral equipment that can be produced locally has been effectively banned since July 1982, by the requirement of the Republic of Korea that investment or licensing of local production of computers and peripheral equipment,

(G) Tariffs imposed by the Republic of Korea remain unreasonably high on several products in which the United states has a comparative advantage, including—

(i) fresh fruits and vegetables (current tariff is percent ad valorem),

(ii) canned meat (current tariff is 40 percent ad valorem),

(iii) cosmetics (current tariff is percent ad valorem),

(iv) wood products (current tariff is 20 percent ad valorem),

(v) electic hand tools (current tariff is 20 percent ad valorem),

(vi) computers (current tariff is 20 percent ad valorem),

(vii) automobile parts (current tariff is 30 percent ad valorem),

(viii) chocolate confectionary (current tariff is 40 percent ad valorem, falling to 30 percent ad valorem in 1988),

(H) the application of emergency tariffs, adjustments tariffs, special commodity taxes, and value added tax on top of the general tariff rate, and other fees, make many products prohibitively expenses,

(I) the entire import regime of the Republic of Korea is designed, through the use of import licenses and quotas, to discourage the importation of any seafood, so that the only United States product now entering the Republic of Korea in any volume comes from joint ventures, and much of this reprocessed in the Republic of Korea and exported,

(J) the Republic of Korea unreasonably restricts the sale of United States fire insurance to only those properties outside of the 10 largest cities in the Republic of Korea, and unreasonably denies licenses to United State firms to write life insurance,

(K) the Republic of Korea unreasonably denies United States banks the ability to participte fully in the domestic financial market, and

(L) the Republic of Korea does not adequately protect intellectual property; and

(5) these unreasonable, unjustifiable, and discriminatory acts, policies, and practices of the Republic of Korea burden or restrict United States commerce.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that the Republic of Korea should not be treated as a beneficiary developing country under title V of the Trade Act of 1974, popularly known as the Generalized System of Preferences, until the unreasonable, unjustifiable, and discriminatory acts, policies, and practices described in subsection (a)(4) are eliminated and import restrictions imposed by the Republic of Korea are liberalized through—

(1) agreement by the Republic of Korea that the purchase and sale of imported cigarettes, and regulation thereof by the Republic of Korea and its instrumentalities, will be conducted on a nondiscriminatory and equitable basis, including repeal of the law which makes it illegal for citizens of the Republic of Korea to use or possess imported tobacco products under threat of fine, imprisonment, or loss of employment;

(2) extension of the ability to import United States tobacco leaf into the Republic of Korea to all private non-Korean entities;

(3) elimination of the ban on the importation into the Republic of Korea of beef and pork from the United States;

(4) inclusion on the Automatic Approval List of fresh oranges, canned fruit cocktail, grape juice, wine, alfalfa products, edible meat offals, walnuts, fresh grapes, sausages, canned beef and pork, canned peaches, concentrated orange juice, other fruit juices, and canned corn and dried peas;

(5) inclusion on the Automatic Approval List of agricultural chemicals, soda ash, automotive parts, cosmetics, nylon carpets, loudspeakers, electric hand tools, razors and razor blades, machine tools, personal computers, electric shavers, cameras, and construction equipment;

(6) elimination of the ban on the importation of computers and peripheral equipment that can be produced locally;

(7) reduction and binding of the general tariff rates imposed by the Republic of Korea to the levels of protection maintained by average industrialized countries, including, but not limited to, wood, wood products, and dairy commodities;

(8) elimination of the practice of discouraging the importation of seafood into the Republic of Korea;

(9) elimination of the requirement that all distilled spirit products be manufactured with a minimum proportion of local raw materials after January 1987;

(10) elimination of restrictions on the sale of United States fire insurance in the Republic of Korea;

(11) elimination of unreasonable denials of licenses to United States firms to write life insurance; and

(12) extension to United States banks of the ability to participate fully in the financial markets of the Republic of Korea.

MOYNIHAN (AND D'AMATO) AMENDMENT NO. 2181

Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself and Mr. D'AMATO) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra; as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) Since Kurt Waldheim has lied repeatedly about his past, particularly his service as intelligence officer for convicted war criminal General Alexander Lohr;

(2) Since such mendacity enabled Kurt Waldheim to rise to the position of Secretary General of the United Nations;

(3) Since Kurt Waldheim currently receives $81,650 a year as a retirement allowance for his service in that position; and

(4) Since the allowance rewards him for having lied about matters that are at the very heart of the existence and purposes of the United Nations.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that the President should instruct the Permanent Representative of the United States to the United Nations to introduce in the General Assembly—

(1) an amendment to the 1986-1987 United Nations Regular Program Budget eliminating funding of Kurt Waldheim's retirement allowance; and

(2) a resolution denying Kurt Waldheim a retirement allowance in all budgets after 1987.

HAWKINS (AND MATTINGLY) AMENDMENT NO. 2182

Mrs. HAWKINS (for herself and Mr. MATTINGLY) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra; as follows:

At the appropriate place insert the following:

(a) Section 103 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 is hereby amended—

(1) by adding the following paragraph after paragraph (a)(2): (3) Of the funds authorized to be appropriated in paragraph (2) of this subsection, $150,000 for the fiscal year 1986 shall be available only for a study of the feasibility of a program for the control and eradication of amblyomma variegatum (heartwater) in bovine animals in the Caribbean, to be completed within 180 days from the date of enactment of this act. Of the funds authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1987, not less than $4 million shall be available only for the purpose of controlling and eradicating amblyomma variegatum in these countries.

"(f)".

STEVENS (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 2184

Mr. STEVENS (for himself, Mr. DENTON, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. BOREN, Mr. LAXALT, Mr. ZORINSKY, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. MATTINGLY, and Mr. LUGAR) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra; as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following: Section 794 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(d)(1) Any person convicted of a violation of this section or of any other felony in violation of the provisions of this chapter shall forfeit to the United States, irrespective of any provision of State law—

(A) any property constituting, or derived from, any proceeds the person obtained, directly or indirectly, as the result of such violation; and

(B) any of the person's property used, or intended to be used, in any manner or part, to commit, or to facilitate the commission of, such violation.

"(2) The court, in imposing sentence on a defendant for a conviction of a violation of this section or of any other felony in violation of this chapter, shall order that the defendant forfeit to the United States all property described in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(3) The provisions of subsections (b), (c) and (e) through (o) of section 413 of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (21 U.S.C. 853 (b), (c), and (e)-(o)) shall apply to—

"(A) property subject to forfeiture under this subsection;

"(B) any seizure or disposition of such property; and

"(C) any administrative or judicial proceeding in relation to such property, if not inconsistent with this subsection.

"(4) Upon motion of the United States attorney made at any time after conviction of a person at a trial conducted under chapter 47 of title 10 with respect to convictions under sections 904 (article 104), 906 (article 106), 906a (article 106a), and for convictions under section 934 (article 134) that incorporate provisions of this chapter, a court of competent jurisdiction shall, if the court determines that the interest of justice so requires, order such person to forfeit to the United States all property described in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(e)(1) Upon the motion of the United States attorney made at any time after conviction of a defendant for a violation of this section, for any other felony in violation of this chapter, or for an offense described in subsection (d)(4) of this section, and after notice to any interested party, the court shall, if the court determines that the interest of justice so requires, order such defendant to forfeit to the United States all or any part of proceeds received or to be received by that defendant, or by a transferee or that defendant, from a contract relating to the depiction of such offense in a movie, book, newspaper, magazine, radio or television production, or live entertainment or presentation of any kind, or from a contract relating to an expression of the convicted person's thoughts, opinions, or emotions regarding such crime.

"(2) An order issued under this subsection shall require that the party with whom the defendant contracts pay to the Attorney General any proceeds due the defendant under such a contract.

"(3) Proceeds paid to the Attorney General under this subsection shall be paid into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

"(4) As used in this subsection, the term 'interested party' includes the defendant, any transferee of proceeds due the defendant under the contract referred to in paragraph (1), and the person with whom the defendant has contracted.

"(f)(1) The Attorney General of the United States, at his discretion, is authorized to pay an amount not to exceed $100,000 as a reward for information—

"(A) leading to the arrest or conviction of any person for—

"(i) the commission of a felony in violation of this chapter of for a conspiracy or attempt to commit such an offense; or

"(ii) an offense described in subsection (d)(4) of this section, or for a conspiracy or attempt to commit such an offense; or

"(B) leading to the prevention, frustration, or mitigation of the effect of a felony in violation of this chapter or of an offense described in subsection (d)(4) of this section.

"(2) The Attorney General or the designee of the Attorney General shall determine whether an individual furnishing information described in paragraph (1) is entitled to a reward under this section and the amount to be paid, except that the authority to pay a reward of $10,000 or more shall not be delegated to any person other than the Deputy Attorney General, the Associate Attorney General, or the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. A determination made by the Attorney General or the designee of the Attorney General under this subsection shall be final and conclusive, and no court shall have jurisdiction or power to review such determination.

"(3) No officer, employee, or member of the Armed Forces of the United States or of any governmental entity who, while in the performance of his or her official duties, furnishes the information described in paragraph (1) shall be eligible for any monetary reward under this subsection, except that a person who acts with official approval as an undercover source or informant, when it is not a part of that person's normal official duties to do so, may be eligible for such a reward.

"(4) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary for the payment of rewards under this subsection except that no funds may be appropriated for this purpose prior to fiscal year 1987.".

MATHIAS AMENDMENT NO. 2185

Mr. MATHIAS proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra; as follows:

At the appropriate place insert the following:

TITLE .—VICTIMS OF TERRORISM COMPENSATION

SEC 801. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Victims of Terrorism Compensation Act".

SEC. 802. BENEFITS FOR CAPTIVES AND OTHER VICTIMS OF HOSTILE ACTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter VII of chapter 55 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 5569. Benefits for captives

"(a) For the purpose of this section—

"(1) 'captive' means any individual in a captive status commencing while such individual is—

"(A) in the civil service, or

"(B) a citizen, national, or resident alien of the United States rendering personal service to the United States similar to the service of an individual in the civil service (other than as a member of the uniformed services);

"(2) the term 'captive status' means a missing status which, as determined by the President, arises because of a hostile action and is a result of the individual's relationship with the Government;

"(3) 'missing status'—

"(A) in the case of an employee, has the meaning provided under section 5561(5) of this title; and

"(B) in the case of an individual other than an employee, has a similar meaning; and

"(4) 'family member', as used with respect to a person, means—

"(A) any dependent of such person; and

"(B) any individual (other than a dependent under subparagraph (A)) who is a member of such person's family or household.

"(b)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall establish a savings fund to which the head of an agency may allot all or any portion of the pay and allowances of any captive to the extent that such pay and allowances are not subject to an allotment under section 5563 of this title or any other provision of law.

"(2) Amounts so allotted to the savings fund shall bear interest at a rate which, for any calendar quarter, shall be equal to the average rate paid on United States Treasury bills with 3-month maturities issued during the preceding calendar quarter. Such interest shall be compounded quarterly.

"(3) Amounts in the savings fund credited to a captive shall be considered as pay and allowances for purposes of section 5563 of this title and shall otherwise be subject to withdrawal under procedures which the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish.

"(4) Any interest accruing under this subsection on—

"(A) any amount for which an individual is indebted to the United States under section 5562(c) of this title shall be deemed to be part of the amount due under such section 5562(c); and

"(B) any amount referred to in section 5566(f) of this title shall be deemed to be part of such amount for purposes of such section 5566(f).

"(5) An allotment under this subsection may be made without regard to section 5563(c) of this title.

"(c) The head of an agency shall pay (by advancement or reimbursement) any individual who is a captive, and any family member of such individual, for medical and health care, and other expenses related to such care, to the extent that such care—

"(1) is incident to such individual being a captive; and

"(2) is not covered—

"(A) by any Government medical or health program; or

"(B) by insurance.

"(d)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (3), the President shall make a cash payment to any individual who became or becomes a captive commencing on or after November 4, 1979. Such payment shall be made before the end of the one-year period beginning on the date on which the captive status of such individual terminates or, in the case of any individual whose status as a captive terminated before the date of the enactment of the Victims of Terrorism Compensation Act, before the end of the one-year period beginning on such date.

"(2) A payment under this subsection in the case of any individual held as a captive shall be not less than the amount of the world-wide average per diem rate which would be payable to any person under section 5702 of this title, based on—

"(A) a period of time equal to the period for which such individual was held as a captive; and

"(B) the world-wide average per diem rate which, during the period of captivity involved, was in effect under such section.

"(3) The President—

"(A) may defer a payment under this subsection in the case of any individual who, during the one-year period described in paragraph (1), is charged with an offense described in subparagraph (B), until final disposition of such charge; and

"(B) may deny such payment in the case of any individual who is convicted of an offense described in subsection (b) or (c) of section 8312 of this title committed—

"(i) during the period of captivity of such individual; and

"(ii) related to the captive status of such individual.

"(4) A payment under this subsection shall be in addition to any other amount provided by law.

"(5) The provisions of subchapter VIII of this chapter (or, in the case of any person not covered by such subchapter, similar provisions prescribed by the President) shall apply with respect to any amount due an individual under paragraph (1) after such individual's death.

"(6) Any payment made under paragraph (1) which is later denied under paragraph (3)(B) is a claim of the United States Government for purposes of section 3711 of title 31.

"(e)(1) Under regulations prescribed by the President, the benefits provided by the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, including the benefits provided by section 701 of such Act but excluding the benefits provided by sections 104, 105, 106, 400 through 408, 501 through 512, and 514 of such Act, shall be provided in the case of any individual who is a captive.

"(2) In applying such Act under this subsection—

"(A) the term 'person in the military service' is deemed to include any such captive;

"(B) the term 'period of military service' is deemed to include the period during which the individual is in a captive status; and

"(C) references to the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, the Adjutant General of the Army, the Chief of Naval Personnel, and the Commandant, United States Marine Corps, are deemed, in the case of any captive, to be references to an individual designated for that purpose by the President.

"(f)(1)(A) Under regulations prescribed by the President, the head of an agency shall pay (by advancement or reimbursement) a spouse or child of a captive for expenses incurred for subsistence, tuition, fees, supplies, books, and equipment, and other educational expenses, while attending an educational or training institution.

"(B) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), payments shall be available under this paragraph for a spouse or child of an individual who is a captive for education or training which occurs—

"(i) after that individual has been in captive status for 90 days or more, and

"(ii) on or before—

"(I) the end of any semester or quarter (as appropriate) which begins before the date on which the captive status of that individual terminates, or

"(II) if the educational or training institution is not operated on a semester or quarter system, the earlier of the end of any course which began before such date or the end of the 16-week period following that date.

In order to respond to special circumstances, the appropriate agency head may specify a date for purposes of cessation of assistance under clause (ii) which is later than the date which would otherwise apply under such clause.

"(C) In the event a captive dies and the death is incident to that individual being a captive, payments shall be available under this paragraph for a spouse or child of such individual for education or training which occurs after the date of such individual's death.

"(D) The preceding provisions of this paragraph shall not apply with respect to any spouse or child who is eligible for assistance under chapter 35 of title 38 or similar assistance under any other provision of law.

"(E) For the purpose of this paragraph, 'child' means a dependent under section 5561(3)(B) of this title.

"(2)(A) In order to respond to special circumstances, the head of an agency may pay (by advancement or reimbursement) a captive for expenses incurred for subsistence, tuition, fees, supplies, books, and equipment, and other educational expenses, while attending an educational or training institution.

"(B) Payments shall be available under this paragraph for a captive for education or training which occurs—

"(i) after the termination of that individual's captive status, and

"(ii) on or before—

"(I) the end of any semester or quarter (as appropriate) which begins before the date which is 10 years after the day on which the captive status of that individual terminates, or

"(II) if the educational or training institution is not operated on a semester or quarter system, the earlier of the end of any course which began before such date or the end of the 16-week period following that date, and shall be available only to the extent that such payments are not otherwise authorized by law.

"(3) Assistance under this subsection—

"(A) shall be discontinued for any individual whose conduct or progress is unsatisfactory under standards consistent with those established pursuant to section 1724 of title 38; and

"(B) may not be provided for any individual for a period in excess of 45 months (or the equivalent thereof in other than full-time education or training).

"(4) Regulations prescribed to carry out this subsection shall provide that the program under this subsection shall be consistent with the assistance program under chapters 35 and 36 of title 38.

"(g) Any benefit provided under subsection (c) or (d) may, under regulations prescribed by the President, be provided to a family member of an individual if—

"(1) such family member is held in captive status; and

"(2) such individual is performing service for the United States as described in subsection (a)(1)(A) when the captive status of such family member commences.

"(h) Except as provided in subsection (d), this section applies with respect to any individual in a captive status commencing after January 21, 1981.

"(i) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subchapter, any determination by the President under subsection (a)(2) or (d) shall be conclusive and shall not be subject to judicial review.

"(j) The President may prescribe regulations necessary to administer this section.

"§ 5570. Compensation for disability or death

"(a) For the purpose of this section—

"(1) 'employee' means—

"(A) any individual in the civil service; and

"(B) any individual rendering personal service to the United States similar to the service of an individual in the civil service (other than as a member of the uniformed services); and

"(2) 'family member', as used with respect to an employee, means—

"(A) any dependent of such employee; and

"(B) any individual (other than a dependent under subparagraph (A)) who is a member of the employee's family or household.

"(b) The President shall prescribe regulations under which an agency head may pay compensation for the disability or death of an employee or a family member of an employee if, as determined by the President, the disability or death was caused by hostile action and was a result of the individual's relationship with the Government.

"(c) Any compensation otherwise payable to an individual under this section in connection with any disability or death shall be reduced by any amounts payable to such individual under any other program funded in whole or in part by the United States (excluding any amount payable under section 5569(d) of this title) in connection with such disability or death, except that nothing in this subsection shall result in the reduction of any amount below zero.

"(d) A determination by the President under subsection (b) shall be conclusive and shall not be subject to judicial review.

"(e) Compensation under this section may include payment (whether by advancement or reimbursement) for any medical or health expenses relating to the death or disability involved to the extent that such expenses are not covered under subsection (c) of section 5569 of this title (other than because of paragraph (2) of such subsection).

"(f) This section applies with respect to any disability or death resulting from an injury which occurs after September 30, 1985.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The analysis for chapter 55 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 5568 the following:

"5569. Benefits for captives.

"5570. Compensation for disability or death.".

SEC. 803. RETENTION OF LEAVE BY ALIEN EMPLOYEES FOLLOWING INJURY FROM HOSTILE ACTION ABROAD.

Section 6325 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The preceding provisions of this section shall apply in the case of an alien employee referred to in section 6301(2)(viii) of this title with respect to any leave granted to such alien employee under section 6310 of this title or section 408 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980.".

SEC. 804. TRANSITION PROVISIONS.

(a) SAVINGS FUND.—(1) Amounts may be allotted to the savings fund under subsection (b) of section 5569 of title 5, United States Code (as added by section 802(a) of this Act) from pay and allowances for any pay period ending after January 21, 1981, and before the establishment of such fund.

(2) Interest on amounts so allotted with respect to any such pay period shall be calculated as if the allotment had occurred at the end of such pay period.

(b) MEDICAL AND HEALTH CARE; EDUCATIONAL EXPENSES.—Subsections (c) and (f) of such section 5569 (as so added) shall be carried out with respect to the period after January 21, 1981, and before the effective date of those subsections, under regulations prescribed by the President.

(c) DEFINITION.—For the purpose of this subsection, "pay and allowances" has the meaning provided under section 5561 of title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 805. BENEFITS FOR MEMBERS OF UNIFORMED SERVICES WHO ARE VICTIMS OF HOSTILE ACTION.

(a) PAYMENTS.—(1) Chapter 10 of title 37, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 559. Benefits for members held as captives

"(a) In this section—

"(1) 'captive status' means a missing status of a member of the uniformed services which, as determined by the President, arises because of a hostile action and is a result of membership in the uniformed services, but does not include a period of captivity of a member as a prisoner of war if Congress provides to such member, in an Act enacted after the date of the enactment of the Victims of Terrorism Compensation Act, monetary payment in respect of such period of captivity; and

"(2) 'former captive' means a person who, as a member of the uniformed services, was held in a captive status.

"(b)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall establish a savings fund to which the Secretary concerned may allot all or any portion of the pay and allowances of any member of the uniformed services who is in a captive status to the extent that such pay and allowances are not subject to an allotment under section 553 of this title or any other provision of law.

"(2) Amounts so allotted shall bear interest at a rate which, for any calendar quarter, shall be equal to the average rate paid on United States Treasury bills with three-month maturities issued during the preceding calendar quarter. Such interest shall be computed quarterly.

"(3) Amounts in the savings fund credited to a member shall be considered as pay and allowances for purposes of section 553(c) of this title and shall otherwise be subject to withdrawal under procedures which the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish.

"(4) Any interest accruing under this subsection on—

"(A) any amount for which a member is indebted to the United States under section 552(c) of this title shall be deemed to be part of the amount due under such section; and

"(B) any amount referred to in section 556(f) of this title shall be deemed to be part of such amount for purposes of such section.

"(5) An allotment under this subsection may be made without regard to section 553(c) of this title.

"(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection, the President shall make a cash payment to any person who is a former captive. Such payment shall be made before the end of the one-year period beginning on the date on which the captive status of such person terminates.

"(2) The amount of such payment shall be determined by the President under the provisions of section 5569(d)(2) of title 5.

"(3)(A) The President—

"(i) may defer such payment in the case of any former captive who during such one-year period is charged with an offense described in clause (ii) of this subparagraph, until final disposition of such charge; and

"(ii) may deny such payment in the case of any former captive who is convicted of a captivity-related offense—

"(I) referred to in subsection (b) or (c) of section 8312 of title 5; or

"(II) under chapter 47 of title 10 (the Uniform Code of Military Justice) that is punishable by dishonorable discharge, dismissal, or confinement for one year or more.

"(B) For the purposes of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, a captivity-related offense is an offense that is—

"(i) committed by a person while the person is in a captive status; and

"(ii) related to the captive status of the person.

"(4) A payment under this subsection is in addition to any other amount provided by law.

"(5) Any amount due a person under this subsection shall, after the death of such person, be deemed to be pay and allowances for the purposes of this chapter.

"(6) Any payment made under paragraph (1) of this subsection that is later denied under paragraph (3)(A)(ii) of this subsection is a claim of the United States Government for purposes of section 3711 of title 31.

"(d) A determination by the President under subsection (a)(1) or (c) of this section is final and is not subject to judicial review.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"559. Benefits for members held as captives.".

(3)(A)(i) Except as provided in clause (ii), section 559 of title 37, United States Code, as added by paragraph (1), shall apply to any person whose captive status begins after January 21, 1981.

(ii)(I) Subsection (c) of such section shall apply to any person whose captive status begins on or after November 4, 1979.

(II) In the case of any person whose status as a captive terminated before the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall make a payment under paragraph (1) of such subsection before the end of the one-year period beginning on such date.

(B) Amounts may be allotted to a savings fund established under such section from pay and allowances for any pay period ending after January 21, 1981, and before the establishment of such fund.

(C) Interest on amounts so allotted with respect to any such pay period shall be calculated as if the allotment had occurred at the end of such pay period.

(b) DISABILITY AND DEATH BENEFITS.—(1) Chapter 53 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1051. Disability and death compensation: dependents of members held as captives

"(a) The President shall prescribe regulations under which the Secretary concerned may pay compensation for the disability or death of a dependent of a member of the uniformed services if the President determines that the disability or death—

"(1) was caused by hostile action; and

"(2) was a result of the relationship of the dependent to the member of the uniformed services.

"(b) Any compensation otherwise payable to a person under this section in connection with any disability or death shall be reduced by any amount payable to such person under any other program funded in whole or in part by the United States in connection with such disability or death, except that nothing in this subsection shall result in the reduction of any amount below zero.

"(c) A determination by the President under subsection (a) is conclusive and is not subject to judicial review.

"(d) In this section:

"(1) 'Captive status' has the meaning given that term in section 559 of title 37.

"(2) 'Dependent' has the meaning given that term in section 551 of that title.

"(3) 'Secretary concerned' and 'uniformed services' have the meanings given those terms in section 101 of that title.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"1051. Disability and death compensation: dependents of members held as captives.".

(3) Section 1051 of title 10, United States Code, as added by paragraph (1), shall apply with respect to any disability or death resulting from an injury that occurs after September 30, 1985.

(c) MEDICAL BENEFITS.—(1) Chapter 55 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1095. Medical care: members held as captives and their dependents

"(a) Under regulations prescribed by the President, the Secretary concerned shall pay (by advancement or reimbursement) any person who is a former captive, and any dependent of that person or of a person who is in a captive status, for health care and other expenses related to such care, to the extent that such care—

"(1) is incident to the captive status; and

"(2) is not covered—

"(A) by any other Government medical or health program; or

"(B) by insurance.

"(b) In the case of any person who is eligible for medical care under section 1074 or 1076 of this title, such regulations shall require that, whenever practicable, such care be provided in a facility of the uniformed services.

"(c) In this section:

"(1) 'Captive status' and 'former captive' have the meanings given those terms in section 559 of title 37.

"(2) 'Dependent' has the meaning given that term in section 551 of that title.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"1095. Medical care: members held as captives and their dependents.".

(3)(A) Section 1095 of title 10, United States Code, as added by paragraph (1), shall apply with respect to any person whose captive status begins after January 21, 1981.

(B) The President shall prescribe specific regulations regarding the carrying out of such section with respect to persons whose captive status begins during the period beginning on January 21, 1981, and ending on the effective date of that section.

(d) EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE.—(1) Part III of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 110—EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE FOR MEMBERS HELD AS CAPTIVES AND THEIR DEPENDENTS

"Sec.

"2181. Definitions.

"2182. Educational assistance: dependents of captives.

"2183. Educational assistance: former captives.

"2184. Termination of assistance.

"2185. Programs to be consistent with programs administered by the Veterans' Administration.

"§ 2181. Definitions

In this chapter:

"(1) 'Captive status' and 'former captive' have the meanings given those terms in section 559 of title 37.

"(2) 'Dependent' has the meaning given that term in section 551 of that title.

"§ 2182. Educational assistance: dependents of captives

"(a) Under regulations prescribed by the President, the Secretary concerned shall pay (by advancement or reimbursement) a dependent of a person who is in a captive status for expenses incurred, while attending an educational or training institution, for—

"(1) subsistence;

"(2) tuition;

"(3) fees;

"(4) supplies;

"(5) books;

"(6) equipment; and

"(7) other educational expenses.

"(b) Except as provided in section 2184 of this title, payments shall be available under this section for a dependent of a person who is in a captive status for education or training that occurs—

"(1) after that person is in a captive status for not less than 90 days; and

"(2) on or before—

"(A) the end of any semester or quarter (as appropriate) that begins before the date on which the captive status of that person terminates;

"(B) the earlier of the end of any course that began before such date or the end of the 16-week period following that date if the educational or training institution is not operated on a semester or quarter system; or

"(C) a date specified by the Secretary concerned in order to respond to special circumstances.

"(c) If a person in a captive status or a former captive dies and the death is incident to the captivity, payments shall be available under this section for a dependent of that person for education or training that occurs after the date of the death of that person.

"(d) The provisions of this section shall not apply to any dependent who is eligible for assistance under chapter 35 of title 38 or similar assistance under any other provision of law.

"§ 2183. Educational assistance: former captives

"(a) In order to respond to special circumstances, the Secretary concerned may pay (by advancement or reimbursement) a person who is a former captive for expenses incurred, while attending an educational or training institution, for—

"(1) subsistence;

"(2) tuition;

"(3) fees;

"(4) supplies;

"(5) books;

"(6) equipment; and

"(7) other educational expenses.

"(b) Except as provided in section 2184 of this title, payments shall be available under this section for a person who is a former captive for education or training that occurs—

"(1) after the termination of the status of that person as a captive; and

"(2) on or before—

"(A) the end of any semester or quarter (as appropriate) that begins before the end of the 10-year period beginning on the date on which the status of that person as a captive terminates; or

"(B) if the educational or training institution is not operated on a semester or quarter system, the earlier of the end of any course that began before such date or the end of the 16-week period following that date.

"(c) Payments shall be available under this section only to the extent that such payments are not otherwise authorized by law.

"§ 2184. Termination of assistance

"Assistance under this chapter—

"(1) shall be discontinued for any person whose conduct or progress is unsatisfactory under standards consistent with those established under section 1724 of title 38; and

"(2) may not be provided for any person for more than 45 months (or the equivalent in other than full-time education or training).

"§ 2185. Programs to be consistent with programs administered by the Veterans' Administration

"Regulations prescribed to carry out this chapter shall provide that the programs under this chapter shall be consistent with the educational assistance programs under chapters 35 and 36 of title 38.".

(2) The table of chapters at the beginning of subtitle A of such title, and the table of chapters at the beginning of part III of such subtitle, are amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 109 the following new item:

"110. Educational Assistance for Members Held as Captives and Their Dependents ..... 2181".

(3) Chapter 110 of title 10, United States Code, as added by paragraph (1), shall apply with respect to persons whose captive status begins after January 21, 1981.

SEC. 806. EFFECTIVE DATE OF ENTITLEMENTS.

Provisions enacted by this title which provide new spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 shall not be effective until October 1, 1986.

MATHIAS AMENDMENT NO. 2186

Mr. MATHIAS proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra; as follows:

On page 129, after line 3, insert the following new section:

SEC. 702. EXPRESSION OF SUPPORT OF ACTIVITIES OF THE UNITED STATES TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRAINING INSTITUTE.

Nothing in this Act, the Communications Act of 1934, or any other Act, shall be construed to preclude the Department of State, the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID), or the United States Information Agency (USIA) from participation (including use of staff, other appropriate resources and service on the board of the USTTI) in support of any activities of the United States Telecommunications Training Institute (USTTI).

SPECTER AMENDMENT NO. 2187

Mr. SPECTER proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra; as follows:

In the past decade there have been nearly 6,500 terrorist incidents around the world, killing over 3,500 people and wounding more than 7,600, including over 2,500 incidents against Americans;

Terrorism anywhere affects nations everywhere by chilling the free exercise of sovereign authority;

Rampant terrorism by its very nature threatens world order and thereby all civilized nations and their citizens;

Any and every nation has the right, under current principles of international law, to assert jurisdiction over offenses considered to be "universal crimes", such as piracy and slavery, in order to protect sovereign authority, universal values, and the interests of mankind; and

Individuals committing "universal crimes" may be prosecuted in any nation in which the offender may be found, irrespective of the nationality of the offender or victim or the place of the offense:

It is the sense of the Senate that the President should call for international negotiations for the purpose of agreeing on a definition of "international terrorist crimes" and for the purpose of considering whether such a crime would constitute a universal crime under international law. Such definition should require that acts constituting an international terrorist crime—

(1) involve the threat or use of violence or be dangerous to human life,

(2) would be a crime in the prosecuting jurisdiction if committed within its boundaries,

(3) appear to be intended—

(A) to intimidate or coerce a civilian population;

(B) to influence the policy of a government by intimidation or coercion; or

(C) to affect the conduct of a government by assassination or kidnapping; and

(4) transcend national boundaries in terms of the means by which they are accomplished, the persons they appear intended to coerce or intimidate, or the locale in which their perpetrators operate or seek asylum.

The President should also consider including in these international negotiations the possibility of establishing an international criminal court along the lines of the International Military Tribunal established after World War II for the trial of major war criminals at Nuremburg, Germany, that would have jurisdiction over the crime of international terrorism.

SPECTER (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 2188

Mr. SPECTER (for himself, Mr. LEAHY, and Mr. DENTON) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra; as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill add the following:

SEC.

(A) This section may be cited as the "Terrorist Prosecution Act of 1985"

(B)(1) Part I of title 18 United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:

"CHAPTER 113A—TERRORIST ACTS AGAINST UNITED STATES NATIONALS ABROAD

"2331. Findings and purpose.
"2332. Terrorist acts against United States nationals abroad.

"SEC. 2331. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

"The Congress hereby finds that—

"(a) between 1968 and 1985, there were over eight thousand incidents of international terrorism, over 50 per centum of which were directed against American targets;

"(b) it is an accepted principle of international law that a country may prosecute crimes committed outside its boundaries that are directed against its own security or the operation of its governmental functions;

"(c) terrorist attacks on Americans abroad threaten a fundamental function of our Government: that of protecting its citizens;

"(d) such attacks also threaten the ability of the United States to implement and maintain an effective foreign policy;

"(e) terrorist attacks further interfere with interstate and foreign commerce, threatening business travel and tourism as well as trade relations; and

"(f) the purpose of this chapter is to provide for the prosecution and punishment of persons who, in futherance of terrorist activities or because of the nationality of the victims, commit violent attacks upon Americans outside the United States or conspire outside of the United States to murder Americans within the United States.

"SEC. 2332. TERRORIST ACTS AGAINST UNITED STATES NATIONALS ABROAD.

"(a) Whoever outside the United States commits any murder as defined in section 1111(a) of this title or manslaughter as defined in section 1112(a) of this title, or attempts or conspires to commit murder, of a national of the United States shall upon conviction in the case of murder be punished as provided in section 1111, for manslaughter be punished as provided in section 1112, for attempted murder be imprisoned for not more than twenty years, and for conspiracy be punished as provided by section 1117 of this title, notwithstanding that the offense occurred outside the United States.

"(b) Whoever outside the United States, with intent to cause serious bodily harm or significant loss of liberty, assaults, strikes, wounds, imprisons, or makes any other violent attack upon the person or liberty of any national of the United States or, if likely to endanger his person or liberty, makes violent attacks upon his business premises, private accommodations, or means of transport, or attempts to commit any of the foregoing, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both. Whoever in the commission of any such act uses a deadly or dangerous weapon shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

"(c) Whoever, outside of the United States, conspires to commit murder, as defined in section 1111(a) of this title, within the United States of any national of the United States, shall be punished as provided in section 1117 of this title notwithstanding that the offense occurred outside the United States.

"(d) As used in this section, the term 'national of the United States' has the meaning given such term in section 101(a)(22) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(22)).

"(e) No indictment for this section can be returned without the written approval of the Attorney General or his designee.".

(2) The table of chapters for part I of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item for chapter 113, the following:

"113A. Terrorist acts against United States nationals abroad ..... 2331".

HELMS AMENDMENT NO. 2189

Mr. HELMS proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

(a) ESTABLISHMENT UNDER INSPECTOR GENERAL ACT.—(1) Section 2(1) of the Inspector General Act of 1978 is amended by inserting "the United States Information Agency," immediately before "the Veterans' Administration".

(2) Section 11 of such act is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1) by inserting "or the Director of the United States Information Agency" immediately before "as the case may be;" and

(B) in paragraph (2) by inserting "the United States Information Agency" immediately before "or the Veterans' Administration".

(b) Of the funds authorized to be appropriated to the United States Information Agency for the fiscal year 1987, not less than $5 million shall be available only for the operation of the office of the inspector general established by subsection (a) of this section.

HELMS AMENDMENT NO. 2190

Mr. HELMS proposed an amendment, which was subsequently modified, to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra; as follows:

On page 129, after line 3, add the following new section:

SEC. 702. INDEPENDENT INSPECTOR GENERAL FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

(a) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.—Of the funds authorized to be appropriated for the Department of State for the fiscal years 1986 and 1987, 2,000,000 for the fiscal year 1986 and 12,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987 shall be available only for the operations and activities of the inspector general for the Department of State, appointed by the President under section 3 of the Inspector General Act of 1978, to conduct those activities specified in section 209(g) of the Foreign Service Act of 1980, as such section was in effect before the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) ABOLITION OF PROGRAM INSPECTOR GENERAL.—(1) Section 209 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 and section 150(b) of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1986 and 1987, are repealed.

(2) Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall reassign the personnel and dispose of the property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations which were used by or available for use by the office of the Program Inspector General before the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) PROHIBITION OF USE OF FOREIGN SERVICE MEMBERS.—(1) No member of the Foreign Service, as defined by section 103 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980, shall be appointed Inspector General for the Department of State.

(2) No career member of the Foreign Service may participate in the recruitment, selection, or recommendation of any individual to be appointed by the President as Inspector General for the Department of State.

On page 91, in the table of contents, after the item relating to section 701, insert the following new item:

"SEC. 702. Independent Inspector General for the Department of State."

HELMS (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 2191

Mr. HELMS (for himself, Mr. HECHT, Mrs. HAWKINS, and Mr. BOSCHWITZ) proposed an amendment, which was subsequently modified, to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra; as follows:

On page 129, after line 3, add the following new section:

SEC. 702. PROHIBITION ON THE USE OF FUNDS FOR FACILITIES IN ISRAEL, JERUSALEM, OR THE WEST BANK.

None of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this Act amy be obligated or expended for site acquisition, development, or construction of any facility in Israel, Jerusalem, or the West Bank, except that $83,423,000 shall be available for site acquisiton, development, or construction in Israel of a chancery and residence within five miles of the Israeli Knesset building and within the boundaries of Israel as they existed before June 1, 1967.

"Provided that nothing in this section shall require the construction of any facility if the Secretary of State determines and reports to the Congress that the physical security of personnel to be employed at that facility cannot be adequately guaranteed."

On page 91, in the table of contents, after the item relating to section 701, insert the following new item:

"SEC. 702. Prohibition on the use of funds for facilities in Israel, Jerusalem, or the West Bank.".

BYRD (AND DIXON) AMENDMENT NO. 2192

Mr. BYRD (for himself and Mr. DIXON) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra; as follows:

On page 129, after line 3, add the following new section:

SEC. 702. COORDINATION OF INTERNATIONAL WAR ON TERRORISM.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) international terrorism is and remains a serious threat to the peace and security of free, democratic nations;

(2) the challenge of terrorism can only be met effectively by concerted action on the part of all responsible nations;

(3) the major developed democracies evidenced their commitment to cooperation in the fight against terrorism by the 1978 Bonn Economic Summit Declaration on Terrorism; and

(4) that commitment was renewed and strengthened at the Tokyo Economic Summit and expressed in a joint statement on terrorism.

(b) POLICY.—It is the sense of the Congress that in order to concert action and increase information sharing in the international war on terrorism, the President should propose to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) the establishment of a standing political committee to examine all aspects of international terrorism, review opportunities for cooperation, and make recommendations to member nations.

On page 91, in the table of contents, after the item relating to section 701, insert the following new item:

"Sec. 702. Coordination of international war on terrorism.".

BYRD (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 2193

Mr. BYRD (for himself, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. PELL, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. MELCHER, Mr. SASSER, Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. KASTEN, and Mr. D'AMATO) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4151), supra; as follows:

On page 129, after line 3, add the following new section:

SEC. 702. POLICY TOWARD AFGHANISTAN.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the Soviet Union invaded the sovereign territory of Afghanistan on December 27, 1979, and continues to occupy and attempt to subjugate that nation through the use of force, relying upon a puppet regime and an occupying army of an estimated 120,000 Soviet troops;

(2) the outrageous and barbaric treatment of the people of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union is repugnant to all freedom-loving peoples as reflected in seven United Nations resolutions of condemnation, violates all standards of conduct befitting a responsible nation, and contravenes all recognized principles of international law;

(3) the Special Rapporteur of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, in his November 5, 1985, report to the General Assembly, concludes that "whole groups of persons and tribes are endangered in their existence and in their lives because their living conditions are fundamentally affected by the kind of warfare being waged" and that "[t]he Government of Afghanistan, with heavy support from foreign [Soviet] troops, acts with great severity against opponents or suspected opponents of the regime without any respect for human rights obligations" including "use of antipersonal mines and of so-called toy bombs" and "the indiscriminate mass killings of civilians, particularly women and children";

(4) the Special Rapporteur also concludes that the war in Afghanistan has been characterized by "the most cruel methods of warfare and by the destruction of large parts of the country which has affected the conditions of life of the population, destabilizing the ethnic and tribal structure and disrupting family units" and that "[t]he demographic structure of the country has changed, since over 4 million refugees from all provinces and all classes have settled outside the country and thousands of internal refugees have crowded into the cities like Kabul";

(5) the United Nations General Assembly, in a recorded vote of 88–22 on December 13, 1985, accepted the findings of the Special Rapporteur and deplored the refusal of Soviet-led Afghan officials to cooperate with the United Nations, and expressed "profound distress and alarm" at "the widespread violations of the right to life, liberty, and security of person, including the commonplace practice of torture and summary executions of the regime's opponents, as well as increasing evidence of a policy of religious intolerance";

(6) in a subsequent report of the Special Rapporteur of February 14, 1986, the Special Rapporteur found that "The only solution to the human rights situation in Afghanistan is the withdrawal of the foreign troops" and that "continuation of the military solution will, in the opinion of the Special Rapporteur, lead inevitably to a situation approaching Genocide, which the traditions and culture of this noble people cannot permit.";

(7) The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan caused the United States to postpone indefinitely action on the SALT II Treaty in 1979, and the presence of Soviet troops in that country today continues to adversely affect the prospects for long-term improvement of the United States-Soviet bilateral relationship in many fields of great importance to the global community;

(8) the Soviet leadership appears to be engaged in a calculated policy of raising hopes for a withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan in the apparent belief that words will substitute for genuine action in shaping world opinion; and

(9) President Reagan, in his February 4, 1986, State of the Union Address promised the Afghan people that "America will support with moral and material assistance your right not just to fight and die for freedom, but to fight and win freedom . . .".

(b) POLICY.—(1) It is the sense of the Congress that the United States, so long as Soviet military forces occupy Afghanistan, should support the efforts of the people of Afghanistan to regain the sovereignty and territorial integrity of their nation through—

(A) the appropriate provisions of material support;

(B) renewed multilateral initiatives aimed at encouraging Soviet military withdrawal, the return of an independent and nonaligned status to Afghanistan and a peaceful political settlement acceptable to the people of Afghanistan, which includes provision for the return of Afghan refugees in safety and dignity;

(C) a continuous and vigorous public information campaign to bring the facts of the situation in Afghanistan to the attention of the world;

(D) frequent efforts to encourage the Soviet leadership and the Soviet-backed Afghan regime to remove the barriers erected against the entry into and reporting of events in Afghanistan by international journalists; and

(E) vigorous efforts to impress upon the Soviet leadership the penalty that continued military action in Afghanistan imposes upon the building of a long-term constructive relationship with the United States, because of the negative effect that Soviet policies in Afghanistan have on attitudes toward the Soviet Union among the American people and the Congress.

(2) It is further the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of State should—

(A) determine whether the actions of Soviet forces against the people of Afghanistan constitute the international crime of Genocide as defined in Article II of the International Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, signed on behalf of the United States on December 11, 1948, and, if the Secretary determines that Soviet actions may constitute the crime of genocide, he shall report his findings to the President and the Congress, along with the recommended actions; and

(B) review United States policy with respect to the continued recognition of the Soviet puppet government in Kabul to determine whether such recognition is in the interest of the United States.

On page 91, in the table of contents, after the item relating to section 701, insert the following new item:

"Sec. 702. Policy toward Afghanistan.".

TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER PROGRAMS

WEICKER AMENDMENT NO. 2194

Mr. SIMPSON (for Mr. WEICKER) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 2787) to extend through fiscal year 1988 SBA Pilot Programs under section 8 of the Small Business Act; as follows:

On page 1, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

TITLE I—SMALL BUSINESS PILOT PROGRAMS

On page 1, line 3, strike out "Section 1." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 101.".

On page 2, line 1, strike out "Sec. 2." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 102.".

On page 2, line 5, strike out "Sec. 3." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 103.".

On page 2, after line 8, insert the following new title:

TITLE II—TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER INSTITUTE AUTHORIZED

SEC. 201. (a) The Secretary of Education (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to provide financial assistance, in accordance with the provisions of this title, to pay the Federal share of the cost of construction and related expenses for the establishment of the Technology Transfer Institute at the University of Bridgeport, located at Bridgeport, Connecticut, to be used to revitalize the competitiveness of small business industry in America, particularly in the international marketplace, and to serve as a regional demonstration center transferring emerging technology to small businesses.

(b)(1) No financial assistance may be made under this section unless an application is made at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary may reasonably require.

(2) The Federal share may not exceed 50 percent of the cost of the project authorized by this title.

(c) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums, not to exceed $10,000,000, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title. Funds appropriated pursuant to this section shall remain available until expended.

NATIONAL FOUNDATION ON THE ARTS AND HUMANITIES ACT AMENDMENTS

KERRY AMENDMENT NO. 2195

Mr. BIDEN (for Mr. KERRY) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 5036) to make technical corrections to the National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities Act of 1965; as follows:

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

ST. GEORGE ISLAND BICENTENNIAL

● Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I would like to let my colleagues and all Americans know about a celebration that will take place this August on the Island of St. George, Alaska. The people of this remote island in the Bering Sea will be observing the bicentennial of the discovery of St. George Island by the Russian fur trader Gavrill Loginovich Pribylov. They invite visitors to join them in this special bicentennial event.

In a proclamation passed by the Alaska State Legislature, the State traces the unique history of the St. George islanders—from vessels of early Russian fur traders to modern day Alaska Natives moving toward self-dependency.

Mr. President, I ask that the Proclamation to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

The proclamation follows:

[The Alaska Legislature]

HONORING ST. GEORGE ISLAND BICENTENNIAL

Exactly two hundred years ago this June, St. George Island, in the Bering Sea, was discovered by Gavrill Loginovich Pribylov, a Russian fur trader, which ended their long search for the breeding grounds of the northern fur seal. Several Aleut hunters accompanied Pribylov on the discovery voyage and were left on the island for a year to harvest seals, thus marking the beginning of the two century old role of the Aleuts in the fur seal industry. The Aleut people were initially taken from their families and homes in the Aleutian Chain and impressed into service for three to five year periods, but by the early 1820's, they were eventually settled permanently on the Pribilof Islands.

With the decline of the fur industry, Russia termed Alaska as no longer economical and sold it to the United States in 1867. For the next century, the Aleut people lived as virtual wards of the federal government with few typical citizen rights such as voting which was not extended to them until 1948. The seal harvest was leased to private American companies until 1909, at which time, due to conservation measures was again assumed by the federal government which lasted until 1983. Commercial sealing was conducted for the last time on St. George in 1972.

For the first time, the people of the Pribilof Islands hold their future in their own hands. They no longer are under the control of the federal government, and are no longer being subsidized. A new economy is emerging based on fishing and tourism and powered by the will of the people, to meet the challenge of a new beginning. Although they have long since left behind part of their old Russian way of life, there are many old traditions that still remain such as Russian styles of cooking, dress, music, and games along with the most positive cultural influence on the Aleut history, The Russian Orthodox religion.

The Alaska State legislature joins the residents of St. George and the whole Aleut culture in commemorating this bicentennial celebration as part of the Aleut transition toward self-dependency.●

THE BARRETT SISTERS

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the Barrett Sisters, one of the leading female gospel groups in the world, mark an important milestone in their illustrious career on Monday, June 30.

At the Third Baptist Church of Chicago, Delois Barrett Campbell, Billie Barrett Greenbey, and Rodessa Barrett Porter will celebrate 25 years of singing gospel music.

The Chicago natives have toured Europe 11 times and have made countless appearances on radio and television shows. But they are perhaps best remembered for their brilliant appearance in the inspirational film "Say Amen, Somebody."

Several years ago, the sisters brought their joyous music to a homeless shelter in New York City. The trio sang for about 400 homeless men and women, who clapped, sang, and whistled their appreciation.

I join all of Chicago in congratulating the Barrett Sisters on 25 years of song and praise and echo words from "Say Amen, Somebody," that "You don't have to die and go to Heaven to hear the voices of angels."●

INSTALLMENT SALES PROVISIONS OF THE SENATE TAX REFORM BILL

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I would ask that a statement be placed in the RECORD on the Senate tax reform bill and a provision regarding installment sales. While an amendment by Mr. PRYOR was offered in committee I would just like to follow up on yesterdays colloquy on this issue with the following information.

The Finance Committee bill dramatically changes the tax consequences of using the installment method of reporting income. The committee, however, with the leadership of the Senator from Arkansas and with the agreement of the Treasury Department, provided that taxpayers can continue the current method of reporting if they pay interest on the deferred method of taxes.

Mr. President, this modification is important to many businesses including companies that sell homesites on the installment method. Importantly, it is also good tax policy.

The current amendment is a technical correction of the interest charge modification already in the bill. I am speaking in support of it because it is so important to thousands of workers in my State and hundreds of thousands of homesite buyers around the country. I hope that the conferences insist on maintaining this provision in conference and I would like to work with the Senator from Arkansas to assure this result.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to make one important point. It is my understanding that this provision is designed to cover the sale of the homesites and not the sale of buildings or similar improvements to the site. I would also like to reiterate that the term improvements as used in the bill does not include common infrastructure items such as roads, sewers, drainage and similar items that render the homesite lots in buildable condition and that this is also the view of Senator PRYOR and Senator PACKWOOD.●

REBUILDING THE PEACE CORPS

● Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, during its consideration of the proposed "Diplomatic Security and Anti-Terrorism Act of 1986," the Foreign Relations Committee adopted as title VII an unrelated, bipartisan amendment to increase the 1987 authorization of appropriations for the Peace Corps from $130 million to $137.2 million in order to begin implementation of a 6-year plan to expand the Peace Corps to reach its congressionally-established goal of a 10,000-volunteer strength. As the Senate author of the provisions of the law enacted last year to establish this 10,000-volunteer goal, I am particularly delighted that we have begun the steps necessary to accomplish this goal.

GOAL OF 10,000 VOLUNTEERS

Mr. President, on April 14, 1985, I introduced legislation, S. 882, to mandate the establishment of a bipartisan Peace Corps National Advisory Council to help guide the future directions of this program, prohibit partisan influence in overseas staff appointments for the Peace Corps, and establish the goal of attaining a Peace Corps volunteer strength of 10,000-volunteers. The provisions of S. 882, as modified by agreement with the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR], were adopted by the Senate on May 15, 1985, and incorporated into the 1985 foreign assistance legislation which was enacted as the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985, Public Law 99-83.

Mr. President, it is altogether fitting that in 1986—the year of the 25th anniversary of the creation of the Peace Corps—we begin the process of rebuilding and recommitting our Nation to supporting the Peace Corps. Despite the broad national support for this program and its symbolic significance to our international policies, the Peace Corps' strength has steadily declined over the past two decades from its height of more than 15,000 volunteers in 1966 to 9,000 in 1970, to a little more than 5,000 in 1984. Although the populations in the developing nations of the world had increased dramatically during this period, the number of Peace Corps volunteers had dwindled.

The rebirth of the Peace Corps began in 1981 when Congress enacted legislation I was privileged to author which removed the program from the ACTION agency and restored it to the independent status it had enjoyed in its first decade. The new visibility helped to stimulate a renewal of interest in the Peace Corps, both in the public eye at home and throughout the world. The call for volunteers to help fight the famine in Africa brought forth a flood of inquiries which poured into Peace Corps offices at the rate of 1,000 calls a day. Today, the Peace Corps is receiving the highest level of volunteer inquiries in 20 years and has numerous unmet requests from host countries for new or expanded volunteer efforts.

The establishment last year of the 10,000-volunteer goal demonstrated our national commitment to continuing, expanding, and strengthening this unique program. In order to develop a comprehensive and carefully designed plan for a phased-in expansion of the program, I initiated a February 3, 1986, letter signed by a number of Members of the House and Senate to Loret Ruppe, Director of the Peace Corps requesting the agency to prepare and submit a phased, realistic, and programmatically appropriate way to achieve the 10,000-volunteer goal. That plan was submitted to Congress on March 5 and provides a realistic blueprint for moderate Peace Corps growth over the next 6 fiscal years reaching the 10,000 level by fiscal year 1992. This plan would require a fiscal year 1987 appropriation of $137.2—a $7.2 million increase over the current authorization for fiscal year 1987—in order to support a total of 6,108 volunteers and 3,171 trainees.

The Foreign Relations Committee, in adopting this amendment to increase the authorization level for fiscal year 1987, has begun the implementation of this blueprint to achieve the 10,000-volunteer goal. I am delighted to express my strong support for this provision in the bill.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION

Mr. President, I can think of no more fitting tribute that this body can pay to the Peace Corps during this 25th anniversary year than to begin to implement the commitment made last year to rebuild and expand this unique program of people-to-people assistance. Of all the international efforts we make to achieve world peace and understanding, there is no greater contribution than that which we make through the Peace Corps. In this program we send to the developing nations of the world the best of America—our people, the America spirit, ingenuity, and compassion. These are dollars well invested. Our Nation and all of the nations where Peace Corps volunteers serve are immeasurably enriched by the contributions made by these volunteers.

Mr. President, I ask that my exchange of correspondence with Director Ruppe regarding the 10,000-volunteer goal be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, February 3, 1986.

Hon. LORET RUPPE,
Director, The Peace Corps, Washington, DC.

DEAR LORET, As you are well aware, legislation (section 1102 of Public Law 99-83) was recently enacted establishing a goal of achieving a Peace Corps volunteer strength of 10,000 individuals.

As the authorizing and appropriating committees of both the House and Senate begin to consider how that goal can most effectively and productively be achieved within our present stringent budgetary limitations, it would be of great assistance to have input from the agency itself in the form of a comprehensive plan for achieving such growth in volunteer strength. We understand that the Peace Corps currently has requests, that it cannot fill because of budgetary constraints, from host countries for over 2,000 more volunteers.

Accordingly, we request that you prepare a detailed plan for a phased and orderly growth of the Peace Corps from its current size of 6,000 volunteers to a volunteer size of 10,000. In our view, a reasonable timeframe for accomplishing this goal would be four to six years. The plan should indicate (on annual and cumulative bases) the resources, including funding and staff, that would be needed to support such an expansion, the existing and potential interest in host countries to support such growth, an assessment of the availability of qualified volunteer applicants, and the new programming directions and new host countries that might be involved.

We know that you share our enthusiasm over the opportunities that achievement of a 10,000-volunteer goal will provide for the Peace Corps to carry out its mission throughout the world as it enters its second quarter of a century as a force to promote world peace and understanding. We look forward to working with you and the Peace Corps as these exciting plans are being developed.

We would appreciate receiving this detailed plan by March 1, 1986.

With warm regards,
Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON,
Member, Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

Chairman, House Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PEACE CORPS,
March 5, 1986.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Member, Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR CRANSTON: In response to your request of February 3, we are providing a detailed plan for attaining a volunteer level of 10,000 over the next six years.

We share with you the concern for the needs of the developing world and a conviction that long-term development needs are best met through grassroots-level assistance. As we enter our second quarter-century, Peace Corps is reaffirming its role in providing such assistance, a role unique in the foreign assistance community.

As I participate in 25th Anniversary symposia around the nation, I am pleased and very proud of the continued support of the American people for the basic goals of the Peace Corps. The strong response made by Americans throughout the nation to our appeals for increased numbers of volunteers to support our Africa Food Systems Initiatives has been repeated in the enthusiastic response to our anniversary activities. The so-called "me generation" is in fact very responsive to the needs of people on the other side of the world, and willing to contribute their time and skills to meeting those needs. And an older generation of Americans has renewed its interest in international volunteerism; their extensive experience ensures that they have the skills so much needed overseas.

Due to time constraints, the attached plan has been developed by Headquarters staff, with limited participation by our overseas staff, who are occupied in making the program reductions required under Gramm-Rudman. Despite this constraint, we feel that the outlined volunteer levels are feasible and supportable. We considered possibilities for expanding existing programs, for initiating new projects in countries where we now serve, and for establishing new programs in countries where we do not now operate. We also weighed the likelihood that host countries would agree to, and support, potential expansions. And we carefully evaluated "saturation levels" for each country (the levels at which the sheer numbers of volunteers in a particular country would preclude further increases).

While increased levels of volunteers are feasible, it is important to note the limitations inherent in development of this plan:

The need to reduce the Federal deficit continues to be an urgent priority of this Administration. As I noted in my earlier letter, we need to balance the economic needs of the developing world with the economic needs of our own Nation.

Potential increases noted in the plan must be viewed as somewhat tentative, as they depend heavily on the concurrence of the host country government. As you know, the bulk of our volunteer activity is in direct response to a specific request from a host country. Since host country governments did not participate in the development of this plan, we cannot guarantee their response. We feel that the overall numbers are attainable, however, in light of the numerous requests we have received for new or expanded efforts, although this will also depend on the availability of scarce skills among our applicants.

Increases are also subject to change based on changing political and economic environments in the countries served. We have not identified individual countries in this plan for that reason. The overall numbers would not be expected to fluctuate much, though, as one country's increase may well offset another country's decrease.

Increased levels cannot be attained without the establishment of programs in countries where we do not now operate. As with expansions, such new country entries depend on the concurrence of the host country. We have received a number of contracts concerning possible new country entries, but would have to go through the formal negotiation process before establishing programs.

Any increase in volunteer levels would require a commitment of resources in both dollar and personnel terms, and may be difficult to achieve in the current budget environment. Peace Corps cannot, and will not, place volunteers overseas without adequate support to ensure their continued health and safety.

Despite the tentative nature of any specific numbers, especially on a country-by-country basis, Peace Corps does feel that the need for development assistance is there, and that we can play a valuable role in helping the developing world meet its long-term needs. As you well know, Peace Corps is a most cost-effective (and, in our eyes, our most effective) development assistance program.

I hope the enclosed plan responds to your request. If your have any questions or need additional information, I and my staff are available to assist you in any way possible.

Thank you for your continuing interest in, and support for, Peace Corps' programs.

Sincerely,

LORET MILLER RUPPE,
Director.

Enclosure.

SUMMARY OF RESOURCES REQUIRED TO REACH A VOLUNTEER FORCE OF 10,000 BY 1992

	Fiscal Years [2]
	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
Trainee input	2,615	3,171	3,714	4,233	4,572	4,890	5,317
Volunteer years	5,103	4,961	4,999	5,737	6,571	7,256	7,830
Volunteers on board end of year	6,012	6,108	6,630	7,686	8,581	9,307	10,054
Budget requirements (millions)	[1] $124.4	$137.2	$146.2	$157.0	$172.8	$185.3	$196.2
Staffing requirements (FTE)	1,039	1,097	1,168	1,211	1,269	1,309	1,318

[1] Excludes $5.59 million sequestered (from a total appropriation of $130 million) as a result of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings constraints.
[2] Projected resource requirements are in constant dollars.

Establishing and maintaining a volunteer force of 10,000 would require more than doubling our annual trainee input over the next four to six years.

From 1199 to 3053 in Africa (up 1854);

from 707 to 986 in Inter America (up 279);

from 684 to 1253 in North Africa, Near East, Asia and Pacific (up 569).

Most of the volunteers would serve in agriculture and education programs, with lesser increases in health, water/sanitation, forestry and small enterprise development.

Over a dozen new country entries would be planned (up from 63 at present).

Funding would need to increase by $72 million over current levels.

Staffing would need to increase by close to 300 FTE over current levels.

NAUM AND INNA MEIMAN: HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSED

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, my friends Naum and Inna Meiman continue to be held captive in Moscow. For 10 years Soviet officials have denied them permission to emigrate to Israel.

The Meimans are persecuted for expressing their desire to leave the Soviet Union. Inna is critically ill with cancer. Naum is a 75-year-old man who once did "classified" work for the State. His work ended 25 years ago and his calculations are now outdated. Soviet authorities have denied the Meimans the right to live out their last days together in the land that they choose. The KGB has ransacked their apartment. The Soviets have also denied this couple the right to a phone in their home and confiscate much of their personal mail. Naum was forced to retire from his job, and Inna has been denied the right to modern medical treatment that is available in the West.

Naum and Inna should not have to tolerate this abuse of their basic rights. I implore the officials in the Soviet Union to let the Meimans emigrate to Israel.●

TRIBALLY CONTROLLED COMMUNITY COLLEGE ASSISTANCE ACT AND NAVAJO COMMUNITY COLLEGE ACT

● Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 2095, a bill to reauthorize the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 and the Navajo Community College Act through fiscal year 1990. There are currently 21 title I tribally controlled community colleges in eight States serving over 4,000 students. Four of these colleges are located in my home State, North Dakota.

Mr. President, of these 21 colleges, 9 are fully accredited, 6 are candidates for accreditation, and 6 are in precandidacy status meeting all certification requirements. The degrees offered by these colleges are varied and include associate degrees in nursing, arts, applied science and vocational certifications, and bachelor of science degrees. The colleges and their tribes have made great progress in the last 3 years toward self-sufficiency and in meeting the needs of the Indian communities. Since 1983, an additional three colleges have come into existence; five additional schools have attained accreditation; and two schools now offer 4-year programs as compared to 1 in 1983.

Mr. President, I believe these colleges are performing an extremely valuable service and I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.●

ORDERS FOR THURSDAY, JUNE 26, 1986

RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 11 a.m. on Thursday, June 26, 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DIVISION OF TIME ON NOMINATION

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, the time between the conclusion of the leaders' time and 12 noon be equally divided between the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee for debate on the Manion nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATORS

Mr. SIMPSON. I ask unanimous consent that during the day, there be special orders in favor of the following Senators for not to exceed 5 minutes each: THURMOND, CRANSTON, HUMPHREY, DECONCINI, ROTH, PROXMIRE, QUAYLE, SASSER, MATHIAS, KERRY, and WEICKER.

PROGRAM

Mr. SIMPSON. At 12 noon, under the provisions of rule XXII, a live quorum will begin, to be followed by a cloture vote on the Manion nomination.

Following the cloture vote, regardless of the outcome, it is anticipated that the Senate will turn to three treaties on the Executive Calendar—Calendar Nos. 8, 11, and 12, to be followed by three rollcall votes on the three treaties.

Following the treaty votes, if cloture is not invoked on the Manion nomination, the Senate will resume legislative sesson and it will be the majority leader's intention to turn to the consideration of the supplemental appropriations conference report. Therefore, several rollcall votes will occur during Thursday's session.

□ 2245

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY AND MINORITY LEADERS

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Democratic leader's standing order be reserved for his use at 11:50 a.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I would hope that that might be so for both the majority leader and the Democratic leader. I am not aware of having cleared that particular point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there such a request?

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator restate the request?

Mr. SIMPSON. I would ask the Senator from Delaware if we would rephrase that to request that both leaders' times be reserved.

Mr. BIDEN. I would rephrase it.

Mr. SIMPSON. I thank my colleague from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, it is also the majority leader's intention to bring up the housing bill, S. 2507, according to this lightly scribbled, chicken scratching here, following the supplemental appropriations bill.

Mr. President, I thank all the staff, in and outside the Chamber, for this activity late this evening. They are most appreciated.

I thank the acting Democratic leader for his assistance in concluding our day's activities.

Mr. BIDEN. I thank the Senator from Wyoming for his coaching.

Mr. SIMPSON. I get, Mr. President, some very good coaching from that side often and take it.

RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. SIMPSON. With that, in accordance with the previous order, I move we stand in recess until 11 a.m. on Thursday, June 26, 1986.

The motion was agreed to; and, at 10:46 p.m., the Senate recessed until Thursday, June 26, 1986, at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, June 25, 1986

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Your Word has commanded, O God, that justice roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream. Encourage each of us to use the talents You have given that we might do the works of justice in our communities and in the world. May Your gracious spirit lead every person of good will in the paths of righteousness and peace. This we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 273, nays 119, answered "present" 1, not voting 40, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 1483. An act to authorize the Smithsonian Institution to plan and construct facilities for certain science activities of the Institution, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3 with an amendment to the bill (H.R. 3511) "An act to amend title 18, United States Code, with respect to certain bribery and related offenses."

WITHDRAWAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 3968

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my name as a cosponsor of H.R. 3968.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

A VOTE FOR CONTRA AID IS NOT A VOTE FOR DEMOCRACY

(Mr. DURBIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, whether we agree or disagree on Contra aid, the House vote today will focus less on the spread of communism and more on common sense. Last year, Congress, at the President's request, appropriated $27 million in humanitarian aid for the Contras in Nicaragua. The President asked for these funds to send food, clothing, and medical supplies to the Contra rebels he calls freedom fighters.

What happened to the U.S. tax dollars after they left our Treasury? More than half are unaccounted for. That is right: There is no record of what happened to over $14 million. Of the remainder, we know for certain that $450,000 went to one Honduran general, personally, and $3.8 million to a phony grocery store in Honduras being run by their military.

Another vote for the President's Contra aid will not strike a blow for liberty in Central America, it will be confirmation that the U.S. taxpayers are prepared to throw another $100 million to the profiteers and petty thieves who stand ready to exploit us.

A vote for Contra aid today is not a vote for democracy; it is a vote for further waste and fraud.

HUMPTY DOLLAR HAD A GREAT FALL

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, the historian Plutarch relates that Archidamus, the King of the Lacedaemonians, once asked Thucydides whether he or Pericles were the better wrestler. Thucydides made this answer: "Whenever I have thrown him and given him a fair fall, Pericles gets the better of me by insisting that he had no fall at all, and makes the bystanders, in spite of their own eyes, believe him."

According to news reports, Treasury Secretary Baker refused to acknowledge that the dollar has had a great fall, and tried to exculpate himself by repeating his earlier denials that he has never had a target for the dollar in mind.

Mr. Speaker, target or no target, the dollar has had a great fall, and the worst is not over yet. While it may be true that a lot of bystanders, in spite of their own eyes, refuse to admit it, irreparable damage to the confidence in the dollar, as well as in the competence and integrity of the managers of the dollar, has been done and the rest of us will have to pay dearly for it.

BORROWING MONEY TO BORROW TROUBLE IN LATIN AMERICA

(Mr. JACOBS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, 60 years ago, Will Rogers said, "The United States will send the Marines into any country where we can get 10 people to invite us." A philosopher says that the only thing we learn from history is that we do not learn from history.

Maybe that is not entirely true. The American public, by the latest polls, by a 2-to-1 margin oppose the proposition of borrowing money to borrow trouble in Latin America by exporting revolution and terror to that region. The only question is, today, whether the House of Representatives will represent.

TIME TO STOP "MEXICO BASHING"

(Mr. McCAIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, it is with regret and some embarrassment that I stand in the well today. I regret that my comments today are necessary, and embarrassed because it is a member of my own party that makes them so. I am talking about the latest in a round of unfounded and somewhat irresponsible attacks on our neighbor to the south, Mexico.

Whether we like it or not, Mexico is on our southern border and will remain there. It does not behoove us to "bash" them. They are one of our most important trading partners; in 1985, we had 33 billion dollars' worth of commerce with Mexico. We have a long, undefended border to our south, and our cultures, especially in the Southwest, are deeply intertwined.

It is true that Mexico has its share of problems. They have a huge foreign debt. However, they have been making progress at addressing that problem. The years 1984 and 1985 were good years and trouble only came with the Saudi decision to practice predatory pricing in the oil markets. This has reduced Mexico's federal revenue by one-fourth and its export earnings by one-third since last January. It is also true that there is a serious problem with the drug trade, but I submit that if there were no demand here in the United States, the problem would be greatly alleviated.

As President Miguel de la Madrid has stated:

> Mexico is the initial frontier between the United States and Latin America, the partition between different cultures, each with its own blend of national and universal values. Because of this, the world looks on our relationship as a test of future possibilities for coexistence between the industrialized world and the developing world.

Given those stakes, it is time to stop bashing Mexico. We should, instead, be working jointly, as equals, for a better relationship between our two nations.

REVEALING STATEMENTS OF COMMANDER ZERO

(Mr. MRAZEK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, not too long ago my friend and distinguished colleague from California [Mr. DORNAN] looked up in to that gallery, and sitting there was a man considered to be one of the great heroes of the revolution; and he hailed Commander Zero, Eden Pastora, for his commitment in seeking to overthrow the Sandinista government.

This week, in the Washington Post, Mr. Pastora was quoted as saying that the Contras' military and political tactics are today Somocista. Their commanders are Somocistas, and as proof of their criminal strategies during 4 years of guerrilla warfare, they have not turned one prisoner over to the International Red Cross.

Mr. Speaker, these words from Eden Pastora are from a man who fought for years against the corrupt Somoza dynasty; a man who left the Sandinista government in opposition to certain undemocratic policies the government had undertaken; and a man who then refused to join the united Nicaragua opposition, the so-called unified Contra group created by the United States.

He refused to join because the majority of the Contra military commanders were the same men he fought against for years, while living in the mountains of Nicaragua. They are former members of Somoza's National Guard.

Although the cosmetics have changed and the United States has given the Contras a facelift by installing businessmen as the political leaders, we know that those who hold the guns are those who will eventually hold power.

Should the Contras ever overthrow the Sandinista government, it will be the former members of Somoza's National Guard who have yet to turn over one prisoner to the International Red Cross. They will be running the country.

THE FHA IS BACK IN BUSINESS

(Mr. WYLIE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House passed and sent to the President House Joint Resolution 652 which extends until September 30, 1986, the authority of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to insure FHA loans. House Joint Resolution 652 also increased the FHA credit limit by $9.5 billion to a total of $83.9 billion for the fiscal year.

Passage of this legislation was absolutely essential because the FHA has been out of business for 18 straight days. All told there were 49 days in which FHA was not able to function since last October. During this time hundreds of thousands of would-be homeowners have been frustrated in their efforts to achieve their dream of owning their own home. Because of the delay in getting the FHA going again, many of these may end up paying a higher rate of interest.

Mr. Speaker, the good news is FHA is back in business. The bad news is that we don't know for how long. The $9.5 billion increase we approved yesterday, together with a larger increase in the supplemental appropriations bill, should carry us through until the end of this fiscal year but if for some reason the urgent supplemental appropriations bill is not signed into law Congress will be faced once again with providing additional short-term financing and we will have less than a week to do it.

In addition we have no assurance as to what will happen this fall. FHA may expire again in September. As long as the FHA program is held hostage to other legislation we place in jeopardy the opportunity for thousands of low- and moderate-income individuals to become homeowners.

This is not a responsible way to legislate. What we should do is pass legislation providing a long-term authorization of authority and a sufficient credit cap so that the home mortgage market has some stability. I have introduced legislation to do that. It is House Joint Resolution 656. Over 160 of my colleagues have cosponsored this already.

Mr. Speaker, we should pass this legislation because if we don't I am afraid we will relive the nightmare with regard to FHA that we have experienced these past 3 weeks. We should pass a long-term extension so that the home mortgage market has some stability.

WE NEED THAT $100 MILLION TO TAKE CARE OF OUR PROBLEMS IN OUR OWN COUNTRY

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, today we will cast a vote, an important vote as to whether we should send $100 million of taxpayers money to a force in Central America trying to overthrow the Government of Nicaragua. Now I have 1 minute. If I had 1 hour, I could still not go over all of the reasons why it is crazy for us to consider this issue. But let me simply say that, although I do not admire the Government of Nicaragua, whether we like it or not, some people do not like to have the United States telling them who should be in their Government, particularly when we do it with arms used to kill their people. Most everyone will agree that this $100 million is not going to be enough to enable that force to overthrow the Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. Speaker, some people may not know it, but we have got troubles out in the countryside today. My farmers are in difficulty, small business is in difficulty, we are cutting back on what we can do to educate our young people. We do not have money to do that, but when it comes to sending $100 million to Central America to try to buy arms to try to kill the people, we open up the Treasury, and here we are. I say we should look at things realistically. If we are concerned about spending, we ought to be concerned about spending in all areas.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEDELL. I will not yield. I am not going to yield. You try to take my time every time I get down here. I have made a lot of mistakes, but one mistake I am not going to make is to hear you take my time when you do not have an argument on your side so I cannot present my argument.

I yield back my time.

THE HUMANITARIAN AID WAS USED IN CENTRAL AMERICA FOR JUST THAT PURPOSE

(Mr. DEWINE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. Speaker, the allegation has already been made on the floor today and I am sure will be made again later that the $27 million in humanitarian aid that the United States has sent to Central America has not been accounted for. This is a bogus argument. That is not the question.

The real question, Mr. Speaker, is whether or not we have received value for this money? That is the question. The evidence is clear that we have. We have been able to trace it with CIA reports, an elaborate system of vouchers which shows that the material we purchased with our money is arriving i Central America. That is the rea question.

Mr. Speaker, the real question tha we are facing today was put very suc cinctly by our Secretary of State. An that is: are we willing to see the Sovie Union become the dominant power be tween the Panama Canal and Mexico

That is the issue that we are goin to be debating today. I am going t vote in favor of the bipartisan packag that will help to ensure that th Soviet Union will not become tha dominant power in our own backyard

WORLD COURT RULING AND CONTRA AID

(Mr. FAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for minute and to revise and extend hi remarks.)

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, as we vote today on whether or not to provide the Contras with $100 million in mili tary aid, I think it is important tha we note that the World Court is ex pected to rule day after tomorrow on the legality, under international law of direct United States intervention in Nicaragua.

The President decided not even to present a defense of U.S. actions before the Court.

He has not even made a pretense of complying with international law before a court that we helped establish and often use—most recently in our conflict with Khomeini's Iran.

And by rebuffing the World Court, President Reagan has succeeded in branding the United States with the label of an international outlaw, a nation which feels unconstrained by the rule and word of law when it does not serve our own self-interest.

International law is meant to be a buffer between competing domestic laws of the world's states; it serves to preserve standards which benefit all nations—large and small.

Our actions in Nicaragua have not only been immoral, they have been illegal, and it should be no surprise to those of us in this Chamber if the World Court rules as such.

Our credibility and respect in the Third World and in Latin America are on the line today in Congess and on Friday before the World Court.

THE REAL LEADERS IN THE NICARAGUAN MILITARY

(Mr. EVANS of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EVANS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, last March I was joined by several of my colleagues here on the House floor to talk about the leadership of the Contra military forces. We talked about the cast of characters that make up the Contra high command and hold the real military power behind the Contras.

Let us not be fooled by the Contra convention in Miami. The so-called Miami agreements are nothing more than a public relations ploy to convince us that the Contras have abandoned their terrorist ways.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the written agreements are nothing more than a few platitudes on paper. They are vague and contradictory and include so few details that they might have been authored by Clifford Irving.

Some of the key agreements in Miami were not even put down on paper. These concerned majority rule and the power of civilians over the Somoza leftovers who constitute the Contra military. These agreements are already the subject of contradiction and confusion among the Uno leadership itself. And the Contras long record of human rights abuses is dismissed as a minor infraction.

Mr. Speaker, Contra corruption goes deeper than drug running and deeper than $14 million misdirected to Honduran generals and Caribbean banks. It's corruption at the heart and soul of the Contras themselves. The comic strip "Doonesbury" has presented a more realistic picture of the Contra leadership than has this administration. I urge our colleagues to oppose aid to this gang of thugs and to support the Hamilton amendment.

IT ALL DEPENDS ON YOUR POINT OF VIEW

(Mr. MILLER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, today we will confront the hypocrisy of Ronald Reagan's position in Central America. When former Sandinistas tell us that the Sandinista government is corrupt, Ronald Reagan says to invade them. When former Contras tell us that the Contra leadership is corrupt, he says reward them with $100 million.

When former Sandinistas tell us that Sandinistas are involved in the drug trade, Ronald Reagan says to invade them. When former Contra leaders and current Contra leaders tell us they are involved in drug trafficking, Ronald Reagan says to reward them with $100 milion.

When former Sandinistas say that the Sandinistas are violating human rights, Ronald Reagan says we should invade them. When Contra leaders say that the Contras are violating human rights, Ronald Reagan says reward them with $100 million.

Why does he say this? Because, he says, if we do not do it now, American youth will be brought into this war directly.

Let me tell you, ladies and gentlemen, the youth of America are being brought into this war today as we stand here because they are now having drugs pushed at them on the streets of America that were brought here by the leadership that Ronald Reagan wants to give $100 million to; the very Contra leaders that this administration is knowingly supplying with money, are knowingly supplying the young people of America with cocaine because that is how they are financing the war. They are desiring to finance it on the backs of American youth.

Do not weep for Lenny Bias and send $100 million to the Contras.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE AMERICAN PEOPLE REMAIN FAR APART ON THE CONTRA AID ISSUE

(Mrs. BOXER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, there are reasons why Americans are 2 to 1 against aid to the Contras. Americans are a practical people and they apply the lessons of their lives to political issues.

Does it make sense to throw so many dollars and so many bullets to overthrow a government that they do not like when they have no assurance about what type of government would take its place.

Recent reports document clear cut Contra drug connections, undisputed.

What a pity if after all the minings and all the killings and all the pain and all the suffering that results from Contra aid, the new government turns out to be another version of Somoza with drug kingpins at the top.

It's not such an improbability. Look at Panama and then examine the tie-in between drug smugglers and the Contras.

The American people are wise, Mr. President. Let them lead you on this one.

IF IT'S ANTI-COMMUNIST, THE LIBERALS SUSPECT IT

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I think you ought to examine what we have heard in 1 minute so far this morning about our choices in Central America. If it is anti-Communist, it is corrupt, the liberals tell us. If it is anti-Communist, it is unpopular, the liberals tell us. If it is anti-Communist, it costs too much, the liberals tell us.

Corruption is used as an issue by the very people who cannot bring themselves to deal with ethical violations right here in this House.

Unpopularity is used as an issue by people who deny even a vote on 80 percent issues like a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution.

Foreign aid cost is used by people as an issue who just yesterday voted $50 million to go to, of all places, Ireland. The issue here is whether you support an extension of the Soviet empire into Central America. Of course, that is the anti-Communist argument that the liberals hate so much.

WHERE IS THE MONEY, MR. PRESIDENT?

(Mr. KOSTMAYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Where is the money, Mr. President? Fourteen million bucks in Contra aid, missing.

The GAO investigation reveals massive fraud and graft. If this amount were missing in a domestic social program, the President and his rightwing friends in the House would blow the roof off the Capitol. Congress should not authorize another dime until the $14 million is accounted for. American taxpayers should expect no less. Receipts for goods never delivered, massive overcharges, checks made out to a Honduran military leader, United States funds in Caribbean bank accounts.

We want answers, Mr. President, and until we get them not another dime should go to the dope dealers, thieves, and murderers waging war in Central America.

THIS DEBATE IS A HISTORICAL NATIONAL DISGRACE

(Mr. BATES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, today is a historic day for the House of Representatives. But this debate is a historical national disgrace. We are debating an illegal, immoral war. If in fact Nicaragua is a national threat to this country and if in fact, as the President has pursued the overthrow of this government, he should declare that as his intent and that as his policy. Forty-two percent of the people killed by the Contras have been children.

I think this war has shown that the young suffer the most. I think the President is wrong. He has misled the American people.

I think this debate has come down to a red-baiting Communist scare. If communism is a threat to this world, then I suggest our joint naval training exercises with Communist China, our nuclear exchange pacts, our space satellites pacts with Communist China fly in the face of this argument.

I ask this House to return morality and legality to this debate.

A VOTE FOR FREEDOM AND A VOTE AGAINST COMMUNISM

(Mr. RITTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, the vote today is perhaps the most important one we will cast in many years. When you come right down to it, it is a vote for or against the establishment of a dangerous Soviet Communist base, a new Cuba in our own back yard.

We have all seen the pictures of the 11,000-foot airstrips that are supposedly being used for crop dusting. We have all seen the development of blue-water navy ports away from any population zones that are being used and will be used for the Soviet Navy.

It is a vote for or against the Brezhnev doctrine, which says that, once a country goes Communist, that is it, it can never be turned around, even if it is threatening its neighbors and the United States itself.

It is a vote for or against the Ortega-Qadhafi-Khomeini terrorist alliance. We have all seen the pictures of Qadhafi and Ortega, fists raised in clenched solidarity with Qadhafi saying, "We fight with the Nicaraguans because they fight the Americans on their own ground."

But most of all, it is a vote for or against the tide of democracy and freedom in this hemisphere.

To my colleagues who talk about the drug traffic, when Tomas Borge was implicated directly in drug traffic, where were the liberals at that time?

THE PRESIDENT HAS STRUCK OUT AGAIN

(Mr. WEISS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, the President has struck out again. In the most recent poll, the American people by a margin of 2 to 1 have said no to his Nicaraguan policy. And the President knows that he has lost the American people. He is not even trying to persuade them anymore. No, he is aiming his full power as a great communicator at us, the Members of the House. We are to be his patsies.

We should demonstrate the same common sense as the people who send us here, whom we are elected to represent.

Today's $100 million will be tomorrow's billions. Today's Contras will be followed by young American soldiers.

Now is the time to tell Mr. Reagan war is not the answer; negotiation is. Let us end the tragic bleeding of Nicaragua. Let us end Contra aid today.

LET US HEAR SOME HUMAN RIGHTS SPEECHES FROM THE OTHER SIDE

(Mr. DORNAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I hope that tone of the debate on aid to the resistance forces in Central America hits a higher note than some of these 1-minute speeches this morning.

My colleague, the distinguished gentleman from San Diego [Mr. BATES], got up and said that 42 percent of the victims in combat in Nicaragua in what is really a civil war were children. Forty-two percent killed were children? I never heard that before. Where did the gentleman get that, off the wall? Where are all these facts coming from that they have thrown around? Has the gentleman gone down and gone into the infirmaries and the hospitals of the young Contra fighters as I have with Mr. WEBER and talked to these young people, who are honorable people fighting for freedom in their country, who are barely children themselves?

What about the 11,000 people in the Gulag system of concentration camps down there? Why do not my good, noble liberal friends who have a fine record on human rights take the well and talk about what we are going to do about the political prisoners of conscience in Nicaragua, 11,000 of them? That is 22 times more than what the dictator Somoza had in his one federal penitentiary, Tipitapa.

Amnesty International and the left-wing group, America's Watch—I respect some of their work—they said that, at its worst, Somoza had 500 political prisoners. Now there are 11,000 in a nation of only 2.5 million people.

In Communist Vietnam with 61 million people, they only have 10,000 political prisoners. Let us hear some human rights speeches from the other side.

THERE ARE BANDITS IN BOTH CAMPS IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. OBEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman who just spoke on one point. I do not think either the Sandinistas or the Contra leadership are people who, in the long term, are going to do this country any favors. I think you have a lot of bandits in both camps, and there is no question that both of them, if they could, would run drugs rather than do anything that is constructive.

Let me suggest, however, the issue facing us today is simply whether or not the policy which is being suggested to us will work.

The fact is the American public opposes the President's position in sending money to the Contras because they know that that will not deal with the roots of the problem.

If you want to save Central America, if you want to save Latin America, from communism, you had better do something about the fact that their Third World debt is shoveling $22 billion in capital out of that part of the world every year, which is killing their ability to run an economy in a way which will prevent communism from taking over in that part of the region. And the administration's proposal is not going to do anything significant about it. I would suggest that neither is the McCurdy amendment which will be proposed and offered to us as an alternative today.

I would urge Members who want to vote against stupidity to vote against the rule when it is offered to us today.

TODAY IS THE DAY OF RECKONING

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I wonder why Muammar Qadhafi sent $400 million to the Communist Nicaraguan Government and then said, "We support our brothers in Nicaragua because they fight America on their own soil." Why do you suppose he did that?

Why do you suppose the Soviet Union sent 18,000 tons of war materials into Nicaragua last year? They used to run it through Mariel Harbor in Cuba and repackage it and send it on Cuban ships so that there was no apparent direct involvement by the Soviet Union. But now, because of my colleagues on the left in this House, they are directly sending it into the harbors of Managua on Soviet ships. Why do you suppose they are doing it?

Why do you suppose the PLO and a lot of the other radical groups are down there in Nicaragua helping the Communist government?

It is because they know that the soft underbelly of America is the Mexican-American border, and we have severe problems in Central America, and they know that we are going to have to redirect our attention away from other parts of the world if that war gets out of control.

The leaders in Nicaragua have said they want a revolution without borders. Tomas Borge, Humberto Ortega, and Daniel Ortega said they want a revolution, wars of liberation, throughout that whole area.

I was in Chalatenango Province and I talked to a captured Communist guerrilla. He was trained in Nicaragua. The weapons he used were from Nicaragua.

My colleagues, there is a cancer down there, a Communist cancer, that we must deal with, and today is the day. To wait will cause a major war in Central America—one which will cost many young American lives.

CONTRA AID CANNOT BUY PEACE

(Mr. WHEAT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the Contras have a lot of problems: A taste for torture, corruption, drug smuggling and virtually no popular support in Nicaragua or the United States.

In spite of these problems, Congress sent $27 million last year to support the rebirth of Somoza's Murderous National Guard. Over half of it never got there. The Honduran military wanted a piece of the action, and they got it. The GAO reports that Honduran military officers lopped off over $1 million intended for the Contras. Gen. Walter Lopez, commander of the Honduran Armed Forces, himself received a single payment of $450,000.

Aid to the Contras is the President's idea of seeing a problem and throwing money at it—in the case of General Lopez, a lot of money. But, Mr. President, the American people are not interested in financing Honduran shopping sprees or Contra atrocities. They want peace. Contra aid can't buy that.

LET US NOT SEND AID TO THE CONTRA THUGS IN CENTRAL AMERICA

(Mr. MARKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, what we are talking about here is a policy which cannot work. That is the bottom line. Even the President's advisers and the President himself admits that the Contras cannot win militarily.

So here is where we are. Because the Contras cannot win militarily, we will have another option, and that is to send in the Marines, because those are the only two options if we seek to accomplish the goal which, in fact, the President has stated sub silencio to be the policy of this country.

□ 1055

Because in fact the Contras are not popularly supported in Nicaragua, they cannot win. The Contras are not the freedom-loving democrats which the President portrays in his speeches. Their leaders are in Miami, their bank accounts are in Switzerland, and their foot soldiers are swatting flies in camps in Honduras. What we are going to be left with in another 4 or 5 years are 15,000 to 20,000 thugs, armed to the teeth, roaming throughout Central America with no support from the indigenous people down there. In fact, wreaking terror and havoc upon this God-forsaken country and their neighbors for a generation to come.

This is the time for us to stand up and to finally say, "No, we are finished with supporting people who have no support within their own region."

RULE ON AID TO THE CONTRAS SHOULD BE SENT BACK TO THE COMMITTEE ON RULES

(Mr. CONYERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise, troubled about the rule to Contra aid because there has been added a provision for economic aid to the tune of $350 million to go to El Salvador, to Honduras, Guatemala, Costa Rica, and Belize.

We now have two terribly important issues. I think we should send the rule back to the Rules Committee because this rule for aid has not gone through the Appropriations Subcommittee on Foreign Operations. There has not been 1 day of hearings; no discussion. Out of nowhere before the Rules Committee yesterday we have had grafted on yet another subject.

So I am hoping that because the administration has not asked for this aid, that we join in a bipartisan fashion and send the rule back to the Rules Committee.

CENTRAL AMERICAN POLICY IS STRATEGICALLY FLAWED

(Mrs. BURTON of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose our continuing folly in Central America.

It is increasingly clear that United States policy in Nicaragua is not only strategically flawed, but is also marred by waste and criminality.

Increasing evidence has been developed that the so-called Contras are not the freedom fighters as portrayed by this administration. Rather there has been a pattern of widespread drug trafficking for personal use—transported and financed from Contra installations.

Ther investigative arm of Congress is the General Accounting Office. According to that Office several million dollars in United States aid to Nicaraguan Contra rebels have been traced to offshore banks, the Armed Forces of Honduras and obscure corporations. It was additionally found that one broker for the Contra rebels had received $3.3 million from the United States Government but had sent only $150,000 to Central America.

These findings, issued by an independent and nonpartisan body, raise shocking inferences about United States policy toward Nicaragua. It indicates that the blank-check mentality toward Central America, so enthusiastically espoused by the administration, is bad policy and an insult to the taxpayers of this country.

If all of these above situations were isolated and minimal in effect it might be excusable, as it stands it is terribly tragic.

This vote affords us the opportunity to reassess our position in Central America and breaths new life into the Contadora process.

I urge my colleagues to vote against aid to the Contras.

ALLEGATION OF A PAYOFF TO HONDURAN COMMANDER IN CHIEF IS TOTALLY FALSE

(Mr. RUDD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, the statement has been made that $450,000 went to the Commander in Chief of the Honduran Armed Forces based on a statement by GAO.

The State Department says that that is totally erroneous, that the Nicaraguan Human Assistance Organization purchased uniforms from a factory owned and operated by the Armed Forces and the payments were endorsed by the Armed Forces controller. There was nothing questionable about the transaction and the GAO mistranslated the Spanish on the order of payment. It was made out to the General Staff, not to the Commander in Chief, and it was paid into the Armed Forces Bank, a commercial enterprise owned by the Armed Forces but used by civilians as a capital transfer of dollars from the supplier's Miami account into the local currency on this domestic account.

NHAO has copies of the domestic bank records which clearly demonstrate the transfer. In short, the allegation of a payoff to the military commander is totally false.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1987

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 481 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 481

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5052) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. All points of order for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI are hereby waived against all provisions of the bill through line 10 on page 8. After the bill has been read for amendment in its entirety and after the disposition of all other amendments, including any considered pursuant to the procedure specified in clause 2(d) of rule XXI, the Committee shall proceed to the further consideration of the bill pursuant to section 2 of this resolution. A motion that the Committee of the Whole rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted shall not take procedence over the proceedings provided for in section 2. If such a motion is offered as preferential over amendments specified in the second sentence of clause 2(d) of rule XXI, and is adopted, the Committee of the Whole shall not rise but shall proceed to the further consideration of the bill pursuant to section 2.

SEC. 2. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill pursuant to section 1 of this resolution, the text of title II as proposed by Representative McCurdy of Oklahoma and as printed in the report of the Committee on Rules on this resolution, shall be considered to be part of the bill H.R. 5052 and as having been read the first time, and no further amendment to the bill shall be in order except as provided in this section. All points of order against title II are hereby waived. After general debate on title II, which shall be confined to said title and shall continue not to exceed one hour and thirty minutes, to be equally divided and controlled among Representative McCurdy, Representative Obey of Wisconsin, and another Member opposed to title II, the title shall be considered as having been read for amendment under the five-minute rule. No amendment to title II shall be in order except the following amendments printed in the report of the Committee on Rules on this resolution, if offered by the proponents of said amendments identified in said report and in this resolution, or their designees, said amendments shall be considered only in the following order and shall be considered as having been read, shall all be in order any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, and shall not be subject to amendment or to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole:

(1) the amendment by Representative Edwards of Oklahoma, which shall be debatable for not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a member opposed thereto;

(2) the amendment by Representative Hamilton of Indiana, which shall be debatable for not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a Member opposed thereto;

(3) the applicable version of the amendment by Representative Barnes of Maryland, which shall be in order only if amendment designated (1) above has been adopted and amendment designated (2) above had been rejected, or if amendments designated (1) and (2) above have both been rejected, and which shall be debatable for not to exceed forty-five minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a Member opposed; and

(4) the applicable version of the amendment by Representative Mrazek of New York, which shall be in order only if amendment designated (1) above has been adopted and amendment designated (2) above has been rejected, or if amendments designated (1) and (2) above have both been rejected, and which shall be debatable for not to exceed thirty minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a Member opposed thereto. If amendments designated (1) and (2) above are both adopted, only amendment designated (2) shall be considered to have been finally adopted and reported back to the House. After the disposition of said amendments, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, and no instructions in a motion to recommit shall be in order except instructions germane, and otherwise in order to, the text of the bill preceding title II.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITLEY). The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT], for purposes of debate only, and pending that I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 481 is the rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 5052, the military construction appropriations bill for fiscal year 1987, and for amendments to the bill relating to Central America.

Section one of the rule is a 1-hour open rule for the bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

The rule waives clause 2 of rule XXI against specified provisions of the bill. Clause 2 of rule XXI prohibits the consideration of unauthorized appropriations. This waiver is needed because the military construction authorization for fiscal year 1987 has yet to be enacted.

Section 2 of the proposed rule provides for the consideration of amendments relating to Central America. The text of title II of the bill—as proposed by Representative MCCURDY of Oklahoma and printed in the report accompanying House Resolution 481—shall be considered to be part of the bill upon adoption of the rule. All points of order against title II are waived.

The rule provides for 1½ hours of general debate on title II to be equally divided and controlled between the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY], and a Member opposed to title II.

I want to repeat that again for my colleague, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT]. The rule provides for 1½ hours of general debate on title II to be equally divided and controlled between the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY], and a Member opposed to title II on his side of the aisle.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] for purposes of debate only.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for clarifying that point. There really will be three parts of this, 30 minutes each, and I wanted to make sure that there would be 30 minutes on this side for opposition to the McCurdy substitute which is in the bill. I thank the gentleman for clarifying that.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the only amendments in order to title II are specified in the rule and printed in the report and may be offered only by Members identified in the rule or their designees. These amendments will be considered only in the following order and shall not be subject to amendment or to a demand for a division of the question. All points of order are waived against consideration of the amendments.

First, the rule makes in order an amendment by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS]. This amendment will be debatable for 1 hour, to be divided between Mr. EDWARDS and a Member opposed.

Second, the rule makes in order an amendment by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON]. This amendment will be debatable for 1 hour, to be divided between Mr. HAMILTON and a Member opposed.

If both the Edwards and the Hamilton amendments are adopted, only the Hamilton amendment will be considered to have been fully adopted and reported back to the House. That is an important part of this rule. If both the Edwards—I repeat—and the Hamilton amendments are adopted, only the Hamilton amendment will be considered to have been fully adopted and reported back to the full House.

If the Hamilton amendment is not adopted, the following two additional amendments will be in order either to the Edwards amendment or to title II if the Edwards amendment has not been adopted.

The two amendments are: an amendment by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES] and the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], which will be debatable for 45 minutes to be equally divided between Representative BARNES and an opponent of the amendment; and an amendment by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MRAZEK] which will be debatable for 30 minutes to be divided between Representative MRAZEK and an opponent of the amendment.

Representatives BARNES' and PANETTA's amendment basically, will disallow the spending of additional funds for the Contras until there is an accountability of the $27 million that was appropriated into law last summer and with regard to the expenditure of which there seems to be some question.

Additionally, Representatives BARNES and PANETTA have language in their amendment which addresses the question of the alleged drug scandals within the Contras, and they make a similar requirement in that provision before additional funds can be spent.

The Mrazek amendment—the second one that I referred to—which will be debatable for 30 minutes, the time to be divided between Mr. MRAZEK and an opponent of the amendment—basically restricts where U.S. troops may train—either under the base bill or under the Edwards substitute. It removes them from what is generally considered the combat activity in the war now being waged in Nicaragua.

The rule provides for one motion to recommit and specifies that any instructions contained in the motion to recommit must be germane and otherwise in order to the provisions of the bill which precede title II.

Let me briefly summarize the procedures under this rule.

First, the rule provides for the consideration of H.R. 5052—the military construction appropriations bill—under an open rule.

Upon completion of consideration of the military construction bill, we will move to the consideration of Central America. The rule adds a new title to the bill consisting of what has become known as the McCurdy proposal. The rule then makes in order amendments to that proposal.

First, Mr. EDWARDS will offer an amendment, which will be voted up or down.

Then, Mr. HAMILTON—and I want to emphasize this—will be guaranteed a vote—Mr. HAMILTON will offer an amendment, which will be voted up or down.

Under the so-called king of the mountain procedures that we have used before, the last passed of these two amendments will be considered to have been adopted.

If the Hamilton amendment is not passed, the Barnes-Panetta and the Mrazek amendments will be in order to either the Edwards or McCurdy proposal, whichever has prevailed.

The vote on final passage will be on the entire bill, including title II as or as not amended.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the customary 30 minutes of time.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] has done an excellent job explaining this rule, and he did it very thoroughly. I will not dwell on all the details, but there are some points that I would like to highlight.

This rule does provide for consideration of the base bill, which is H.R. 5052, the military construction appropriations bill for fiscal year 1987, and I should emphasize once again that we will be able to consider the military construction appropriations bill in the normal way.

□ 1115

Amendments would be in order to it. We will have an opportunity to discuss the MilCon portion of the bill itself, but then we will have title II, which is the section dealing with the funds for the freedom fighters in Nicaragua.

Under the rule, there will be one hour of general debate, as is normal, divided equally between the chairman and the ranking minority member.

Clause 2 of rule XXI is waived against all provisions in the bill through page 10, line 8. That clause prohibits the inclusion of unauthorized or legislative provisions in an appropriations bill.

It is a completely open rule with respect to the bill that was actually reported by the Military Construction Appropriations Subcommittee. When all such amendments are disposed of, a motion that the Committee rise and report the bill back to the House, if adopted, would preclude the offering of any limitation amendments pursuant to clause (2)(D) of rule XXI; but notwithstanding the adoption of such motion, the Committee would not actually rise, but instead would proceed to the consideration of the new title II.

So we will do title I, which is military construction, and then go in what I think is an orderly way to title II, dealing with the so-called Contra issue.

Under that procedure, the text of title II as proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY], as printed in the report on this rule, shall be considered as a part of the bill. It is folded into the bill.

Title II will be subject to 1½ hours of debate, divided equally between the proponent and opponent and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] who happens also to be an opponent.

I appreciate the gentleman from Michigan specifying that at least one-third of that hour and a half will go to an opponent on our side. We have clarified that.

The McCurdy title essentially provides for $100 million in assistance to the so-called Contras, with $30 million in nonlethal aid available immediately and the rest to be released in increments, if approved by Congress, with another vote on October 1.

In addition, the McCurdy title provisions would provide $350 million in economic assistance for the four Central American so-called front line countries: Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador, and Costa Rica.

Like the Contra aid, all these funds would be made available from reprogrammed Department of Defense funds.

I would like to emphasize to my colleagues at the beginning what the problems are with the McCurdy substitute that is included as title II of this bill.

There are lengthy discussions with the gentleman from Oklahoma trying to find agreement that could get the broadest possible support on both sides of the aisle so that we could put this issue that has divided us so narrowly really for a couple years now to bed with bipartisan support.

I think those negotiations were in good faith, at least they were on our part; but there were two fundamental issues that we could not overcome that led to this provision that we have here today that requires the substitute to be in order and amendments.

No. 1, after weeks, months, yes, years of delay, which had been predicated on the assumption that there were going to be some negotiations that would lead to some peaceful settlement of the situation in Nicaragua, the MCCURDY provision would delay once again any genuine assistance to the Contras that would allow them to defend themselves and contribute to keeping the Communists in Nicaragua within their own borders.

In other words, only $30 million in more nonlethal assistance, no military assistance immediately.

So while we were talking back in March about a delay until some time in June or July for military assistance, now we are told we are going to delay it again. We are going to delay it from not the first of July, not the first of August or even September or October, but some time after October, and another vote timed very interestingly, October 1. I do not know what the magic is of that date. It is conveniently 1 month before the next regular congressional elections. Perhaps we would have been willing to give on that.

In fact, our alternative does provide for a process to get an expedited vote on the last increment of funds, but that will be in February, but we could not agree on the fact that we would have to vote again on this issue, based on some very unclear negotiations or indications that something may be happening between now and October. What it amounted to was another delay.

How many of you want another vote on this issue on October 1? Remember, that is a very important part of the so-called McCurdy title.

Now, the rule does provide for offering two substitutes for title II, each subject to an hour's debate.

The first substitute to be offered will be by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] on behalf of himself and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON], who has made a very important contribution to the way this package has been developed and to the concessions that have been made. I consider this to be a very reasonable and moderate package in dealing with the problems in Central America, particularly in Nicaragua.

It is essentially the administration's approach, but modified recently in the spirit of bipartisan compromise and includes $300 million in economic assistance. I, for one, have been willing to support that, because I do think in Central America that the only answer is not military assistance to the Contras. We must do something to help economic conditions of those front line states that are very fragile new democracies in Costa Rica, Honduras, Guatemala, and El Salvador.

I agree with the old statement that a hungry belly does not much care who governs it. We have got to pay attention to the economic situation in Central America.

I think that is an area where we can find agreement, liberal and conservative, Democrat and Republican. That is a significant movement from what we had earlier on this whole issue.

It also includes $100 million in reprogrammed defense funds for the freedom fighters, of which $30 million would be for humanitarian aid. It is not all for military aid. They need basic supplies.

We are also not talking about heavy weapons. We are talking about very small arms, replacement and training, the sort of thing they really need down there to be able to do a basic job, and it would be in three increments. We do not just say, "Here is your full $100 million." It would be $40 million available immediately, and yes, it could be for ammunition, training, and for small arms; $20 million October 15 and $40 million February 15, with an expedited process to get a second vote of disapproval if the Congress wants that based on the situation at that time.

The McCurdy title essentially provides for $100 million in assistance to the Contras, with $30 million in nonlethal aid available immediately, and the rest to be released in increments if approved by Congress after October 1. In addition, the McCurdy title provides $350 million in economic assistance to four Central American countries. Like the Contra aid, all these funds would be made available from reprogrammed Department of Defense funds.

The rule provides for the offering of two substitutes for title II, each subject to an hour's debate. The first substitute to be offered will be by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS], on behalf of himself and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON]. It is essentially the administration approach as modified recently in a spirit of bipartisan compromise. It includes $300 million in economic assistance for Guatemala, Honduras, Costa Rica, and El Salvador to be reprogrammed from existing foreign aid funds. It also includes $100 million in reprogrammed defense funds for the Contras, of which $30 million would be humanitarian aid.

The Edwards-Skelton substitute would provide the Contra aid funds in three installments of $40 million, $20 million, and $40 million, on enactment, October 15, and February 15 respectively, with no heavy weaponry until February of next year.

Next the rule makes in order the substitute by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] which makes $5 million available to assist in the Contadora peace process, and $27 million to assist refugees displaced by the conflict in Nicaragua.

Following disposition of the two substitutes, the rule makes in order two additional amendments to the title unless the Hamilton substitute has been adopted. In other words, they could be offered to either McCurdy or Edwards.

The first amendment by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARNES] would require a Presidential report accounting for previously appropriated humanitarian assistance before new funds could be released. It would be subject to 45 minutes of debate.

The second amendment, by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MRAZEK], prohibits U.S. personnel from training Contras within 20 miles of the Nicaraguan border. It would be subject to 30 minutes of debate.

Under the terms of the rule, if both the Edwards and Hamilton substitutes are adopted, the Hamilton substitute would be the one reported back to the House—the so-called king-of-the-hill approach. While under the rules a separate vote may be demanded in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole, there will be no opportunity under this rule for a separate vote on the base title II proposed by Mr. MCCURDY, since it is not being considered as an amendment.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule provides for one motion to recommit, with or without instructions, but instructions may not attempt to amend title II further.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is about as fair a rule as we can expect, though it has been a long time in coming. You may recall that when this issue was debated as part of the supplemental, we attempted on our side to decouple it with an amendment to the rule, but that was rejected. I was interested to note in the Rules Committee yesterday how many of our Democratic colleagues on the committee and who appeared as witnesses, seemed to yearn wistfully for the separate consideration of the Contra aid issue.

But the Democratic leadership has again insisted on tying this to another bill, and this is probably the only realistic vehicle we have at this point for advancing the cause of providing badly needed assistance to the democratic resistance in Nicaragua. I am just hopeful this bill will have a speedier journey through both Houses than the so-called urgent supplemental experienced. This is already 3 weeks overdue from when it was originally scheduled by the leadership.

Let me just make one additional comment about a provision of this rule that is a departure from previous rules. The rule provides that the McCurdy title and the various other amendments to it shall be those which are printed in the report to this rule as opposed to being designated by reference to inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of a particular date. I can understand the concern of the Rules Committee that Members might put something in the RECORD that is different from that which was presented to the Rules Committee, and when we waive points of order, especially germaneness, that is a legitimate concern.

However, the problem which gave rise to this concern and caution was not one in which a Member deceived the Rules Committee; rather it was one in which an honest mistake was made in the drafting of the rule itself. My own concern is that this procedure will make the text of the amendments less available to Members than would be the case if they were printed in the RECORD, since these rules and their reports are often not available when they are taken up on the floor.

I would hope we could arrive at some compromise procedure whereby these could be put in the RECORD again, but that it would be done so in a way that the Rules Committee could ensure that what is dropped in the hopper is identical to what was presented to our committee.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that this is a somewhat complicated rule, though the process is not unusual in situations when we are attempting to assure that everyone has a fair opportunity to present their alternative and get a vote on it. The special treatment of the McCurdy title as original text instead of as an amendment is unique and somewhat skewed, and should be avoided in the future. But it was considered necessary to keep faith with the pledge made by the leadership to Mr. McCurdy. While this side was not a party to those negotiations or the detailed procedure which resulted, I think we have been treated about as fairly as could be expected under the circumstances in terms of presenting our bipartisan substitute. I therefore intend to support this rule.

Before I go further, the gentleman from Michigan has been patiently and very politely waiting for me to yield.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to thank the gentleman for his explanation about the McCurdy provision.

Mr. LOTT. Did I convince the gentleman to oppose it?

Mr. CONYERS. Well, I am trying to figure this out. If the supporters of Contra aid are opposed to McCurdy, or at least have trouble with it, I can tell the gentleman for sure that those who oppose Contra aid have trouble with it. How in God's name did it ever get into the rule at the last minute anyway?

Mr. LOTT. Well, that was the way that the leadership on the gentleman's side decided that this rule would be designed. I give credit to them that they at least advised us, on this side of the aisle, what they were going to do, and that is more than the minority gets quite often around here. They, at least this time, have given us a straight up vote for our preferred option. It is on such a bill that I think there can be some agreement to move forward.

It is not as bad as what we had on the supplemental appropriations. If this process had been set up on the supplemental appropriations bill, this issue could have been solved weeks or months ago.

I have to confess that I tried to figure out who was really getting the short end of the stick on this issue and I could not decide really whether it was to the advantage of those against Contra aid or those for it, so it must be about as fair as we are going to get out of this body at this time.

The gentleman is talking to the wrong guy about where this rule was concocted. I was not the devisor of this package.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LOTT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CONYERS. Could the gentleman just tell me if there was any logic put forward why this provision, if it is important, could not have gone through the appropriate committees in the Congress and that there be hearings, at least 1 day or 1 hour of hearings, to substantiate the reasons for this extremely important measure now being pasted onto a controversial issue itself?

Mr. LOTT. Well, I would personally have preferred seeing this come up on a free-standing basis out of the appropriate committee; but for some reason, the gentleman's leadership has been determined all along to couple this with something.

I presume part of the reason is that it probably would be pretty hard to get something out of the authorization committee that would have jurisdiction; although, the Rules Committee, the maker of all kinds of interesting rules, could have had hearings and we could have reported out here on a free-standing basis, rather than being added to the military construction appropriations bill.

But in this case, I am not going to condemn the rule. I think it is about as fair as we could have under the circumstances. I would not write it this way, but at least we get a fair shot.

For that reason, I am going to vote for it and the other gentleman from Michigan nods and smiles in this instance. I am damning it in a way with faint praise; but I will vote for the rule so that we can on to the substance of the issue involved here.

Maybe the gentleman and I could work together in the future, I say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS], on devising a little better rule.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma. I am enjoying this.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Louisiana well knows——

Mr. LOTT. Mississippi—I know we are an awful lot alike.

Mr. ENGLISH. Excuse me, Mississippi, the gentleman is right—I do not want to condemn him this early in the morning.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. ENGLISH. As the gentleman knows, in the past I have strongly supported Contra aid. I certainly can understand why people are reluctant in their support of it, but it is a very important issue and it is one that people have grappled with a good deal around this Chamber.

I think the debate has been stimulating, not only to the Members, but certainly has been worthwhile as far as the country is concerned.

I would vote once again for military assistance to the Contras, as long as we have some safeguards with regard to the funds. I think that is going to be a very important factor that comes out in this debate.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond on that, and then I will yield further.

I would invite the gentleman to review the protections that we have in the Edwards-Skelton provision to track and make sure that this money is used in the way it should be. We have some very careful reporting procedures. I think the gentleman will find that our package is much stronger in that area than the McCurdy package. I will get that information to the gentleman, but I think he will be pleased with the precautions we have included.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LOTT. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important and I fully appreciate that; but the thing that really troubles me, we now no longer are going to be debating this issue with regard to whether or not this Nation should or should not provide military assistance to the Contras. Now we are folding in not only the military construction issue, but more importantly, I think, is the $300 to $350 million worth of aid, economic aid to those surrounding countries.

Now, this is an entirely different matter than anything we have discussed in the past and certainly it clouds the issue as to whether or not there should be arms going to the Contras. It is going to make it extremely difficult, I think, for Members to have it.

I requested the Rules Committee to provide for a rule to allow us to strike that so that that measure could be considered on its own.

Second, we do not have a plan before us today, that I know of, a long-term plan that tells us how we are going to deal with the economic problems of Central America, not to mention the problems we have got in Mexico; but that is the course on which we are embarking.

I think without question, with allegations, at least questions with regard to the use of funds that have already been sent down there for economic assistance, to then multiply that by tenfold and to expect that there are not going to be some very grave problems with that $300 million to $350 million worth of economic assistance, I think foolish.

That is the real problem I have with this rule, that these issues are important enough to the Nation that they should stand on their own merits. They should not be folded and blended together. I think that is where the gentleman from Michigan and I perfectly agree, even though we are on opposite sides of the fence with regard to Contra aid, and it is wrong.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the gentleman and say that I appreciate his remarks. I have some of those sentiments myself.

I think the record over my years here in 13 votes on foreign aid packages, I think I voted against 12 of them.

I do think we should have some specificity as to how this money will be used and we can provide that to the gentleman. In fact, we have a breakdown of how much will go to El Salvador and how much to Honduras and how basically it would be used; but we should make sure it is used properly.

But I appeal to the gentleman to look at the question of the economy in these countries, particularly El Salvador.

□ 1130

We have a leader there in that country who is trying to move that country toward more democracy. He has a very weak economy, and if his economy does not provide some decent living conditions for his people, he could lose control.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ROEMER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to my friend and colleague from Oklahoma by saying that his concern is well founded; that we ought not to piecemeal ourselves into the region.

I call my colleagues to a provision in the Edwards-Skelton substitute which requires on the 1st day of March 1987 a report to this Congress by the administration in terms of their long-term plans for the region. That would be point No. 1.

Point No. 2: Many men and women who have been in the region, met with the leaders and studied the problem think that bullets alone will not solve the problem. We need bullets and butter, coordinated with some long-term goals in mind. McCURDY made that contribution in this process, and I think it is a good one. I hope the gentleman considers that.

Finally, the $300 million in economic assistance that is in the Skelton-Edwards package comes not from new money or new taxes, but is reprogramming of money already appropriated by this Congress. That might not be the deciding point in the gentleman's mind, but it is an issue that should be studied. Old money, not new; guns and butter, in a coordinated program. And a report to this Congress on the 1st day of March next year about long-term economic policy.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer the gentleman to page 25 of the Edwards-Skelton package, section 213, which deals with the accountability for funds. I think he will like that language.

Mr. ENGLISH. If the gentleman will yield very briefly again, the thing that troubles me is that it is too late next year. We have all seen in this Chamber program after program, particularly foreign aid programs, that we have backed into. We will send them a little money and then next year people come back to us and say, "Well, we have already committed this much money. We cannot back off."

So that is what troubles me. It is going to be too late at that time and that is the reason I will oppose the rule.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield very briefly. I am beginning to run out of time.

Mr. ROEMER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, just a quick point in response to my colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma. Again, his concerns are well founded.

I would point out that we are spending $890 million in economic assistance already in the region, right now. I agree with the gentleman that we ought to look ahead and not behind.

This bill, with all of its weaknesses, the Skelton-Edwards substitute does just that. It calls for planning, it calls for a look ahead. It calls for a combination toward a central regional policy. It will work. We ought to give it a chance.

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. PARRIS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, a review of this rule very quickly it seems to me would, I would ask the gentleman, under the King of the Mountain procedures under which we are operating here, in order for the President's position to prevail, is it not true that we have to carry six out of the seven votes that are anticipated on this matter?

Mr. LOTT. In effect, that could be what is required. We have to try to certainly support the Edwards-Skelton provision and defeat the Hamilton-Barnes, or Hamilton as it is now known, and defeat the Barnes-Panetta, and defeat Mrazek, and it goes on and on.

This is no cake-walk. It is a complicated, convoluted process, but at least we get one clear, fair shot. I really feel and certainly hope that we can prevail in spite of the fact that we have to run through this jigsaw puzzle.

Mr. PARRIS. If the gentleman will yield further, I would say it is comforting to note that we have the usual impartial, nonpartisan resolution here that the majority generally favors us with.

Mr. LOTT. It is a matter of degree.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, do we have to defeat McCurdy, too?

Mr. LOTT. No, you will not have an opportunity to knock McCurdy itself out of the package. It is part of the package. I believe that is correct.

But, of course, you can vote against it. The gentleman from Michigan, I would imagine, would want to vote against military construction and whatever is in there for Contras. So the gentleman will have that opportunity.

Mr. CONYERS. I would not be too sure what the gentleman from Michigan is going to vote against under this convoluted rule.

Mr. LOTT. I would not want to put words in the gentleman's mouth, but he will have that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, let me wrap this up, because I have other people who would like to speak on the rule.

We will have the Barnes amendment, which will be subject to 45 minutes of debate. We will have the Mrazek amendment, which will be subject to 30 minutes of debate.

I feel somewhat vindicated. Some of my colleagues over there were critical of the discharge petition that we filed because we had a "King of the Hill" process. And yet that is what we have here today, and the last one that is left standing wins. So we have to pass Edwards-Skelton, we have to defeat the Hamilton amendment. That is the normal procedure around here, but some people acted like we were pulling a fast one on them. We were not.

I have some time requests, but let me just sum up with this: Nobody is going to love this rule, and there are going to be questions about it right to the end. I suspect the gentleman from Michigan who helped design this package is not in love with it. But it is as good as we are going to get under these conditions on this issue, so I would hope we would pass the rule and get on to the substance. When we get to the substance, I urge my colleagues, look at, listen to, and then vote for the Edwards-Skelton substitute for the McCurdy language.

I want to emphasize once again: If Members want another vote, if Members want to walk through this exercise again October 1, then go ahead and stick with the McCurdy substitute that is included in title II of the bill. I do not think the body wants to do that. I certainly hope that we will not.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule because, frankly, from the discussion by the gentleman from Mississippi, it appears that that is all we can get to put this important issue on the docket today. So, indeed, it is important that we discuss this issue.

This could be the last meaningful vote we get on this subject. I hope it will not be, but it will be if the aid that we have requested, and that the President requested, for the freedom fighters does not go through and if the McCurdy substitute or one of the other amendments other than the Edwards-Skelton amendment passes the House today.

In fact, if we have to come back on this issue, or if we delay this matter for another 3 months, I have been told in a conversation with representatives of this CIA that the CIA has estimated that by the end of July, food and support for the Contras will run out. By the beginning of August, ammunition will be in short, critical supply, and by late August, there will be rapid deterioration of critical ammo requirements, If the vote on the Contras, for the aid for the Contras fails today, a large exfiltration of Contras will emerge from Nicaragua beginning in late July.

So this will be a moot issue if we have to put this off again and discuss it again sometime later on. If that happens, in fact, if we lose this issue today, it would mean that the House of Representatives has chosen not to heed the cries for freedom in Central America. It would mean that we have chosen to reverse the progress that we have made in El Salvador where democracy is flowering. It would mean that we have elected to subject Costa Rica and Honduras to continued bombardment of border conflicts and terrorism and subversion. It would mean that we have turned our backs on the prospects for peace and democracy in Guatemala and that we have decided that our undefended border with Mexico, some 2,000 miles, could one day become an equivalent of the Korean DMZ or the Berlin Wall.

If we choose not to support the Contras today with the Edwards-Skelton amendment, it could mean that the Soviet Union will be given a free hand in Nicaragua and that the "Stalinistas" will be allowed to tighten their stranglehold on their nation with Soviet supplies that they are importing on a daily basis today. It will mean that the shipments, the armaments of the Soviets and Soviet pilots and military advisers and the various, miscellaneous other advisers of Cubans, Libyans, East Germans, Bulgarians, North Koreans and PLO will go on. All of these will be permitted to remain, and to foster the plans for the communication of Nicaragua and Central America without further United States interference.

It will mean that the forced relocation of Miskitos, the prison camps, the systematic imprisonment, torture and executions carried out regularly by the Sandinista government will not be deterred, and it will mean that the eradication of civil rights that has gone on in recent months, the vast restrictions on organized religion, the elimination of freedom and of the press, of free assembly, or free speech and free elections, the eradication of basic human decency and liberty in Nicaragua, all these will be unopposed if we fail in our effort to support the Contras today.

Most importantly, it will mean that the short-term politics of the situation has prevailed despite the guarantee that if we fail, long-term problems for Central America and the Western Hemisphere will be created.

Mr. Speaker, a negative vote on the President's package or on the Edwards-Skelton provision today will be a triumph for those who are insensitive to the cause of freedom in Nicaragua, and it will be a critical blow to the long-term prospects for freedom for 3 million Nicaraguans and ultimately for the 400 million people who inhabit the Central and North American Continents. A negative vote today, or a vote for the McCurdy or one of the other miscellaneous substitutes and against the Edwards-Skelton amendment, will represent a retreat of the United States in the face of advancing totalitarianism and it will be a grave mistake.

□ 1140

Mr. Speaker, I urge our colleagues to ignore the red herrings that have been thrown about this floor over the last few months and concentrate on the reality of this issue.

We need the freedom fighters, and the hopes of the freedom fighters in Nicaragua are dependent on us and our support of them. We have to provide that support, and we have to face the issue today, or else we have to admit that we are conceding Central America to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the defeat of all the provisions except the Skelton-Edwards amendment. I hope it prevails today.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me take a second to address a couple of issues, one of which I neglected to raise at the outset of my remarks. I described the rule that is pending before the House, but I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a new policy that the Committee on Rules adopted that is reflected in this rule.

In the future, when specific amendments are to be made in order by a rule, we intend to require that they be submitted to the Committee on Rules for printing in the report accompanying the rule. We will employ this practice rather than referencing amendments which had been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by proponents.

This policy is meant to avoid the confusion and ensure that the Members are aware of the exact amendment to be made in order when extraordinary procedures are recommended by the Committee on Rules.

Quite frankly, it is a result of the confusion that we had last week on an amendment that was offered by a colleague of ours on the question of apartheid.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HALL], with whom I have unfortunately a disagreement on this rule, but whom, nevertheless, I respect and look forward to working with on future rules.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the Member who sits next to me on the Committee on Rules, for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule.

Since I am a member of the House Rules Committee, it is rare for me to vote against a rule sent by my committee to the full House. However, I am strongly opposed to this particular rule. I voted against it in the Rules Committee, and I intend to vote against it now on the House floor.

This is a bad rule for many reasons, but the most important reason is that it prevents the American people from having a clear vote on how their Representatives stand on the matter of aid to the Contras. The vote should provide a clear answer to the question, "Are you for or against aid to the Contras?"

The rule before us does not permit a simple answer to this question. Instead, we are presented with alternatives that are padded with various development programs, refugee aid, and time release formulas for so-called humanitarian and military Contra aid. The qualifiers and modifiers in these alternatives seem designed to confuse the issue for the American people. There is enough in each of these proposals to rationalize a position for almost any audience.

Our constituents have the right to know how we stand on aid to the Contras, without the extra baggage loaded onto these amendments. Are we afraid to make our positions clear?

What are our constituents to make of the McCurdy package? It makes $30 million available immediately for so-called nonlethal aid, with another $70 million in unrestricted aid to be released in increments after a vote by Congress after October 1. But this package is more than just Contra aid: it also includes $350 million in supplemental economic assistance to be sprinkled throughout Central America. Is this a vote on Contra aid or on a Marshall plan for Central America?

The Republican substitute would parcel out in installments a total of $30 million in humanitarian aid and $70 million in military aid. It also contains a regional assistance package totaling $300 million in economic aid. So a vote for it is not just a vote for Contra aid, it's a vote for a new foreign aid program for Central America. At a time when the Gramm-Rudman budget procedures are forcing cuts in both domestic and foreign spending, why are we allowing new foreign aid programs like these to pass through the House without any consideration whatsoever by the Foreign Operations Subcommittee?

The Hamilton amendment is preferable to the other two major alternatives because it contains no aid of any kind for the Contras. However, it calls for $27 million for those displaced by the conflict in Nicaragua, and $5 million to help the Contadora peace process. While the underlying objectives of this amendment may be worthy, they are a sideshow to the matter of Contra aid. It offers a chance to be for something other than Contra aid, but it skirts the real question before the Congress.

These strange alternatives and the ground rules for their consideration are the result of deals that have been made on the Contra issue. The goal seems to be to protect and cover Representatives confronted with tough votes. The American people are not well served by such procedures.

Let's not postpone the day of reckoning on the Contra debate further. Let's defeat this rule and return with another that will permit a clean up or down vote on Contra aid.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to express my opposition to using the military construction appropriations bill as the vehicle for these Contra votes. Procedurally, it makes no sense to me to graft this issue onto an unrelated bill. Further, under this rule, those who are against Contra aid may well find themselves faced with no alternative but to vote against final passage of the military construction appropriations bill. I am a strong supporter of the military construction appropriations bill, and I think it is unfair to hold this important legislation hostage to an unrelated foreign policy debate.

I offered an amendment to this rule in Rules Committee which would have made in order an Obey amendment to strike title II, the Contra and foreign aid provisions, from this military construction bill. This would have given those opposed to Contra aid an opportunity to reject just that part of the legislation, and allowed the military construction appropriations bill to move forward. I regret that my amendment to the rule to permit this was rejected.

I am saddened to have to urge my colleagues to defeat a rule out of my own committee. Unfortunately, on this occasion I must call upon my colleagues to defeat this ill-conceived rule.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I wish that life were black and white and there were no grays and things would be crystal clear and Members would have no problems choosing between what is clearly right and what is clearly wrong. But it is not.

This issue is not that clear. The waters on this issue have been muddied by virtually everybody who has been involved in this issue, domestically and internationally. It is not simple; it is complex, and the complexity of the issue, unfortunately, is reflected in the rule that we have before us.

So people understand, make sure, my colleagues on my side of the aisle, who believe as I do that we should not be providing any aid to the Contras, that you will have a clear, black and white choice on that issue to the extent that I could give it. That is, vote for the Hamilton amendment. The Hamilton amendment will be made in order for a vote, irrespective of what happens on the preceding amendment.

So that is clear. Members on this side of the aisle will have a chance, if they so desire, to vote against not only the Republican Edwards-Skelton proposal or they will also have a change to substitute the McCurdy proposal with the Hamilton proposal that provides no aid for the Contras.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MRAZEK].

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order a very important amendment which I would like to discuss very briefly.

It is an amendment which would preclude any training by active duty American Armed Forces personnel or inactive duty personnel in support of the Contras within a 20-mile combat zone contiguous to the border of Nicaragua in either Honduras or Costa Rica.

I think it is important for us to remember that day in August 1964 when then President Lyndon Baines Johnson went on national television to tell us that two of our destroyers, the Maddox and the Turner Joy, had been attacked by North Vietnamese gunboats and we were going in with our bombers to Vietnam.

We paid a major price as a people, as a nation, for an attack that never took place on those two destroyers. President Johnson, even at that time, knew it was based on the sketchiest of evidence that we were going forward.

I submit to you that if we have Green Berets training the Contras or Rangers training the Contras in their base camps contiguous to the border with Nicaragua, those base camps which have been attacked in what are called hot-pursuit engagements in recent years dozens of times; that if we were to lose American boys in those camps, I would be concerned about our President perhaps again going on national television to tell the American people that American troops have been attacked and that we are going into Nicaragua.

This amendment does not preclude the training of any of the Contras in the areas where they could very possibly be trained in places like Aguacate in Honduras. It simply establishes a buffer zone so that American troops will not be put in harm's way.

I speak in support of this rule, although I know it is controversial. I happen to be a Democrat who opposes assistance to the Contras; nevertheless, I support this rule because I believe it is a fair rule.

□ 1150

The rule provides an opportunity for those opposed to Contra aid to support a positive approach embraced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] and those of us who support the Hamilton amendment can vote in favor of it; it embraces a compromise approach, or several compromise approaches, and it embraces the President's alternative.

I would urge my colleagues to support the rule, and also support an amendment which precludes putting American troops in harm's way.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO].

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, this is a very difficult issue. I came to the House this morning and listened to the debate with my own delegation and within the Democratic caucus, and I must say it is one of the more difficult choices that I think we are going to be asked to make those of us who are Democrats, or liberals, or simply people who are unilaterally opposed to compromising on a very firm position against aid this very illegitimate force called the Contras.

I have decided to support my friend from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] and the rule because I firmly believe it is not only fair to all of the various points of view that are represented on this floor, and there are far more than two; because I think if we fail to support this rule, we will prematurely drive together what is still an unholy alliance of Members who are not yet at a point where they agree on one strategy in Central America.

I do not want to prematurely force my friends of good will arrayed around Mr. McCURDY to join with those forces on the other side of the aisle that are interested in giving military assistance today.

I think time is on our side. I think we are educating the American people about the history of this region and our misbegotten role in it. I want that time, the time that we need to continue that process of educating.

The President is not succeeding in selling the American people on his policy. We are not going to give him a victory today. If he in any way attempts to claim one, he will be inaccurate.

What we are perhaps requiring at worst is an opportunity to vote again, another day, when we may be even stronger than we are now. At best, I think we will have an opportunity to enact the Hamilton amendment with the growing support of the American people.

Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAZIO. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. TRAXLER. The gentleman said we are buying time to educate. Is the gentleman aware that by 2 to 1 the American public opposes the President's initiative and effort here, and will the gentleman tell me why then we are proceeding against the public will?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FAZIO. I certainly do understand the will of the people and I think that it is eventually going to come home in an election year to an increasingly large portion of both caucuses; those who have any doubt about the popularity of our parties views and more than that, an intelligent appreciation the leadership can provide on this issue, will have no doubt as time goes by; and I fear no vote in October, if one comes, because I think we will do even better then. Our strength will have grown.

I want to be able to continue in the future to fight on this issue in a way that will deprive the Contras of the kind of assistance they seek today, and if we see this rule defeated, the kind of assistance I am afraid they will receive today; if they win unlimited military assistance we will have made it impossible for us to emerge from this quagmire in Nicaragua with anything like the kind of sane and rational policy that we all seek.

Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAZIO. I yield to the gentleman frm Michigan.

Mr. TRAXLER. I would certainly hope that the Congress will be a representative body, and will follow the will of the American public in this instance. It is morally right; it is a good judgment; the American public is correct and we ought to listen to them.

Mr. FAZIO. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TRAXLER] is correct, and this rule is correct; let us support it.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the Chair the time remaining on both sides?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] has 4 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT].

Mr. LOTT. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the general debate, it has been my view that now we have a bill that really has title I and title II; and so I presumed that during the general debate, military construction could be discussed and debated, but also the questions that are included in title II.

Is that the gentleman's interpretation?

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, we had hoped that there would be time to do the military construction debate in the military construction part of the bill, which is the first part of the bill; and that is why we reserved an hour and a half for the gentleman opposed to the McCurdy amendment; Mr. OBEY and Mr. McCURDY, and then gave an hour each on the two substitutes, and then 45 minutes on Barnes and 30 Mrazek on their amendments if indeed they are germane to what is pending.

Of course, the gentleman can talk about what he wants to, but I would assume that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER], who is anxiously grabbing the microphone in front of me now, wants to talk about this bill, and I think it is an important bill and people want to speak on it, and they should; and he is going to control the time on that issue on our side of the aisle for that part of the bill, and it seems to me that we ought to be talking about military construction.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like some clarification. We have a bill here that may not be all that important, but it is to a lot of people who are looking for housing, our troops in Europe and other places; this is in excess of $8 billion.

I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, would it not be in order, if I control the time on this side, if someone wishes to speak as they are talking about the military construction bill, if they wish to speak on the other aspects of the legislation, that would certainly be in order. I control the time and can recognize people as I see fit, on whatever subject they would like to speak about.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. That is my understanding.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I am sure we will have the customary 30 minutes of time over here; and I agree with the gentleman, this is very important legislation, the military construction appropriations bill.

There is an attachment, a rider, to the work the gentleman has done that maybe he would have preferred to be done some other way. We do not want to take away from military construction, and it should be fully debated, in general debate, but if the full hour is not used up, there are Members that may want to address this in the context of military construction in some way, and I just think we should not be limiting it by saying "No, you can't talk about title II" because title II is part of the bill.

The gentleman, the chairman of the subcommittee, clearly will direct the debate, I am sure, toward military construction; but there is some ambiguity here, and I would like to clear it up, like he would.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the ranking member wishes to do with the 30 minutes he has for military construction. We are certainly going to recognize Members on our side if they wish to speak about the merits of the military construction bill.

However, if we have some other time and they wish to speak about the merits of the Contra aid or the Skelton or the Hamilton or what have you, we are certainly not going to preclude them; and I would certainly hope that I would not be restricted from allowing Members on this side to speak on whatever they would like to speak about since this is, theoretically, our vehicle that we are honored to have this distinguished amendment, and this important issue onto our bill.

I would certainly hope we would have some latitude as to what we can talk about.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, we just wanted to make sure we had the same guarantees on our side, and I think we are agreeing with the gentleman; he stated it very well just then.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman anticipate any amendment to the military construction portion of the bill?

Mr. HEFNER. If the gentleman will yield, it seems we certainly have some other sections, and we anticipate there are a couple of amendments that are going to be offered to the military construction. We will have a couple of amendments that are not controversial, but we have a couple amendments that will take some time.

Mr. MICHEL. If the gentleman will yield further, Mr. Speaker, we will consider them under the 5-minute rule?

Mr. HEFNER. I am assuming so. Mr. Speaker, I am assuming that we are going to be treated with the same courtesy as all other legislation that comes before this House; whether it be the Defense Subcommittee, Education and Labor, or whatever. We have worked very hard on this bill, and I am not real enthused and happy about the way that we are having to bring this bill up here.

Mr. Speaker, it is not the greatest honor that has ever been bestowed on me since I have been in this body to have these riders attached to our bill that we worked very hard on. We would like to, hopefully we will vote for this rule and get on with the legislation and just like everything else, the last guy standing is the one that will win.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, this gentleman certainly intends to support the rule, and would not in any way infringe upon his prerogative as chairman of that distinguished subcommittee, to make the points that have to be made on that confined area, and the amendments that have to be offered in a normal procedure.

I regret that we have to take it all en bloc, but that is the situation for what it is.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH].

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, I would point out very briefly that yesterday at the Rules Committee meeting I had requested a rule that would allow a motion to strike the economic aid, the $350 million.

The reason I did that is the same as many of those who oppose the Contra aid. I happen to support the Contra aid, but I feel that it is important enough that there should be a separate vote on that issue, and it should be by itself.

There is $350 million worth of economic aid and only $100 million as far as Contra aid. That means in effect, we are not going to be voting on Contra aid; we are going to be voting on foreign aid, not Contra aid.

□ 1200

That is an issue that should be determined on its own and on its own merits. We all recognize there are far more than four countries in Central America that have economic difficulties. What about Mexico? We all recognize something is going to have to be done with this entire region. Should it not be approached as a region, should it not be looked at in total, should we not decide in advance what our plan would be, what our expectations and our goals are for this region? Should we not decide on the directions we want the region to go? But instead once again we are backing into a foreign aid program, and I urge defeat of the rule.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN].

Mr. MCCAIN. I appreciate the gentleman from Mississippi yielding.

Mr. Speaker, in response to what was just said by my colleague from Oklahoma, I would like to recommend to his consideration the fact that the entire Kissinger Commission report, so-called Caribbean Basin Initiative, was authorized by this Congress, and it does provide a framework for aid to Latin and Central American countries. I suggest that he examine it.

What I would like to focus on here today, and I will be supporting the rule, as convoluted as it may be, is the so-called McCurdy amendment or McCurdy aspects of this bill.

I would suggest to the Members of this body and to the American people that an argument can be made, and a compelling one, and will be made by Mr. HAMILTON, the distinguished chairman of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, that there should be no aid for the Contras and we should do whatever we can to extricate ourselves from that very difficult situation we are in today.

That argument can be made. I think it deserves your consideration. I believe that the Skelton amendment also deserves your consideration because that will make a commitment that will send a signal to the freedom fighters in Nicaragua that this country is indeed supporting their struggle, for the promises that were made to them when the Sandinista government came to power and were not fulfilled.

But let me tell you, no argument can be made for the so-called McCurdy solution. No argument can possibly be made for a halfway entrance into a situation which will then continue the uncertainty and the unwise and undisciplined situation as we will find ourselves in.

No argument can be made to bring back again and again and again to the floor of this House another vote and another vote, obviously crafted to come up the 1st of October so that it will be then enmeshed and involved in election-year politics.

I say to my colleagues, consider both options. The time has come for this body and for the people of America to decide. Do we support those fighting for freedom in Nicaragua and throughout Central and Latin America? Or do we cut and leave it and make the best of a very bad situation?

The responsibility will lie with the decisions we make today. Let us make that responsibility clear. We will be faced today if we turn down the Skelton proposal with two options: one, accepting a Cuba in the Western Hemisphere and trying to cope with all that entails; or two, eventually sending in American troops to eradicate that cancer. If we do not support Skelton, we will be faced with those two options, neither of which is acceptable.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, we have 1½ minutes remaining; is that correct?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of our time to our distinguished leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] to wrap up the debate on our side.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, as I indicated a moment ago, I am going to support this rule, as complicated as it is, and I would say certainly that all the negotiations that have been going on within the last 3 or 4 weeks have truly been in a bipartisan fashion. I think mention was made earlier that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY], who serves on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, thought there was a possibility of our getting together. But it is quite obvious that after a certain length or period of time that the gentleman wanted to refuse or at least he has had to refuse, or for whatever reason, any kind of military assistance up front. Mr. Speaker, that is core and central to this issue. It has got to be in that form to really be meaningful.

But then I am also intrigued by the question propounded by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] with respect to the economic assistance. Actually, the amount, yes, pretty rich for this gentleman's blood, too. But by the same token, it was in the interest of compromising and giving that long-term commitment and indication that beyond the immediate military and humanitarian assistance, to bring pressure to bear, to have that negotiating process move forward. We are also attempting by our first move here, in a long-range commitment, to implement the Kissinger Commission's recommendations for that entire area.

For my part, I am happy to see those four countries surrounding Nicaragua so actively engaged in their own future security, to have the leaders of their countries personally involved in wanting to make that decision and helping us formulate the kind of plan that I think ought to fly this afternoon, given a sufficient number of votes.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CARPER].

Mr. CARPER. I thank the gentleman for yielding these 2 minutes to me.

Mr. Speaker, I think this rule is a fair one. I believe it deserves our support. It gives an opportunity to those Members who oppose any aid to the Contras the chance to vote against any aid to the Contras. It gives those Members who seek to support upfront military aid to the Contras the opportunity to support that upfront military aid. It provides to Mr. MRAZEK the opportunity to introduce a buffer zone to keep Americans free from harm in training the Contras. It further provides, through Mr. BARNES' amendment, strict accountability of any funds for the Contras. I think the rule is not particularly complicated, but I do think it is fair.

I support the McCurdy amendment notwithstanding the comments of my friend from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN]. I believe it would strengthen the fledgling democracies in Central America within the framework of the Kissinger report. I think it enhances the likelihood of a peaceful settlement in that region. It requires certain Contra reforms which are badly needed with regard to human rights, with regard to subordinating the Contras' military leadership to the Contras' political leadership, to provide strict accountability of the money we are sending to those forces, and to ensure that they share the same democratic ideals on which we as a nation stand.

Finally, I believe the McCurdy alternative holds out the prospect of military aid as a last resort, but a very real option in the absence of progress at the bargaining table. The threat of military aid in October is an important element in this carefully crafted package of carrots and sticks. The McCurdy alternative is designed to better ensure that the people of Central America, not the Soviets, not the Cubans, not this country, but the people of Central America have the opportunity to choose their own destiny and not the destiny that will be thrust upon them by outsiders, or by forces of totalitarianism within these countries, whether they be from the political left or from the right.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the rule and support for the McCurdy amendment.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 279, nays 148, not voting 6, as follows:

□ 1225

Messrs. GRAY of Pennsylvania, PANETTA, ANNUNZIO, DONNELLY, LEHMAN of Florida, and GRAY of Illinois changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Messrs. WHITTEN, STRATTON, and PASHAYAN changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 481 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 5052.

□ 1228

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5052) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes, with Mr. HUGHES in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER].

(Mr. HEFNER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the committee is recommending appropriations totaling $8,104,101,000 for fiscal year 1987 military construction and family housing. This is a reduction of $2,033,099,000 below the President's request, and is a slight increase over the fiscal year 1986 level as adjusted.

The committee conducted a thorough and comprehensive review of this year's request, holding 12 different hearings on separate functional areas. The level recommended is similar to the amount provided last year, yet it provides for the highest priority military requirements and will substantially improve both readiness and quality of life in the military. Functional areas where special emphasis occurred during our review of the fiscal year 1987 request were the degree of U.S. commitment overseas, the European and NATO construction program, the Persian Gulf and Pacific programs, the Caribbean Basin, stimulating U.S. business overseas, financial management and family housing.

DEGREE OF U.S. COMMITMENT OVERSEAS

In recent years as our European allies have recovered their strength, their willingness to dissociate themselves with the United States has grown. Today as a result of recent opposition on the part of some of our European allies to United States actions against Third World countries, our ability to use United States forces deployed in those countries is in question. The result is that a substantial portion of United States military forces are stationed where host governments may only permit their use against the least likely threat—a Soviet invasion of Western Europe. The committee has therefore deferred several new initiatives in Europe and cut all projects at low priority installations there. We have also called for a realignment study that will explore whether current U.S. deployment levels fits strategic as well as political realities.

EUROPEAN AND NATO CONSTRUCTION

As a result of the overseas base closure initiative last year the committee has concluded that various factors have made it difficult for the United States Command to reduce or consolidate existing installations in Europe. Opposition to the Army's construction program is particularly strong in Germany, where planned projects have been delayed and canceled due to political influence.

The committee, however, is extremely pleased with the expanded size of the NATO infrastructure program and has approved all funds requested. It is hoped that will result in expanded eligibility criteria and thereby reduce the United States unilaterally funded construction.

PERSIAN GULF—PACIFIC PROGRAM

A total of $1.1 billion has been provided by the United States in the last 6 years for the construction of a facility network in the Persian Gulf. This year no funds have been provided as the committee views this program as essentially complete.

The committee, in recognition of the critical importance of United States military facilities in the Philippines, has approved $40 million of $72 million requested subject to authorization. Any relocation to other areas in the region would degrade U.S. capabilities severely and cost in the tens of billions of dollars. The committee has made some reductions in Japan and Korea and has directed that the United States seek host nation funding. The Department is also to report on their intentions regarding accompanied tours in Korea.

CARIBBEAN BASIN

Since mid-1983 the United States has conducted a series of major and minor military exercises in Honduras of unprecedented size and duration. Since that time in addition to the $21 million approved for airfield upgrades in Honduras, a total of $6.5 million has been spent in O&M funds for temporary construction in support of a continuous United States presence. Because some of these funds have been spent improperly, and because the continuous U.S. presence in temporary facilities has caused numerous health and safety problems, the committee has established an exercise related construction fund. This fund will not be used for what should be military construction projects. The committee will support construction projects that are necessary to properly house and feed our personnel, as long as their mission and length of presence is clarified.

STIMULATING U.S. BUSINESS OVERSEAS

The committee has continued several policies aimed at enhancing U.S. business opportunity overseas. The complete American preference program in the Persian Gulf has been maintained, the partial preference in the American territories of the Pacific has been maintained, and the threshold for partial preference on architect and engineer contracts has been lowered to $500,000.

The committee has also extended the packaging of contracts at several locations overseas, and has called again for reforms in NATO contracting procedures.

FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT

The committee continued several policies established last year relating to the financial management of the military construction program, which included limitations on cross and split year funding authority, clarifying the use of expired funds and establishing new reprogramming thresholds. The committee opposed the requests by the Department to raise the minor construction limitation from $1 million to $2 million and to obtain expanded authority on the renovation of facilities. A foreign currency fluctuation fund has been established at the request of the Department to enable transfers to offset fluctuations in foreign currency rates.

ARMY LIGHT DIVISIONS

The committee has approved $175 million in fiscal year funds and $435 million in advance appropriations for the staging of the new light infantry division at Fort Drum, NY. All funds for the staging of the light division at Fort Wainwright, AK, were denied.

NAVY STRATEGIC HOMEPORTING

The committee has included $140 million of the Navy's strategic homeporting initiative at Staten Island, NY, and Everett, WA. The funds for Everett, WA, have been included subject to authorization.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, ARMY

The committee has approved $1,200,070,000 for this account, which is a reduction of $495,137,000 below the President's request. Major reductions included $434 million for projects failing authorization, $30 million in low priority projects and a $10 million general reduction to projects in Germany.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, NAVY

The committee has approved $1,364,090,000 for this account, which is a reduction of $450,010,000 below the President's request. Major reductions include $330 million in projects failing authorization and $100 million in low priority projects.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, AIR FORCE

The committee has approved $1,228,630,000 for Air Force military construction, which is $544,570,000 below the budget estimate. Major reductions include $415 million in projects failing authorization, $55 million in low priority projects, and $50 million from low priority installations overseas.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, DEFENSE AGENCIES

The committee has approved $541,563,000 for military construction for the Defense agencies, which is a reduction of $220,537,000 below the President's request. Major reductions included $196 million from projects failing authorization, and $20 million from low priority projects.

NATO INFRASTRUCTURE

The committee has approved the full request of $247,000,000 for this account.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, RESERVE COMPONENTS

The committee has approved $435,541,000 for the Reserve components. This is a reduction of $15,659,000 from the President's request.

FAMILY HOUSING, ARMY

The committee has approved $1,573,991,000 for Army family housing, which is $166,655,000 below the budget estimate. Major reductions include $52 million in projects failing authorization, $30 million from the leasing account and $18 million from the maintenance account.

FAMILY HOUSING, NAVY

The committee has approved $71,494,000 for Navy family housing, which is a reduction of $80,419,000 from the President's request. Major reductions include $32 million in projects failing authorization, $6 million from operations and $8 million from the maintenance account.

FAMILY HOUSING, AIR FORCE

The committee has provided $807,420,000 for Air Force family housing, which is a reduction of $52,753,000 below the President's request. Major reductions include $12 million in projects failing authorization, $8 million in the maintenance account and $10 million from the leasing account.

FAMILY HOUSING, DEFENSE AGENCIES

The committee has provided $16,470,000 for Defense agencies family housing, which is a reduction of $1,130,000 below the President's request.

HOMEOWNER'S ASSISTANCE

The committee has provided none of the $6 million requested for this account.

□ 1235

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, first of all let me say that I want to thank the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER] who has outlined the basic provisions of the bill. I have worked with him for some time on this subcommittee. He is an ideal chairman to work with, is well-respected by the members of the committee, and I want to start out by giving him my compliments.

I am very pleased to join with Chairman HEFNER in presenting this bill for your consideration. I want to emphasize that we have worked together in a truly bipartisan manner to scrutinze the administration's budget request for military construction.

As the gentleman from North Carolina has stated, "We have reduced the administration's budget request by more than $2 billion, which represents a 20-percent cut, giving us a bill of $8.1 billion." The Subcommittee on Military Installations and Facilities of the Armed Services Committee reduced the administration's budget request by $1.6 billion, so they did a good bit of our work for us.

To achieve the reductions, I joined with the chairman in recommending that we follow certain guidelines. We have:

Deleted or deferred numerous projects that were not authorized;

Eliminiated overseas projects that are considered no longer necessary or at installations of marginal benefit;

Reduced in scope and price high cost facilities and packaging of construction contracts;

Eliminated projects that can or should be funded through NATO or host nation support;

Eliminated projects of low operational utility;

Reduced high cost family housing projects, and limited family housing operations and maintenance accounts to provide slight increases over last year's bill.

We also included several projects that were in the budget request but which were deferred by the authorizing committee.

For the Philippines, we have recommended $40 million of the $73 million budget request, subject to authorization. The authorizing committee deferred funding pending stabilization of the political situation and decisions on our continued use of Clarke AFB and Subic Bay. We thought that deferral or denial of funds would send the wrong signal at the very time we want to demonstrate our commitment to the Aquino government.

For the Navy's Strategic Homeporting Program, we provide a total of $140 million for Staten Island, NY, $54.4 million, and Everett, WA, $85.4 million. Everett is recommended subject to authorization. Altogether, we have reduced the budget request for strategic homeporting by $48 million.

For the Army's Light Infantry Division at Fort Drum, NY, we have recommended $175 million in fiscal year 1987 appropriations, which is $57 million less than the budget request and $5 million below the amount proposed for authorization. We are also recommending advance appropriations of $221 million for fiscal year 1988 and $214 million for fiscal year 1989. The Army has testified that by engaging in one large construction contract for the entire base, it will save more than $100 million through advance funding.

For the NATO Infrastructure Program, we are recommending funding for the entire budget request of $247 million. The subcommittee also has deferred funding of several new initiatives in Europe. For example, the subcommittee denied funding of $67 million requested for the relocation of the Navy's support activity facilities in Naples, Italy. Instead, we have directed the Navy to conduct a feasibility study on upgrading the existing facilities for seismic conditions and possible expansion.

In order to improve the quality of living and working conditions for those in the military, we have made a special effort to include adequate funding for family and unaccompanied personnel housing, for child care centers, and for hospitals and clinics. The backlog in housing and working facilities is enormous. But with the funds we are recommending, we will be taking a significant step forward in remedying these deficiencies.

The bill includes about $80 million for continued construction in support of the B-1 and MX. But there are no funds in the bill for ASAT or SDI since these projects were not authorized.

Also, we propose to continue the financial management policy changes which we directed the Department of Defense to implement in last year's bill. These reforms have resulted in better management of military construction funds and therefore we are proposing that these reforms be continued. We have also expressed dissatisfaction to any increase in the limitation on unspecified minor construction projects and to a request for broadened authority to use O&M funds for the renovation of facilities.

And finally, I would just reemphasize what the chairman has said about reporting a bill considerably below our tentative section 302(b) allocation in order to allow flexibility when we go to conference with the Senate. Therefore, I will join the chairman in opposing any amendments that may be offered today to add projects that have not been authorized.

This is a fair bill that balances our Nation's military requirements with the budget constraints we face today. I urge you to support this bipartisan measure that we bring to you for your consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ORTIZ].

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this legislation, H.R. 5052, military construction appropriations for 1987.

I rise in strong support of this project to provide for the strategic homeporting of our 600 ship Navy, in this bill, H.R. 5052, military construction appropriations for fiscal year 1987.

I compliment the chairman, Mr. HEFNER, on his leadership ability in bringing this bill to the floor today in such a manner that the budget authority will provide for the highest priority of facilities to enhance or Nation's defense and deterrent capabilities, improve the quality of life, as well as to contribute to decreasing the deficit level to $144 billion during fiscal year 1987.

Throughout the hearings that have been conducted, emphasis has been placed on both the concept and the total cost of strategic home porting. The Navy has been involved, over the years, in building its fleet to support both the national military and maritime strategy. At the same time, it has reviewed its ship home porting posture in order to maximize the strategic effectiveness of our maritime forces in accomplishing this maritime strategy. Many of you may have read the comments of Rear Adm. Robert D. Yanow, Canada's senior military officer on the west coast, contained in the Navy Times of June 16, 1986. In this article, titled "Canada Would Welcome West Coast U.S. Battle Group," the importance of the strategic basing concept, as a positive impact on Canadian defense forces, was commented on. Significant support was expressed for location of the carrier battle group in the Northwest, since Vancouver outstrips all west coast ports—including U.S. ports—in total cargo tonnage. We realize the significance of protecting our oil supplies from Alaska as well as having a ready maritime force to act as a deterrent in this area of the Pacific.

Dispersal of the fleet to the gulf coast area provides a ready deterrent and more immediate support for ensuring access to this area, Central and South America. Approximately 55 percent of all crude oil imports and 45 percent of foreign trade enter the gulf ports. Additionally, approximately 60 percent of NATO resupply during the first 60 days of mobilization, in the event of war, comes from these same gulf coast ports. It is for these reasons that I strongly support the strategic homeport concept and its funding.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, let me make a few remarks about title II of this bill.

First I would like to commend my colleague from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] for crafting an amendment that we will take up under title II dealing with aid to the Contras.

There may be a few Members in this body who still have not made up their minds as to how they might vote on this important issue, and they might be asking themselves what exactly has changed since the last time the House had this issue before it.

I think that the one circumstance that I would like to point out that has changed has been an increase in the Soviet Union's involvement in aiding the Sandinista government in Nicaragua. In May it was determined, and it has been announced, that the Soviet Union's spy planes and reconnaissance vehicles, the AN-30, have been used on at least four occasions to gather intelligence information about where the location of the Contras might be.

□ 1245

I think that this shows a new degree of escalation and increased involvement by the Soviets. In this hemisphere for the first time they are utilizing overflights from Nicaragua. I think this is a precedent that should not go unnoticed by Members of this body as we prepare to vote on this very important issue.

It is an issue and therefore a circumstance that has changed and I think it should be considered by Members who might have voted against aid before to reconsider their position based upon this new information about the Soviet involvement and their increased involvement in aiding the Sandinista government, the same Sandinista government that has, of course, cut off the rights and privileges that they had promised their people under the revolution that occurred and which they have personally betrayed.

So I commend my colleagues, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] for coming together with this amendment, a bipartisan amendment to recognize this change in circumstances and to deal with this very important and serious issue.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5½ minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman very much for yielding this time to me.

I think the question that we have to ask is if the Contras overthrow the Sandinistas, what kind of people would we have running Nicaragua?

Who do the Contras look to for help? Who do they look to for advice? Unfortunately for this administration, the answer is not a good one. I want to cite an incredible story that unfolded in the San Francisco Examiner Monday of this week and I want us to study this one example, which was painfully documented in a story. It is about a gentleman named Norwin Meneses-Canterero.

1. He admits he dealt drugs for 6 months. He is described in a DEA report in 1984 as "the apparent head of a criminal organization responsible for smuggling kilograms of cocaine to the United States." Court records show he ran an internal drug operation for at least 10 years.

2. The multimillion dollar cocaine ring run by Meneses employed 3 FDN members (Nicaraguan Democratic Force) or Contras that this administration wants us to give $100 million to. One of the men was convicted of cocaine charges last year.

3. Former FDN members reported that Meneses financed at least 4 Contra functions.

4. Meneses admitted FDN members met in his Bay Area home and his wife's T'shirt factory in Los Angeles. Adolfo Calero—head of FDN said he met Meneses several times in San Francisco. Meneses said he never met Calero, but Calero said Meneses was a "sympathizer."

5. Edgar Chamorro—a former FDN director recalls Meneses organized 2 FDN meetings in California. "He was one of the main contacts."

6. According to FDN veterans in Miami and California, Meneses sent supplies to the FDN in Honduras, including video equipment and at least one truck. Meneses reportedly paid for the truck to be driven to Honduras.

7. During the Somoza years Meneses was identified by DEA as a "cocaine source of supply" in Managua. His brother was head of Managua police under Somoza.

8. When the Sandinistas took over in 1979, Norwin Meneses moved to the Bay Area where he opened a restaurant and bar and drove a Jaguar.

According to the Drug Enforcement Administration affidavit files in Federal court he continued to smuggle cocaine. That same affidavit links Meneses to drug trafficking in the San Francisco Bay Area, Los Angeles, New Orleans, Flordia, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, Colombia, and Peru. Those drugs wind up inside our children.

This administration deplores that. It has become the First Lady's crusade and she has been doing a fantastic job with it, and yet we would undermine that by giving dollars to these drug pushers.

9. According to 1983 testimony of one of Meneses associates Pereira-Lanuzo (a former Nicaraguan businessman) supplied a Nicaraguan dealer with cocaine and said the proceeds "belonged to the Contras revolution."

10. In 1982 and 1983, Meneses distributed cocaine through another FDN member in San Francisco and one in Los Angeles.

11. Chamorro and Frank Arana flew to San Francisco to select local FDN leaders. At a selection meeting on 11th Street in San Francisco, Meneses stood quietly at the back of the room.

12. At a similar meetings the next day in Los Angeles, Meneses threw a party afterward. According to Chamorro, Meneses recommended names for FDN positions and tried to recruit former Somoza military members in California to join FDN forces in Honduras.

What an outrage it is to give taxpayer dollars to an organization that gets its support from drug dealers—organized drug dealers who are getting our children hooked on cocaine. Members of the Contras are drug dealers and pushers. And these Contras look for support to men like Norwin Meneses.

Let me refer, Mr. Chairman, to something new in this debate. Somebody asked on the other side, "What is new in this debate?" The Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control has given me information, that is from our very own committee, that links drug dealing to the Contras. They have told me:

A number of individuals who supported the Contras and participated in Contra activity in Texas, Louisiana, California and Florida, as well as in Honduras, Nicaragua and Costa Rica, have suggested that cocaine is being smuggled into the United States through the same infrastructure which is procuring, storing, and transporting weapons, explosives, ammunition, and military equipment for the Contras of the United States.

Now, let me say this. What that means is that we are supporting an infrastructure that is not only trying to overthrow the Sandinistas, but it is the same infrastructure that is getting cocaine to the children of America.

We have names which I cannot share, but can be shared with Members of the Congress if you want those names.

The gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] this morning made a statement that says it all. He said, "Don't weep for Lenny Bias and then turn around and give taxpayer dollars to cocaine pushers."

Sure the Sandinistas aren't my cup of tea but we are not giving them dollars. We're giving dollars to the Contras.

This policy is a travesty. It's a pity. It's an embarrassment.

I say that we wait until we get an accounting and not lend support to any organization that gets its support from drug smugglers and pushers.

While we condemn the Government of Panama, as well we should, for drug involvement, let us not create another monster.

And who is out there dying in the Contra war? Not these drug pushers who plan to run the country after the Contras overthrow the Sandinistas with our help—they are driving around in Jaguars and wearing designer suits.

It's the young—the 14-, 15-, and 16-year-old so-called Contras who are being used as cannon fodder.

What a policy we have going, Mr. President, supporting drug pushers and using children as gun fodder.

America must do better than that. America is better than that.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Washington, [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, today we stand at the crossroads of our policy for Central America. Indeed, it is the region itself that is at a crossroads. One path leads to democracy and liberty for all the people of Central America and the other leads to oppression, both from the right and the left. we have never stood so close to this place before.

For the first time in decades, a revolutionary shift is taking place in the politics of the region. Four of our five Central American neighbors, more than any time before, are led by civilians, democratically by their people. Furthermore, these are men of the highest caliber. Social reformers like Jose Napoleon Duarte, who were beaten and jailed for their views; young businessmen with new and exciting economic ideas like Vinicio Cerezo in Guatemala and Oscar Arias of Costa Rica; highly educated statesmen like Jose Azcona of Honduras. These men now reside in the seats of power. While there is much promise, we must also be realistic. These new democracies are threatened by a huge army in Nicaragua, the largest ever assembled in the region, and they also face tremendous conflicts domestically. Democracy is in a vulnerable infancy in Central America.

These new governments need to be nurtured, supported, and encouraged. The traditional leaders of Central America—the military and the oligarchy, have grudgingly let go of their dominant roles, yet they still stand in the wings, ready to take the stage once again. Democracy is an experiment in Central America—an experiment that many of those no longer in power would like to see fail. But we have an opportunity to show them, to show all the people of the world what we know from our own experience—that democracy works.

Rightwing oppression does not work in Central America, and communism doesn't work either. Of course, that is not news to most of us—we have known that for nearly 70 years, but it has been proved once again in Nicaragua. Some of my colleagues are not comfortable calling the Sandinista government Communist, and this baffles me. The Sandinistas seem perfectly comfortable with it. Just look at their speeches, their laws, their press censorship, their communes, and the uniforms of their military advisers. When I traveled with 12 of my colleagues to Managua earlier this month, Daniel Ortega rambled about military dictatorship in the region, yet he was the only leader we met who wore a military uniform.

It is true that the Nicaraguan revolution of 1979 was not a Communist one, but neither was the Russian Revolution of 1917. As in Russia, within a few months of the legitimate revolution, a second one took place. The centrists were forced out and radicals took over. Indeed, of the three leaders of the democratic resistance forces fighting the Sandinista regime, two were members of the first revolutionary government and one was a businessman who led a crucial strike against Somoza and was a political prisoner. Today, there are more than 3,000 Cuban military and security personel, 350 Soviet tanks and dozens of sophisticated helicopters. The Sandinista army numbers 75,000, the largest ever assembled in the region, while Soviet pilots fly intelligence missions and Cubans fly combat missions. Internally, the press is censored more than ever and the church that helped bring the Sandinistas to power is persecuted once again. And tragically, the people still live in abject poverty.

This is the problem, but there is a solution, one that addresses the problems of the region, not just one country—a solution that does not shy away from the military leverage needed to win a diplomatic victory. This solution is the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Missouri, Oklahoma, Georgia, and myself. Our amendment addresses every major point that our bipartisan group has been concerned about.

Our amendment has the strictest accountability provisions of any regional aid package offered in this Congress. Military aid is delayed until September 1 to give the Contadora peace process more time. This is not a date that we selected randomly, but one offered by the democratic leaders of the region as the last chance for Contadora to reach a successful conclusion. Our amendment demands strict human rights observance by the Contras, absolutely no involvement in drug trade and immediate cessation of aid to the rebels in the event of a negotiated settlement. The region is also aided with $300-million in economic assistance.

Furthermore, Congress can vote to cut off the aid at anytime under expedited procedures if it chooses to do so. Some of my colleagues say we need more delay and more votes. This would send a clear message that the United States has a weak and uncertain policy for Central America: That Contadora should be a process of manipulation and delay and not one of compromise and resolution. The region needs action now, not in October. By October, it could be too late, and not just for the Contras. It may be too late for Duarte or Cerezo or Azcona.

We need to make a commitment now. The people of Central America in El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Costa Rica, and Nicaragua yearn for and deserve democracy and freedom. They have the will to succeed, but not the tools. Like it or not, their future is in our hands.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5½ minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Military Appropriations Subcommittee, I want to compliment our distinguished chariman, the gentleman from North Carolina, and the distinguished ranking minority member, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] and our excellent staff for the outstanding job that they have done in preparing this important legislation.

Today I am rising to discuss one part of this bill and that is the question of strategic home porting.

I want to support this program and tell you why. It is based on military arguments.

First of all, as we all know, Secretary Lehman laid out a very ambitious program to increase the size of the fleet from about 450 ships up to 600 ships.

It is appropriate at this point to think through what it is we are going to do about basing those ships, because they have to go somewhere. Either they are going to be dispersed, as the Secretary of the Navy and the Chief of Naval Operations and the last five CNO's have strongly recommended, or we are going to add them to existing bases, where there would be increased concentration and I think would not be in our military interest.

Let me just read a quotation from Admiral Zumwalt, who is known as one of the most progressive military leaders of our time. When asked about this question of strategic home porting, he said:

> There is no question that what spreading the fleet over a larger number of home ports will reduce ship vulnerability, enhance battle group integrity, avoid overcrowding, exploit and enhance our industrial base, improve Active and Reserve recruiting, and in some cases move our ships closer to operating areas.

□ 1300

I come from the State of Washington, and the Puget Sound area is a day and a half closer to the North Pacific than is southern California. We also have the very important Trident submarine base, which today basically goes undefended.

A carrier battle group at Everett, WA, would give us the ability to move into the North Pacific to protect vital communications and sea links, especially between Alaska and the United States, and Alaska is one of those States from which we get extraordinary amounts of oil by sea to the west coast of the United States.

Also, the entire Soviet Pacific Fleet is larger than the entire U.S Navy, so there is a necessity for having an appropriate military presence in the Pacific Northwest.

The big question on this whole issue has been cost. Let me tell my colleagues that Secretary of the Navy Lehman said that he is prepared to live with a ceiling on this program of $799 million. Not $2 billion. Not $1½ billion. But $799 million. What you have to look at is the difference in the cost of dispersing the fleet and adding these ships to existing home ports. Because that is not free, if we put these ships in existing home ports, we have to dredge, we have to build additional docks and facilities, we have to have housing at those existing home ports. So the Delta, the difference between the two programs, is approximately $200 million spread over 5 years in the military construction bill.

Let me just argue for a moment that if we save just one frigate by dispersing the fleet, if we save just one ship because we have made the fleet less vulnerable, then we have paid for the entire cost of this program. In addition, we have done something wise for the families and for the young men who are manning these ships. We have increased their chances of surviving against a Soviet cruise missile attack, terrorist attack et cetera.

In my judgment, this program makes sense. I agree that in its first discussions there was too much politics mentioned and not enough mentioned about the military implications of this program. But as I have studied it over the last several years, I have become more and more convinced that this program has a strong underpinning in military rationale.

So today, if there is an amendment offered on this, I want to point out that both the House Committee on Armed Services and the Senate Committee on Armed Services have voted in favor of the concept of dispersing the fleet in favor of the concept of strategic home porting. This is one of the highest priorities of the Secretary of the Navy and of the Reagan administration.

So I hope we will not today make a very serious mistake in military judgment by not going forward with this very cost effective way of securing our ships, ships which, I might say, we have spent over $50 billion in constructing.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. RUDD].

Mr. RUDD. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee, I have worked along with this great committee in order to produce a good bill, a bill that is 20 percent below what the administration asked for. It is a credit to the members of the committee, it is a credit to the staff, and it certainly is a credit to the good leadership of the chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina, and my friend, the ranking member, the gentleman from Oklahoma.

It is a credit to the Department of Defense to work with the committee to find new ways, new methods of doing things so that we can bring costs down, keep the quality of our projects at their present level, and perhaps have more projects.

With regard to title II, Mr. Chairman, for 2 years the House of Representatives refused to send any military aid to the freedom fighters in Nicaragua. Much of the reason for this has been the effectiveness of a disinformation campaign paid for and organized by the Sandinista government.

Last year a flood of charges were made in Congress and the media based on several extensively documented studies on how the Nicaraguan resistance allegedly committed systematic atrocities against civilians. Those reports have since been proven false and were intended to disinform Congress and the public about the nature of the Nicaraguan resistance.

The three reports issued in 1985 and 1986 were the Brody report, the Fox-Glennon report, and the Dutcher report, all commissioned by the Washington office on Latin America, or WOLA. Analysis of these reports revealed that each was created with the active financial and physical assistance of the Soviet Government in Managua, compiled by American citizens strongly sympathetic to that regime, and promoted in Washington by a public relations firm which in the past served as a registered agent for the Sandinistas. WOLA itself has consistently maintained a bias in favor of the Marxist-Leninist governments.

All three of these reports were released shortly before the votes in Congress which would have sent military aid to the Nicaraguan freedom fighters. All three received positive coverage in the mass media at the time of their release, and all three were endorsed and promoted on the Hill in the legislative battle against aid to the resistance. This cycle of disinformation has been repeated today in the Washington Post. One article opposing aid is based on a news conference sponsored by WOLA. Another article claims that the Contras have placed mines to kill civilians. It bases its credibility on "a knowledgeable source," if one can believe that.

How willingly we seem to fall for this disinformation. The net result of our failure to comprehend this disinformation has been the paralysis of our decisionmaking process with regard to the freedom fighters. The Sandinistas realize that the key to their survival is our continued paralysis and their Interior Minister, Tomas Borge, has admitted this in saying that the battle for Nicaragua is not being waged in Nicaragua; it is being fought in the United States.

My colleagues, we must see through the Sandinista subterfuge and disinformation now, at this critical vote and juncture in Congress today. Let us vote for the Edwards-Skelton amendment and do the right thing with regard to our relations with Nicaragua and allow democracy a decent chance.

We all know that immediate military aid is the only way to prompt concessions from the Sandinistas to give democracy a chance in that poor country.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I would inquire as to the time remaining on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER] has 10 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] has 16 minutes remaining.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUCKABY].

Mr. HUCKABY. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, as we approach this vote this afternoon, this major foreign policy vote, I would like to share with my colleagues, especially with those very few undecided, three reasons why I am supporting the Edwards-Skelton amendment.

First of all, I think we need to give the new democracies in Central America an opportunity, a chance to survive, to grow, and in time to flourish. I think if we allow the existing government in Nicaragua to totally maintain its control over that nation that it is only a matter of years until their subversion will truly be thoughout Central America.

Second, I am concerned about the people in Nicaragua. Think about it. Think about a single Communist system in the history of the world since the Russian revolution of 1917 that has worked. There are none. Think of a single Communist system with the basic freedoms that we take for granted, to assemble, religion, to debate, to have opposing ideas. It does not exist in those countries. Think of the economic pie, the economic opportunities. Every Communist country's economy is in a shambles today. The system just does not work.

I recently visited with a lady who was here from Cuba, an elderly lady.

She told me of how she had to carry water each morning up four flights of stairs to her apartment. The running water had quit working years ago. How she had been on a waiting list for 5 years to be able to buy a refrigerator. Her block captain made the determination as to who purchased what capital goods as such.

Is this the type of system the people of Nicaragua want? I suggest no.

Finally, I think a vote for Edwards-Skelton is a vote for our children.

□ 1310

If I might quote from Will Durant, one whom I consider to be America's greatest historian, his last work which he wrote so many, many years ago now, stated:

> Young nations, longing for an Industrial Revolution to give them economic wealth and military power, are impressed by the rapid industrialization of Russia under governmental management; Western capitalism might be more productive in the end, but it seems slower in development; the new governors, eager to control the resources and manhood of their states, are a likely prey to Communist propaganda, infiltration, and subversion.
> Should the leaders of America consider only the reluctance of this epicurean generation to face so great an issue, or should they consider also what future generations of Americans would wish that these leaders had done?

Should we consider what our children would wish that we would do today?

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman. I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL].

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Subcommittee on Military Installations and Construction of the Committee on Armed Services, I arise to tell the House that in the very first section of the bill, I will be offering an amendment to strike the funds for home porting that has already been alluded to in this hour of debate.

This is a cost issue. This is not a partisan issue in any way. You can see that from the votes that have been taken in the other body, and also in the House Committee on Armed Services, the authorization committee.

If you are concerned about the defense budget, if you are concerned about waste in the defense budget, if you are concerned about the facilities in your own State that you believe are necessary for the military strength of this Nation, then listen hard and listen good.

In this bill, you will see the beginning of at least $1.5 billion to start home porting, to move ships from some ports that exist today to brandnew ports.

It has been said it will only cost $800,000 and they are willing to cap it.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. When I am done. I let the gentleman finish his statement; the gentleman should let me finish my statement.

Mr. DICKS. It is $800 million, not $800,000. I thought the gentleman would want to correct his mistake.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, $800 million is the figure that the Navy uses.

To be exact, the Navy uses the figure of $799 million.

But what it will cost is at least $1.5 billion. We believe the cost could go as high as $2 billion because we know from the Navy itself, they have not included in any way, shape or form the cost of housing for all of the sailors they want to move to these new ports.

But even more severe, we have environmental questions in the State of Washington. What they want to do is dredge up toxic waste in that harbor and they want to take it and dump it in the ocean, an amount of toxic waste that has never been dredged up to that great a degree. They want to dump it in the ocean. Many citizens in Washington State and around this country are concerned about that.

Another question with Everett, WA, is that it is going to take a brandnew road, $50 million. They tell us the legislature will pay for that, yet we have no authorization, no bill, no promise in law that the State of Washington will pay for this road. So if we pass the authorization; if we pass the appropriation this year, they will not have to pay for that road. In fact, the Washington Legislature does not even meet until next year. That is no assurance again for another $50 million there for the road that is necessary in order to reach the new naval base.

The other new port that is in this appropriation is that of New York City at Staten Island. First of all, why would you disperse naval ships to New York City when it is one of the top targets of the Soviet Union?

Second, why would you think it would be cheaper to disperse ships and sailors to a home port in New York when it is the most expensive city in the United States? Clearly it will cost more there for housing than it will in any other part of this country.

I said it is not a partisan issue. In the other body, the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, BARRY GOLDWATER, who has received more awards from the defense community for his work in strengthening the security of this Nation than any other American in the history of this country, came out and called it politics. He said it was bad and a waste of money.

In our committee in the House, in the subcommittee, it did pass after Everett was deferred because of the questions that I raised and that language is in the bill in the authorization. Second, we cut down New York from $91 million for this year to $54.4 million and it still only passed by 10 to 7 in the subcommittee, with the chairman voting against it.

In the full committee yesterday, there was a lengthy debate. The debate lasted in the subcommittee for a day and a half on this question alone of home porting.

In the full committee, the vote was 20 to 27, again the chairman voting "no."

I ask you to listen to the amendment later. It is not home porting; it is home porking. It is a pork barrel and this House should vote against it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Many of my colleagues have made a number of allegations against the Contras today and I submit to them that they ought to read a report that came out by the State Department yesterday which refutes almost every one of those allegations, from the $450,000 that was allegedly paid to a Honduran officer, to the little grocery store that received $3.2 million. Every one of those arguments have been refuted by the State Department and I know that these are errors that my colleagues have made simply because they have not read the report. I wish they would read the report today to get the facts straight so they can tell the American people what the facts really are.

The facts are these: that 12 of the 19 countries south of the Mexican-American border have either Communist guerrillas trained in Nicaragua or weapons that came through Nicaragua or both. There is a cancer down there that is spreading out of Nicaragua that will engulf all of Latin America if we do not take action right away.

The Soviet Union has sent $1 billion in military assistance to Nicaragua. Why did they do that? It certainly was not because they are our friend. They want a military base on the mainland of North America and they are going to get it if we do not do what is right here today.

Mu'ammar Qadhafi sent $400 million to Nicaragua because he said: "We fight with our brothers; we support you because you fight America on their own soil." Our old buddy, Mu'ammar Qadhafi. Why would he send $400 million down there? He wants to see America withdraw her support from the Middle East so the PLO and the Soviets will have their way in that area.

Vietnam has sent weapons down there. The PLO has sent supporters down there. All the Communist fellow travelers are down there.

The Communists have not lived up to one commitment they made to the Organization of American States in 1979. We should push to make them do that, and the only way to do that is to give the freedom fighters the $100 million that they need to keep pressure on the Sandinista government

What happens if we do nothing? Let us listen to what the President of the United States said yesterday in his speech. He said, and I quote, "Nicaragua is becoming a Soviet base every day that we debate and debate and debate and do nothing."

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, 36 years ago today, the North Koreans marched across the 38th parallel and invaded South Korea. President Truman responded with a very quick response and this Nation defended the freedom of the South Koreans.

□ 1320

That was June 25, 1950.

I suspect that if President Truman had come to the well of the House in the spring of 1950 and said, "Members of Congress, we have intelligence reports that the North Koreans are arming north of the border, would you please authorize money so that we can defend the people, our interests and our friends in South Korea?" Probably Congress would have said, "We don't want to do that; we don't want to spend money there."

Today we have a government in Nicaragua that is arming itself with help from its friends around the world, specifically, the Soviet Union and Cuba. Sometimes we have to ask ourselves whether people really intend to do what they say.

Listen to these comments of Minister Thomas Borge of Nicaragua. He says:

> We have Nicaragua, soon we will have El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Costa Rica and Mexico.
> One day, tomorrow or 5 years or 15 years from now, we're going to take 5 to 10 million Mexicans and they're going to have one thing on their mind—cross the border, go into Dallas, go into El Paso, go into Houston, go into New Mexico, go into San Diego, and each one has inbedded in his mind the killing of 10 Americans.

Just maybe he means that. Some people will say, "Well, they don't have the capacity." There was a man named Adolf Hitler in 1923 in Lansdown Prison in Germany who wrote "Mein Kampf." The world did not pay any attention to him, either. World War II resulted from that.

To say, "Well, the Nicaraguans do not have the capacity of Germany," the response is they have friends around the world that will provide them with arms—the Soviet Union and Cuba.

The people, the Contras in Nicaragua, are fighting our battle for freedom. It is in our interest to help them at this time in order to stave off further involvement later on.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the Chair the time remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER] has 6 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. FIEDLER].

Ms. FIELDER. Mr. Chairman, as we enter this very important debate, I cannot help but reflect upon this, not so much as a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of California, but as a citizen whose four grandparents left Eastern Europe, a portion of which is now a part of the Soviet Union, in order to evade the religious repression which existed for them at the beginning of the turn of the century.

I cannot help but think about what happened in Eastern Europe since World War II, which we all went through, and I cannot help but think about how would I feel if I were a citizen of Hungary or Poland or one of the other Eastern European nations, watching the debate going on here in the House of Representatives on whether or not we ought to assist those democrat efforts of the people of Nicaragua, the Contras, to try to restore some form of democracy to that country.

As we look at the history of what has happened throughout the world, Mr. Chairman, the loss of rights on the part of many citizens who now live under the cloak of communism, I cannot help but wonder how they would feel and what kind of decisions they would be making if they had the right to cast their vote today for aid for those democratic efforts that are being made.

I know, and I believe in my heart, that I am one of the lucky ones; and many people in this country are among the lucky ones whose family happen to avoid that kind of lifestyle because they had the courage to leave at a time when it was very dangerous politically and religiously to think and feel the way they did.

The same thing is going on today in Nicaragua. The Jewish community has all but evaporated from the scene because of religious repression; the Miskito Indians are almost nonexistent because of more repression there; the Catholic Church has not had the outcome they would like.

Do not denigrate the lives of people in Central America to this kind of lifestyle. They deserve better.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LOWRY].

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the chairman for yielding, and I congratulate the chairman and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Oklahoma for a job well done on this military construction bill, a bill that addresses the quality of life of our personnel; a bill that includes housing, day care, medical; improvements for our military personnel. Important to personnel morale and for national security.

I would also like to congratulate my friend from the State of Washington that serves on the subcommittee, Mr. DICKS, for the work he does on quality of personnel. That is really important.

When the Hertel amendment comes up today, Mr. Chairman, I will vote for it. One of the home ports is no further than 20 miles from my home, and that is not an easy vote; but it is a vote I am going to cast for the Hertel amendment, because we cannot afford this expenditure in today's austere budget requirements.

We are going to miss the Gramm-Rudman target this fall. Let us stop kidding ourselves about that; the revenues are falling fast. We are going to miss the Gramm-Rudman target.

What are we going to do about that? Are we going to continue to say that we can go ahead with expenditures that do not make it on the high priority list? The simple fact of the matter is, home port is not as important as some other things within the military budget and some other things within the rest of the budget in this country.

We have got to be willing to make the tough cuts where they have to be. At home I have editorials that say, "You've got to balance the budget; you've got to make those cuts. Make sure you pay for the Everett home port." You cannot have it both ways.

If we are going to meet Gramm-Rudman, if we are going to make the priorities for personnel to have a strong military, if we are going to meet all the things we have said we are going to do, we have got to be willing to make the tough votes.

The right vote today will be for the Hertel amendment. Then after that, the right vote will be to support the committee on the rest of the fine work of title I on military construction within this bill.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON], who did not get a chance to finish his statement.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to conclude the statement I started a while ago.

I ended by saying, "What happens if we don't do anything?" I wanted to quote the President of the United States, in the speech that he made yesterday. I think it is very important that this body hear once again what the President had to say:

Nicaragua is becoming a Soviet base every day that we debate and debate and debate—and do nothing.

In the 3 months since I last asked the House to aid the democratic resistance, four military cargo ships have arrived at Nicaraguan ports, this time directly from the Soviet Union. Recently we have learned that Russian pilots are flying a Soviet A.N.-thirty reconnaissance plane for the Sandinistas.

The Sandinistas claim this is just for making civilian maps. Our intelligence services believe this could be the first time Soviet personnel have taken a direct role in support of military operations on the mainland of North America.

Think again how Cuba became a Soviet air and naval base. You will see what Nicaragua will look like if we continue to do nothing. Cuba became a Soviet base gradually over many years. There was no single dramatic event—once the missile crisis passed—that captured the nation's attention. And so it will be with Nicaragua.

The Sandinistas will widen and deepen another port while we debate: is it for commercial vessels or Soviet submarines? The Sandinistas will complete another air strip while we argue: is it for 707's or Backfire Bombers? A Soviet training brigade will come to Nicaragua. Half will leave and half will stay. And we will debate: are they soldiers or engineers?

Eventually, we Americans will have to stop arguing among ourselves. We will have to confront the reality of a Soviet military beachhead inside our defense perimeters—about 500 miles from Mexico. A future President and Congress will then face nothing but bad choices, followed by worse choices.

My friends in the House, for over 200 years the security of the United States has depended on the safety of unthreatened borders, north and south. Do we want to be the first elected leaders in U.S. history to put our borders at risk?

I hope Members will listen to the President of the United States.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER].

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Chairman, in the Washington Post today there is an editorial, and I would like to quote from one part of the editorial.

It states that:

The United States has important work to do in Central America: to ensure that Nicaragua not become a strategic base or a threat to its neighbors, * * *

□ 1330

Now the key word here is "become." Is not Nicaragua a strategic base poised against its neighbors and the United States already? Is that not a base that is currently building up? But we have seen the photographs of the 11,000-foot air strips, we have seen the photographs of the port that is being built on the east coast for deep-water naval vessels away from commerce and industry or population zones.

The fact is, ladies and gentlemen, Nicaragua already is a base now.

Now, what does the Washington Post say we should do to undo this Soviet base in our backyard? It does not say anything. What do my colleagues who vote against Contras aid say we should do to undo the Soviet base abuilding in our backyard? Nothing.

What does the Speaker of the House suggest that we do? Nothing.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time remains on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. LUJAN].

Mr. LUJAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding and for giving me the opportunity to make one observation.

We tend around here to get all mixed up in our priorities. We forget the basic issue. We go on and start analyzing the situation, and we forget that the basic priority, the basic issue here should be to help the Contras to help us get rid of the Sandinistas who will become or who will make Nicaragua a colony for the Soviets.

I was struck by the similarity here. I was looking at a magazine and saw one of these cute little pictures in the magazine of a kitten playing with a ball of yarn, and pretty soon that little kitten gets all mixed up, she gets all wound up in that yarn and cannot move. I think that by overanalyzing this thing we bring all kinds of extraneous issues into play, and we end up getting all snarled up in that twine and we are not able to move. So unless we keep our eye on that basic issue, that we do not want Nicaragua as a Soviet colony, then we are liable to get all bound up and cannot move.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, to conclude debate on our side, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the debate has been excellent, but as the President said yesterday in his very eloquent statement from the Oval Office, as we continue to debate this issue, the Soviet Union continues to strengthen its hold in Central America.

As I have said here over and over and over again, there are two revolutions taking place in Nicaragua. One is that revolution to which the President referred yesterday, the revolution without borders, being strengthened by Mu'ammar Qadhafi, Yasser Arafat, Fidel Castro, and the Soviet Union.

The second revolution is the one that has been going on since 1979. It is that important revolution which overthrew the oppressive dictatorship of Anastasio Somoza. It is the revolution which promised free and fair elections, ending human rights violations, political pluralism and foreign policy that is not aligned; it is critically important that we do everything we can for those people who are reaching out for the same kinds of freedom that we have today and support this amendment being offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time to close the debate.

Mr. Chairman, we have a good bill. I know what our bill does. It helps the quality of life, it does a lot of things for a lot of people. It aids a lot of districts across this great country of ours, and it aids our allies, in Europe and different parts of the world. If I felt that $100 million for aid to the Contras would overthrow the Sandinistas and remove all the influence of the Soviet Union in Cuba, I would vote for $100 million. If I thought $200 million would do it, or if I thought $300 million or $500 million would do it, I would support it. I do not think it will. Now I have heard debate on this House floor earlier today that this is the most important vote we are ever going to cast; it is today or not at all. People got very emotional about it. It is an issue of liberal against conservative. That is not true. In the cafeteria line in my hometown of Concord, NC, a big Republican opponent who never supports me said, "Do not give them a dime because we do not think it is warranted".

I have had people from the different churches, from the Methodist Church, from the Presbyterian Church, and from other churches who have been there on the scene. I do not think they have been totally indoctrinated. Living in the countryside, that they have reported some atrocities. Some of those atrocities that they have reported I believe. I believe that there are certainly atrocities on the part of the Sandinistas, but I certainly believe there should be some scrutiny toward the Contras. For that reason I am not satisfied in my mind that these are a bunch of good old boys who want to get rid of all the Communists. When I see even the hint of some of these moneys going into bank accounts, which is part of my taxpayer money, and I am a taxpayer who incidentally paid more taxes last year personally than General Electric in dollars. But to me it is too simplistic a statement to say that, "if you will give us $100 million, we are on the side of the gods, we are right and we will get rid of the Sandinistas."

Somewhere down the line, we are going to have to talk tough with the Russians and the Cubans. They are the ones sending in the gun ships. They are the ones sending in the supplies. I have not talked with one person, not one person who believes that the Contras can effect a change in the government of the Sandinistas. So for that reason I oppose aid to the Contras. If I thought $100 million or $200 million or half a billion dollars would do the job, I would gladly pay my part as a taxpayer of the United States.

We have got a good bill here. We do a lot of things for a lot of worthy districts across the country, for our fighting people, and for quality of life. I would hope in the final analysis when this bill is voted on, we will not overlook the good done in this bill and get sidetracked on side issues.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, I would like to express my strong opposition to H.R. 5052, the military construction appropriation for fiscal year 1987. The $2 billion reduction in construction funding for 1987 represents a dramatic shift in policy. A policy shift which will lead to a deterioration of morale and readiness within our Armed Forces.

The Packard Commission suggests that long-term, consistent budgets are one way to reduce waste within the military. However, in a rush to meet the Gramm-Rudman budget targets the House has begun to lead our reinvigorated Armed Forces back down "a slippery slope." And, I suggest that within a few years these drastic cuts in the support funding for our soldiers will lead us back to a time that is better left forgotten. A time when the military career was not viewed as an acceptable career opportunity by our young men and women.

For the long-term health of our armed services, this Congress must resist the temptation for quick, indiscriminate fixes. Unfortunately, this appropriations bill suggest some rather dramatic and unhealthy cuts.

Specifically, I am alarmed by the subcommittee's decision to delete all funding for the facilities at Fort Wainwright and Fort Richardson, AK, which will support the recently activated 6th Light Infantry Division.

Mr. Speaker, the previous 172d Brigade was split between Fort Wainwright and Fort Richardson in Alaska. The Department of the Army has reconfigured this force into the 6th Light Infantry Division.

The new 6th Division has an important dual role: First, to provide a strategically placed and well-trained light infantry division that can be deployed quickly—over polar routes—to areas of regional conflict; and second, to protect the valuable mineral assets and strategic military bases in Alaska.

The logic behind the Army's decision to station a light infantry in Alaska is sound. Alaska's massive size and varying terrain provide an excellent training ground for a light infantry. For this same reason, the 6th Light Infantry Division will be able to provide, as its second mission, the effective defense of Alaska. In addition, because of the availability of existing facilities in Alaska, the activation of the 6th Division will be cost effective.

These two missions are not only compatible but necessary. This dual role is increasingly important in light of the continued Soviet encroachment into the pacific arena. This spring, I participated in an enthusiastic ceremony to activate the 6th Light Division in Alaska. I was particularly proud and impressed by the amount of public support displayed by the residents of Fairbanks and Anchorage, AK.

As the closest State to the Soviet Union, the importance of an adequate defense has always been a top priority of Alaskans. Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit for the RECORD an article which outline the vulnerability of Alaska to Soviet infiltration.

Mr. Chairman, I am sensitive to the need for deficit reduction. I also believe that the Department of Defense needs to share in a portion of that burden. However, the House has pulled the rug out from under our military construction programs, particularly the indescriminate reduction of all construction funding for the 6th Light Infantry. In light of the vital role that Alaska will play in the defense of the United States, I urge that the House to reconsider, in conference, its unfortunate decision to delete all construction funding for the 6th Division.

[From the Washington Post, June 16, 1986]

ALASKA VULNERABLE TO SOVIET INFILTRATION

(By Jack Anderson and Dale Van Atta)

The ugly reality of more than 30,000 highly trained Soviet men and women specializing in assassination, sabotage and other deadly mischief—the Spetsnag forces—has not been lost on the Pentagon's counterterrorist experts. They've been quietly preparing U.S. defenses against the Soviet special forces.

No place is more vulnerable to Spetsnaz infiltration than Alaska. The vast area of the thinly populated 49th state—one-sixth of the total U.S. land mass—stretches to within three miles of the Soviet Union in the Bering Strait. Indeed, there are some in the Pentagon who maintain that Spetsnaz forces are training against targets in Alaska.

These suspicions, plus unconfirmed reports of unusal Soviet equipment in the Soviet Far East and possible Russian infiltration of Alaska, prompted Dale Van Atta to visit the area and investigate the threat posed by special forces commandos.

Last summer the Air Force took part in a coordinated exercise in Great Britain, Operation Brave Defender, aimed at a potential Spetsnaz strike. Even more to the point, the largest military exercise—open or secret—against the Soviet threat was staged in Alaska last year.

Operation Brim Frost involved 18,100 Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine and Coast Guard personnel, 285 aircraft and 1,150 vehicles.

The difficulty of defending Alaska against infiltrators is staggering. There are 72 square miles of Alaska for each U.S. soldier based there. Yet it may be, as the late Gen. Billy Mitchell once said, "the most strategic place in the world"—an area vital to U.S. security in the age of high-speed aircraft and intercontinental ballistic missiles.

Operation Brim Frost was in part "designed to meet the threat of sabotage operations against critical facilities by unconventional warfare forces," according to a briefing on the war game. In southern Alaska, "enemy" forces attacked the Beluga Power Station, which supplies electricity for much of the Anchorage bowl, where two-third of Alaskans live.

In central Alaska, Army Special Forces posing as Spetsnaz attacked the Trans-Alaska pipeline, which supplies oil to the "Lower 48."

While the security Van Atta inspected at the pipeline's source in Prudhoe Bay was impressive, oil officials acknowledged that it is impossible to defend the entire 799-mile length of the pipeline as it goes south. About 420 miles of pipeline are above ground: 4 feet in diameter but only an inch thick, easily vulnerable to even a rifle bullet.

Other tempting targets are the radar stations that provide the crucial early warning of missiles headed toward the Lower 48.

For example, Van Atta walked within a few feet of the "vitals" of an early warning station six miles east of the northernmost U.S. community, the Eskimo village of Barrow. He was not viewed with suspicion.

Pentagon and Alaskan officials admit there have been reports of suspicious activities by unidentified Caucasians along the state's western coast north of Nome and on St. Lawrence Island. This is the area closest to Siberia, and the intruders could have been Soviet Spetsnaz infiltrators.

Mr. BOULTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the fiscal year 1987 military construction appropriations bill. I am particularly pleased that the Appropriations Committee has included $12 million in funding to construct a medical training facility at Sheppard Air Force Base in Wichita Falls, TX.

Although the full $14.2 million for this project was not approved by the committee, I am encouraged that the committee has chosen to fund this very worthy project. As many of you may know, Sheppard Air Force Base trains all medical personnel for the Air Force, including physicians, dentists, nurses, and technicians. The facilities currently in use at Sheppard are woefully inadequate to train our military medical personnel and are presently located inside an old Titan missile assembly building and two adjacent buildings. Much of the laboratory and training facilities are outdated and technically obsolete. I believe we would all agree that the medical personnel of our armed services deserve nothing but the very best training facilities. For this reason, I encourage my colleagues to join me in support of this measure.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the bill. I do so with great reluctance because of the importance of this bill to my district. Since coming to Congress, I have consistently supported the military construction program. Just this March, I testified before the Appropriations Subcommittee on Military Construction in favor of the Military Construction Appropriations Act.

During the consideration of this bill in the Rules Committee, I offered an amendment to the rule to protect the Military Construction Appropriations Act from being tied up in a complicated legislative process that would confuse military construction with the unrelated Contra aid issue.

When that amendment was defeated, I opposed the rule in committee. I carried my effort to the floor to protect the Military Construction Appropriations Act, and I actively opposed adopting the rule.

Because the rule was approved, we are now considering a bill which is not the Military Construction Appropriations Act. It is some weird hybrid that approves money for military construction projects and gives aid to the Contras. I oppose aid to the Contras on moral grounds, and therefore, I must vote against this bill.

I do so, noting that if the bill is defeated, the House leadership is committed to bringing the Military Construction Appropriations Act to the floor—without unrelated Contra aid provisions.

I urge my House colleagues to defeat this bill to defeat aid to the Contras. And, in doing so, to allow a clean vote on the Military Construction Appropriations Act.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, all time has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5052

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, for military construction functions administered by the Department of Defense, and for other purposes, namely:

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, ARMY

For acquisition, construction, installation, and equipment of temporary or permanent public works, military installations, facilities, and real property for the Army as currently authorized by law, and for construction and operation of facilities in support of the functions of the Commander-in-Chief, $1,200,070,000, to remain available until September 30, 1991: Provided, That of this amount, not to exceed $131,640,000 shall be available for study, planning, design, architect and engineer services, as authorized by law, unless the Secretary of Defense determines that additional obligations are necessary for such purposes and notifies the Committees on Appropriations of both Houses of Congress of his determination and the reasons therefor. In addition, for construction at Fort Drum, New York, there is appropriated in advance to be available for obligation in fiscal year 1988, $221,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1992, and to be available for obligation in fiscal year 1989, $214,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1993.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, NAVY

For acquisition, construction, installation, and equipment of temporary or permanent public works, naval installations, facilities, and real property for the Navy as currently authorized by law, including personnel in the Naval Facilities Engineering Command and other personal services necessary for the purposes of this appropriation, $1,364,090,000, to remain available until September 30, 1991: Provided, That of this amount, not to exceed $143,770,000 shall be available for study, planning, design, architect and engineer services, as authorized by law, unless the Secretary of Defense determines that additional obligations are necessary for such purposes and notifies the Committees on Appropriations of both Houses of Congress of his determination and the reasons therefor.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, AIR FORCE

For acquisition, construction, installation, and equipment of temporary or permanent public works, military installations, facilities, and real property for the Air Force as currently authorized by law, $1,228,630,000, to remain available until September 30, 1991: Provided, That of this amount, not to exceed $127,260,000 shall be available for study, planning, design, architect and engineer services, as authorized by law, unless the Secretary of Defense determines that additional obligations are necessary for such purposes and notifies the Committees on Appropriations of both Houses of Congress of his determination and the reasons therefor.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, DEFENSE AGENCIES

For acquisition, construction, installation, and equipment of temporary or permanent public works, installations, facilities, and real property for activities and agencies of the Department of Defense (other than the military departments), as currently authorized by law, $541,563,000, to remain available until September 30, 1991: Provided, That such amounts of this appropriation as may be determined by the Secretary of Defense may be transferred to such appropriations of the Department of Defense available for military construction as he may designate, to be merged with and to be available for the same purposes, and for the same time period, as the appropriation or fund to which transferred: Provided further, That of the amount appropriated, not to exceed $78,200,000, shall be available for study, planning, design, architect and engineer services, as authorized by law, unless the Secretary of Defense determines that additional obligations are necessary for such purposes and notifies the Committee on Appropriations of both Houses of Congress of his determination and the reasons therefor: Provided further, That of the amount available for study, planning, design, architect and engineer services, $10,000,000, shall be available for site preparation construction in conjunction with the replacement hospital at Brooke Army Medical Center, Texas.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION INFRASTRUCTURE

For the United States share of the cost of North Atlantic Treaty Organization Infrastructure programs for the acquisiton of personal property, for the acquisition and construction of military facilities and installations (including international military headquarters) and for related expenses for the collective defense of the North Atlantic Treaty Area as authorized in military construction Acts and section 2806 of title 10, United States Code, $247,000,000, to remain available until expended.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, ARMY NATIONAL GUARD

For construction, acquisition, expansion, rehabilitation, and conversion of facilities for the training and administration of the Army National Guard, and contributions therefor, as authorized by chapter 133 of title 10, United States Code, and military construction authorization Acts, $115,724,000, to remain available until September 30, 1991.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, AIR NATIONAL GUARD

For construction, acquisition, expansion, rehabilitation, and conversion of facilities for the training and administration of the Air National Guard, and contributions therefor, as authorized by chapter 133 of title 10, United States Code, and military construction authorization Acts, $140,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1991.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, ARMY RESERVE

For construction, acquisition, expansion, rehabilitation, and conversion of facilities for the training and administration of the Army Reserve as authorized by chapter 133 of title 10, United States Code, and military construction Acts, $76,417,000, to remain available until September 30, 1991.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, NAVAL RESERVE

For construction, acquisition, expansion, rehabilitation, and conversion of facilities for the training and administration of the reserve components of the Navy and Marine Corps as authorized by chapter 133 of title 10, United States Code, and military construction Acts, $44,500,000, to remain available until September 30, 1991.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, AIR FORCE RESERVE

For construction, acquisition, expansion, rehabilitation, and conversion of facilities for the training and administration of the Air Force Reserve as authorized by chapter 133 of title 10, United States Code, and military construction authorization Acts, $58,900,000, to remain available until September 30, 1991.

FAMILY HOUSING, ARMY

For expenses of family housing for the Army for construction, including acquisition, replacement, addition, expansion, extension and alteration and for operation and maintenance, including debt payment, leasing, minor construction, principal and interest charges, and insurance premiums, as authorized by law, as follows: for Construction, $367,680,000; for Operation and maintenance, $1,198,248,000; for debt payment, $8,063,000; in all $1,573,991,000: Provided, That the amount provided for construction shall remain available until September 30, 1991.

FAMILY HOUSING, NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

For expenses of family housing for the Navy and Marine Corps for construction, including acquisition, replacement, addition, expansion, extension and alteration and for operation and maintenance, including debt payment leasing, minor construction, principal and interest charges, and insurance premiums, as authorized by law, as follows: for Construction, $171,392,000; for Operation and maintenance, $532,031,000; for debt payment, $9,071,000; in all $712,494,000: Provided, That the amount provided for construction shall remain available until September 30, 1991.

FAMILY HOUSING, AIR FORCE

For expenses of family housing for the Air Force for construction, including acquisition, replacement, addition, expansion, extension and alteration and for operation and maintenance, including debt payment, leasing, minor construction, principal and interest charges, and insurance premiums, as authorized by law, as follows: for Construction, $96,840,000; for operation and maintenance, $703,215,000; for debt payment, $7,365,000; in all $807,420,000: Provided, That the amount provided for construction shall remain available until September 30, 1991.

FAMILY HOUSING, DEFENSE AGENCIES

For expenses of family housing for the activities and agencies of the Department of Defense (other than the military departments) for construction, including acquisition, replacement, addition, expansion, extension and alteration and for operation and maintenance, leasing, and minor construction, as authorized by law, as follows: for Construction, $240,000; for Operation and maintenance, $16,230,000; in all $16,470,000: Provided, That the amount provided for construction shall remain available until September 30, 1991.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 101. None of the funds appropriated in this Act shall be expended for payments under a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contract for work, where cost estimates exceed $25,000, to be performed within the United States, except Alaska, without the specific approval in writing of the Secretary of Defense setting forth the reasons therefor.

SEC. 102. Funds herein appropriated to the Department of Defense for construction shall be available for hire of passenger motor vehicles.

SEC. 103. Funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for construction may be used for advances to the Federal Highway Administration, Department of Transportation, for the construction of access roads as authorized by section 210 of title 23, United States Code, when projects authorized therein are certified as important to the national defense by the Secretary of Defense.

SEC. 104. None of the funds appropriated in this Act may be used to begin construction of new bases inside the continental United States for which specific appropriations have not been made.

SEC. 105. No part of the funds provided in this Act shall be used for purchase of land or land easements in excess of 100 per centum of the value as determined by the Corps of Engineers or the Naval Facilities Engineering Command, except; (a) where there is a determination of value by a Federal court, or (b) purchases negotiated by the Attorney General or his designee, or (c) where the estimated value is less than $25,000, or (d) as otherwise determined by the Secretary of Defense to be in the public interest.

SEC. 106. None of the funds appropriated in this Act shall be used to (1) acquire land, (2) provide for site preparation, or (3) install utilities for any family housing, except housing for which funds have been made available in annual military construction appropriation Acts.

SEC. 107. None of the funds appropriated in this Act for minor construction may be used to transfer or relocate any activity from one base or installation to another, without prior notification to the Committees on Appropriations.

SEC. 108. No part of the funds appropriated in this Act may be used for the procurement of steel for any construction project or activity for which American steel producers, fabricators, and manufacturers have been denied the opportunity to compete for such steel procurement.

SEC. 109. No part of the funds appropriated in this Act for dredging in the Indian Ocean may be used for the performance of the work by foreign contractors: Provided, That the low responsive and responsible bid of a United States contractor does not exceed the lowest responsive and responsible bid of a foreign contractor by greater than 20 per centum.

SEC. 110. None of the funds available to the Department of Defense for military construction or family housing during the current fiscal year may be used to pay real property taxes in any foreign nation.

SEC. 111. No part of the funds appropriated in this Act may be used to pay the compensation of an officer of the Government of the United States or to reimburse a contractor for the employment of a person for work in the continental United States by any such person if such person is an alien who has not been lawfully admitted to the United States.

SEC. 112. The expenditure of any appropriation under this Act for any consulting service through procurement contract, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 3109, shall be limited to those contracts where such expenditures are a matter of public record and available for public inspection, except where otherwise provided under existing law, or under existing Executive order issued pursuant to existing law.

SEC. 113. None of the funds appropriated by this Act may be obligated and expended in any way for the express purpose of sale, lease, or rental of any portion of land currently identified as Fort DeRussy, Honolulu, Hawaii.

SEC. 114. None of the funds in this Act may be used to initiate a new installation overseas without notification to the Committees on Appropriations.

SEC. 115. None of the funds appropriated in this Act for F-16 beddown projects in Misawa, Japan, may be obligated or expended unless there has been notification to the Committees on Appropriations that the approved Government of Japan budget for fiscal year 1987 includes projects associated with the F-16 beddown as an additive over the level of funding provided in Japanese fiscal year 1986 for the facilities improvement program.

SEC. 116. None of the funds appropriated in this Act may be obligated for architect and engineer contracts estimated by the Government to exceed $500,000 for projects to be accomplished in Japan or in any NATO member country, unless such contracts are awarded to United States firms or United States firms in joint venture with host nation firms.

SEC. 117. None of the funds appropriated in this Act for military construction in the United States territories and possessions in the Pacific and on Kwajalein Island may be used to award any contract estimated by the Government to exceed $1,000,000 to a foreign contractor: Provided, That this section shall not be applicable to contract awards for which the lowest responsive and responsible bid of a United States contractor exceeds the lowest responsive and responsible bid of a foreign contractor by greater than 20 per centum.

SEC. 118. The Secretary of Defense is to inform the Committees on Appropriations and Committees on Armed Services of the plans and scope of any proposed military exercise involving United States personnel 30 days prior to its occurring, if amounts expended for construction, either temporary or permanent, are anticipated to exceed $100,000.

(TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

SEC. 119. Unexpended balances in the Military Family Housing Management Account established pursuant to section 2831 of title 10, United States Code, as well as any additional amounts which would otherwise be transferred to the Military Family Housing Management Account during fiscal year 1987, shall be transferred to the appropriations for Family Housing provided in this Act, as determined by the Secretary of Defense based on the sources from which the funds were derived, and shall be available for the same purposes, and for the same time period, as the appropriation to which they have been transferred.

SEC. 120. Not more than 20 per centum of the appropriations in this Act which are limited for obligation during the current fiscal year shall be obligated during the last two months of the fiscal year.

(TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

SEC. 121. Funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for construction in prior years are hereby made available for construction authorized for each such military department by the authorizations enacted into law during the second session of the Ninety-ninth Congress.

SEC. 122. For transfer by the Secretary of Defense to and from appropriations and funds available during fiscal year 1987, or thereafter, for military construction or expenses of family housing for the military departments and Defense agencies, in order to maintain the budgeted level of operations for such appropriations and thereby eliminate substantial gains and losses to such appropriations caused by fluctuations in foreign currency exchange rates that vary substantially from those used in preparing budget submissions, an appropriation, to remain available until expended: Provided, That funds transferred from this appropriation shall be merged with and be available for the same purpose, and for the same time period, as the appropriation or fund to which transferred, and funds transferred to this appropriation shall be merged with, and available for the purpose of this appropriation until expended: Provided further, That transfers may be made from time to time from this appropriation to the extent the Secretary of Defense determines it may be necessary to do so to reflect downward fluctuations in the currency exchange rates from those used in preparing the budget submissions for such appropriations, but transfers shall be made from such appropriations to this appropriation to reflect upward fluctuations in currency exchange rates to prevent substantial net gains in such appropriations: Provided further, That authorizations or limitations now or hereafter contained within appropriations or other provisions of law limiting the amounts that may be obligated or expended for military construction and family housing expenses are hereby increased to the extent necessary to reflect downward fluctuations in foreign currency exchange rates from those used in preparing the applicable budget submission: Provided further, That for the purposes of the appropriation "Foreign Currency Fluctuations, Construction, Defense," the foreign currency rates used in preparing budget submissions shall be the foreign currency exchange rates as adjusted or modified, as reflected in applicable Committee reports on the Acts making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense: Provided further, That the Secretary of Defense shall provide an annual report to the Congress on all transfers made to or made from this appropriation: Provided further, That contracts or other obligations entered into payable in foreign currencies may be recorded as obligations based on the currency exchange rates used in preparing budget submissions and adjustments to reflect fluctuations in such rates may be recorded as disbursements are made: Provided further, That no later than the end of the second fiscal year following the fiscal year for which appropriations for Family Housing Operation and Maintenance have been made available to the Department of Defense, and no later than the end of the sixth fiscal year following the fiscal year for which the appropriations for Military Construction and Family Housing Construction have been made available to the Department of Defense, unobligated balances of such appropriations may be transferred into the appropriation "Foreign Currency Fluctuations, Construction, Defense": Provided further, That, at the discretion of the Secretary of Defense, any savings generated in the military construction and family housing programs may be transferred to this appropriation.

SEC. 123. The Secretary of the Navy shall enter into negotiations with shipyards located on Sampson Street, San Diego, California, and on Fort George Island, Jacksonville, Florida, to determine what liability (if any) the United States has for damages suffered by such a shipyard resulting from facility improvements made by such shipyard during 1982 in good faith reliance on representations and assurances provided to officials of such shipyard by representatives of the Department of the Navy in 1981 and 1982 with respect to future work of the Department of the Navy at such shipyard.

This Act may be cited as the "Military Construction Appropriations Act, 1987".

Mr. HEFNER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill up to title II be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against that portion of the bill not protected by the rule?

The Chair hears none.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HEFNER

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HEFNER: On page 3, line 14, after the word "law," strike out "$1,228,630,000" and insert "$1,220,130,000".

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to bring the military construction appropriation bill (H.R. 5052) into compliance with the military construction authorization bill. The amendment reduces the Air Force military construction account by $8,500,000 to reflect the deletion of an unaccompanied officer personnel housing project at Goodfellow AFB, TX. This project is not authorized in the current version of the military construction authorization bill.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DICKS

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKS: At the end of the bill, insert the following:

"SEC. 124. For military construction for the strategic homeporting initiative, no more than $799,000,000 shall be appropriated or obligated through fiscal year 1991."

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has been concurred in by the Secretary of the Navy and by the Department of Defense. Some Members have stated that the program for military construction and strategic home porting would range from $1.5 billion to $2 billion, to whatever.

What my amendment does is put all that to rest. This amendment would put a cap on this program of $799 million for all of the strategic home ports over the next several years. Obviously, the Navy sent up a budget program which delineates how much money is in there for each of these home ports. I believe, for Everett, WA, for example, it is $272 million. We are prepared to live with a cap on each of those programs as submitted by the Navy.

I hope this will end this question of, How much is this program going to cost? Second, I want to point out that there is a cost to putting these ships at existing home ports, and the cost runs around $600 million. So we are talking about a delta of $200 million to disperse the fleet. Every recent CNO supports this program.

Let me just mention what Admiral Zumwalt said. Admiral Zumwalt said that he strongly supported the program. He felt that it was in our vital interest—dispersing the fleet would add to the survivability. That is what we are talking about here. We are talking about dispersing the fleet so that, in case of a Soviet attack or some attack, all of our ships would not be in one place. This is the lesson that we learned from Pearl Harbor. This is the lesson that we painfully learned there when Tora, Tora, Tora occurred. Dispersing the fleet makes sense militarily and it is worth $200 million over the next 5 years.

I want to say this also to my committee members and friends, that our committee has done its job. I resent the allegation that was made earlier here that we have not made the tough choices. This committee reduced by over $2 billion the request made by the President of the United States for military construction. We made a lot of tough choices, as did the distinguished gentleman from California when he marked up this bill. So we have done our job. We are under Gramm-Rudman limitations, we are under any 050 targets, because we have done this job effectively.

The Secretary of the Navy has ranked this program as one of his highest priorities militarily because he understands that adding these ships to existing home ports would cost us a lot of money; we would have triple nesting. It is not good for those young sailors to have to walk across three other ships to get out to the fourth ship.

So this amendment stops all the malarkey, stops all the wild statements; it gets right down to it. We are capping this program. We have done this before. We did it on the B1B program. This is not unprecedented. I think the chairman of the committee, I am sure, would love to support this amendment, knowing of his frugality in these matters.

I yield to my friend from California, if he would like to endorse my amendment.

Mr. DELLUMS. Are you yielding to me?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Now let me simply ask, is the thrust of the gentleman's amendment to put a "cap" on the amount of money that this administration plans to spend for the program euphemistically referred to as the strategic home porting program at $799 million?

Mr. DICKS. Yes. This is in military construction funds.

Mr. DELLUMS. I would simply say to my colleague first that I would support the thrust of that amendment. Obviously I would not be here to oppose it. I personally think that dispersing the ships is an inadequate concept. You talk World War II. We are talking about a nuclear age and an age of MIRV technology, and I think that that renders that bizarre and absurd.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] has expired.

(On request of Mr. DELLUMS and by unanimous consent, Mr. DICKS was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman continue to yield?

Mr. DICKS. I would, of course, yield to the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Military Construction of the Committee on Armed Services, whose subcommittee voted in favor of the concept of strategic home porting.

Mr. DELLUMS. I appreciate that. I simply say to my colleague one admonishment: Those of us who have been around here a long time know that there are caps and there are caps and there are caps. This sort of puts the nose of the camel under the tent, and I would believe beyond the shadow of a doubt that when we go back to this page 2 or 3 years from now, I guarantee you will find that this program will go far beyond $799 million.

□ 1345

The chairman of the Senate Committee, STROM THURMOND, on your counterpart authorizing committee, has also said that he wants a cap, and it has report language demanding a cap at $799 million. Now he is chairman over there, the gentleman is chairman over here, and I am on the Military Construction Subcommittee. Mr. HEFNER and Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma are going to accept this amendment. I think right here we have the ability to make this cap stick.

Mr. DICKS. I would not think that the gentleman from California would renege on a solid commitment made here in the House of Representatives about maintaining this cap. Those were the old politics, and the gentleman has never been part of that.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that from the gentleman, and I support the gentleman's amendment, and I will call the gentleman to task whenever we see that we go beyond $799 million.

Mr. DICKS. We will be there together, shoulder to shoulder.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding to me.

I am glad to know that all these people have signed on this cap, but what is capped? What is prevented from falling under the homeporting?

Mr. DICKS. This is the money that has been programmed by the Secretary of the Navy for strategic homeporting, the military construction money that has been allocated and will be requested. The Secretary has said that we can live with this. This money will be able to take care of all the strategic homeports that were in the Secretary's original plan, including those very important homeports on the gulf. All of the military construction money that is requested is captured in this amendment and was protected. It is all there. It was signed off.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, if all of that is protected and all of that is being capped in, what is being capped out?

Mr. DICKS. Well, it is this overstatement that has been made by some of the opponents who want to make this sound like it is a $1.5 billion program. We are just putting it right here in law that it cannot be.

That is why I think it ends this argument about inaccurate assessments that have been made about the cost of this program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKS was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] raises a very good question, and the gentleman from California would like to put a little more specificity on it.

A $799 million cap, would that include family housing?

Mr. DICKS. I think that, except in one instance, family housing is not needed. We do not need family housing in Everett, WA. We have housing available to take care of this. There is no request in the budget for family housing at Everett. There never has been, and there never will be.

Our private sector people want to build housing in the State of Washington. We do not need military housing. I will not allow it to be funded.

Mr. DELLUMS. If the gentleman will yield further, that is not good legislative history. The gentleman has not answered the question.

Is family housing an integral part of the $799 million cap?

Mr. DICKS. Family housing is not part of the administration's program, so it is not capped.

I think there may be a request in New York, but that has not been funded by the gentleman's committee.

Mr. DELLUMS. So the answer to the gentleman's question is that family housing will fall outside of this $799 million cap.

Mr. DICKS. But it is not part of the request of the administration. That is what I am trying to tell the gentleman. They have not requested family housing, for example, at Everett, WA.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, this gentleman had a briefing in the bay area in California with eight naval officers, commanding officers of the naval facility. They briefed this gentleman on only one aspect of strategic home porting; namely, family housing.

They pointed out, one, there were over 4,000 family unit shortages; and No. 2, in the out years, they did anticipate military construction as a way of handling some of the family housing shortfalls.

So if the gentleman is not clear that this is part of the cap, I would simply say to my colleagues that family housing is going to fall outside of this figure. That is the specific answer to the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKS was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, that is something the gentleman's committee would have to approve. The gentleman is chairman of the Military Construction Subcommittee. There is not going to be any additional housing for home porting unless the gentleman approves it. That is just the way it is.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman want to write legislative history on the floor that $799 million is the entire package?

Mr. DICKS. No; it is military construction money, and it is only the request made by the administration. In our area, there is no money requested for housing. So, in that instance, there would not be any housing required. We do not want military construction housing at Everett, WA. The private sector in our State can handle it.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, just again so that we can be accurate in what it is that we are pretending to be doing——

Mr. DICKS. No; we are not pretending.

Mr. WEISS. Let me ask the question.

Mr. DICKS. I will not yield them.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman discussed with me the concept of the cap and I told the gentleman that I have no problem with it. I have not seen the amendment.

I have two concerns that I would raise with the gentleman. The first is that I think the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] is probably correct. My reading on this would be that if the administration changes its mind, for example, and asks for housing, they would be precluded. That would fall under the cap under the language I see in front of me.

I would say there is one other concern I have, too. We have done this before. We have caps, as the gentleman knows. But when we have done that, we have specified what year dollars and, therefore, there is an inflationary growth. There is no provision for that. This locks in, I assume, as this figure in current year dollars, which means there is a decreasing amount of worth that could be appropriated. Maybe the gentleman could respond to that.

But when I see the actual language of the amendment, I do have those concerns.

Mr. DICKS. This would be budget year dollars, so it would be fiscal year 1987.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKS was allow to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. DICKS. It would be budget year dollar to make the legislative history here. So there would be inflation allowed in that.

The key, I think, here is to understand that there were two versions of this program. There was the limited version, which is what we are trying to approve and cap here; and there was the enhanced version. That is what has caused the concern of the chairman and others about the potential for growth.

What we are doing here is capping this program at the limited version that was submitted by the Navy so that there would not be an enhanced version. But the funding would be in budget year dollars and, therefore, takes into account inflation.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I want to put myself in the position of siding with the gentleman. I sympathize with the gentleman's position on home porting. I think home porting is desperately necessary to spread the effect of the fleet both strategically and economically. I think both are extremely important to preserve the ultimate capability of our fleet.

But I am concerned that the gentleman is capping at a point that might protect the status quo on the initial programs toward home porting and ultimately limiting or abolishing any future program.

Mr. DICKS. No, this is not true.

The Assistant Secretary of the Navy has briefed us, has gone through this money, and it takes care of each of the parts of the strategic home port proposal.

As I have said, these are budget year dollars, so it does allow for inflation. It does do away with this problem that people have talked about, that this is going to be a $1.5 billion or $2 billion program.

I might add that the Senate Armed Services Committee has already said that it is going to impose this kind of a cap anyway, so this is going to happen. I am sure that the gentleman from California is going to accept that amendment. So we are going to have a cap on this program.

We did it on the B-1. It worked very effectively. We can do it here. It stops all the false statements, and I think it is a good program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] has again expired.

(On request of Mr. LIVINGSTON, and by unanimous consent, Mr. DICKS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's explanation. The way the gentleman explained it, I will support the gentleman's amendment. But I hope it does everything the gentleman says it does.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I am simply trying to point out to my colleagues the reason why it is important to establish legislative history on the intent of this cap is that the Secretary of the Navy believes that family housing is counted in the figure of $799 million. But when you talk to the military personnel, they say it stands outside.

Mr. DICKS. I say to the gentleman that is not correct. Family housing would be outside the cap. I know the gentleman would not want to stand with that. It is a project-by-project, base-by-base requirement. Some of them have military housing in and some do not.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

□ 1355

Mr. DELLUMS. As the gentleman very well knows, in the request for New York, in the enhanced program, the Navy asked for money for family housing construction. So when the gentleman says we are not asking for money beyond the $799 million that that is not——

Mr. DICKS. We are tapping this at the limited program, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. DICKS. People are going to have to work out the housing requirements at the local level just like we are going to do in Everett, WA. There are all kinds of private developers who will build housing and then the Navy will guarantee a certain level of leasing.

Mr. DELLUMS. The gentleman has answered my question. This stops it before any enhanced program, period. That is the gentleman's statement, right?

Mr. DICKS. That is exactly right. That is what the gentleman and I talked about doing and I thought the gentleman agreed to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] has again expired.

(On request of Mr. MOLINARI and by unanimous consent, Mr. DICKS was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOLINARI. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to be sure that we perfect the record and do not leave a misunderstanding.

The study that was made by the Secretary of the Navy and furnished to Senator THURMOND and others dated November 8, 1985, was where that figure first was picked up; that $799 million figure. It itemizes the pure costs for construction of the home port bases themselves, excluding housing.

Is that the gentleman's understanding?

Mr. DICKS. That is how I understood it.

Mr. MOLINARI. So it does not include the $799 million, any appropriated or nonappropriated funding for military family housing?

Mr. DICKS. That is how I understand it.

Mr. MOLINARI. Would this preclude, during the next fiscal years included in your amendment a request being considered for moneys for military housing?

Mr. DICKS. I would not think that it would.

Mr. MOLINARI. I thank the gentleman for this colloquy.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I arrived here toward the end of the last part of this debate because I do have more than a passing interest in it, and I did participate in the authorization bill. If I might have the attention of the author of the amendment, I would like to clear up something that is not clear in my mind.

The gentleman has offered an amendment that would cap the expenditure on home porting at $799 million; is that correct?

I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] for his response.

Mr. DICKS. Yes. The administration has made a request at $799 million for all of the strategic home ports; Staten Island, Everett, the one in Alabama, the one in Florida, the one in Texas, the one in Mississippi. All of these home ports would be protected under this bill.

Mr. DICKINSON. I understand. I understand what you are saying.

You are saying that you want a cap, but now you recognize, of course, that there are two tiers here. One is an enhanced program and one is an unenhanced program. Is that right?

Mr. DICKS. Yes. What we are trying to do is block the enhanced program.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, I do not think that is what the gentleman is trying to do. I think the gentleman is trying to save what he had in there; not block the other one.

The thing that causes me concern, let me say first, it was my amendment in the authorizing committee to put us on record in favor of the home porting concept.

Mr. DICKS. Yes. I understand that.

Mr. DICKINSON. This passed; I favor it. I am not trying to work at cross-purposes with the gentleman; I am trying to be of assistance if, in fact, that can be.

Mr. DICKS. I understand.

Mr. DICKINSON. Now, there are two tiers here or two ways to approach the problem. A bare-bones figure has been laid out by the administration and it says, "Now, this is the unenhanced part of the program; this is the bare bones for the entire home porting philosophy," and that this would encompass all of the bases that they say they will ultimately need.

Then there is another tier which is the enhanced program which includes housing and should include all of the things that go into quality of life and so forth. This is a higher figure that you would exclude with your amendment; is that right?

Mr. DICKS. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to clarify something.

Mr. Chairman, there was a letter written by Secretary Lehman. I would appreciate the attention of the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] because this goes back to the statements that were made earlier. Let me read this paragraph because I think it is quite important.

"This funding level, $799 million, does not include nonappropriated fund requirements or military family housing since additional housing would be required regardless of where the ships are placed."

Mr. DICKINSON. I understand that. Would the $799 million figure that you came up with——

Mr. DICKS. Is the bare-bones version.

Mr. DICKINSON [continuing]. However magical a figure that might be, having been plucked out of the air by someone, it says it does not include those things that you have just mentioned.

Then there is another figure over here that is the enhanced figure which is not $799 million but runs up to about $1.5 billion. I forgot the exact figure; maybe you could supply that for me.

Mr. DICKS. We are trying to stop the, we are trying to enact a cap that would put in place the bare-bones version, but obviously, housing is going to have to be looked at because housing is going to have to be required at the four existing——

Mr. DICKINSON. I understand all that. What I am trying to do is just set the record straight.

Mr. DICKS. Right.

Mr. DICKINSON. So there is a second step which is the enhanced portion of the program which does include some nonappropriated funds. It does include family housing. It does include facilitization in other aspects which is not in the bare-bones version.

Now that figure is what? About $1.5 billion?

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HEFNER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think we are getting a bit confused here. This does not address family housing. This cap is for military construction, period.

Mr. DICKINSON. I understand; I think I have got it straight. One is a bare-bones facilitization just for the ports and the docks and the absolute, essential requisites to put ships in there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DICKINSON. Then there is a second tier, if I might have the chairman's attention, that does include the amenities that you have just described such as family housing, such as, perhaps, recreational facilities; things that go into a normal base that are not included in the first cut, so to speak, or the first bite, of the $799 million. That is what the gentleman from Washington offers, to cap it at $799 million. That does not include a myriad of things that the chairman of my Subcommittee on Authorizations has alluded to, such as family housing.

There is another thing that gave us problems. The reason that we had the controversy in committee is because there is an additional expenditure that is not reflected even in the enhanced portion. The Navy does not like to talk about that, and maybe it will go away.

What bothers me is that if you want to cap it at $799 million, that is good if you are going to start with Washington State and start with New York, but then if you run into a very serious environmental problem, as we are told is possible in Washington State when they start bringing up the toxic sludge that has to be put someplace, and that has not been resolved yet.

If some unforeseen difficulty or problem arises then this could very well eat up a big portion of the $799 million and so those other bases that are downstream, whether they be in Texas, Alabama, Florida, wherever, they will be left out because you do not get to them yet.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, the ranking member of the Armed Services Committee, here is a man so honest and having so much information with his service to the Armed Services Committee, that even though he is in favor of the concept, made the motion for the concept of supporting of home porting, he wants this House to understand what the numbers are, as he made sure our subcommittee understood what the numbers were.

We have responsibilities in that committee for the security of this country and we have to know how much things are costing.

The questions raised are valid. Let me summarize. Everyone is going to agree to this cap, because even a temporary cap is better than no cap. But we are just trying to clarify through this discussion what this cap involves. It involves from the Navy, from the administration, a request to cap the money that will be needed for the construction in these ports. It does not involve all of the other things that will be required.

The gentleman talks about private housing. The Government has to pay for the sailors and their families to live in the private housing. That is beyond the cap. All these other needs are beyond the cap.

Mr. DICKS. But they are going to have to pay for the sailors wherever they are.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I have the time, and I have not yielded to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] as yet.

Mr. DICKS. The point that——

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Let me finish my point. Certainly we are going to have to pay for the sailors and families wherever they live, but let us not try to fool this Congress——

Mr. DICKS. I resent that. I am not trying to fool the Congress of the United States, except maybe the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Let me qualify that.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman would finish his statement, I promise to yield——

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. Not at this point. I will be glad to yield as long as I have time, and will get more additional time for the gentleman to reply, if I might.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have all the respect in the world for the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS]. I am talking about the House understanding what we are doing. The cap does not specify all the other costs. So if Members of the House think that it is only going to cost $800 million for this cap, and no other additional costs, this cap does not cover those additional costs of housing and all the other needs for these personnel. That is all. I think we are agreed on that in this conversation.

All the speakers up here are just trying to clarify that directly. It is a cap only for the military construction, not all of the other costs.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask just two or three questions, and I think that they can be answered briefly.

First of all I would like to confirm that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON] is definitely for the home-porting concept. The record is clear on that. He is opposed to the Hertel amendment. Is that correct in both instances? Hertel is the one that eliminates it.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have not heard the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL] on the floor. I did oppose it in committee. It is to delete all of the New York money, if that is what the gentleman is talking about, some $54 million.

Yes, I voted against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. LOTT. If the gentleman will yield further, the answer I think in both instances is "yes."

Mr. DICKINSON. Based on the facts, in each individual case, now. We cannot just go out scatter-shooting; we are single-shooting here.

Mr. LOTT. Two more questions, and I think that the gentleman from Washington would like to get in on the answers, because he has been trying to get recognized anyway.

One is, as I understand what he said, the administration, the Secretary of the Navy has said that this amount, $779——

Mr. DICKS. Ninety-nine.

Mr. LOTT. $799 million is something that they can live with. That is what they expect the cost to be. But the key question that the gentleman from Alabama was getting to, and we need to hear from the gentleman from Washington, is—and this is what a lot of people are thinking—all right, Everett is going to be all right under this amendment, but what about those downstream, and frankly in the gulf? there are a couple Members worried about that.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Washington to respond to the question of the gentleman.

Mr. DICKS. We would be prepared on the authorization bill to accept a subcap at Everett at $272 million for military construction, so there is not any question——

Mr. DICKINSON. That is awfully generous of the gentleman. Included in that subcap is there a guarantee that anybody downstream is going to have anything left?

Mr. DICKS. We certainly hope to do that, because it is laid out by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. DICKINSON. I know that the gentleman hopes to, but——

Mr. DICKS. I am noticing more support for this from the gentleman than I have in quite awhile, in fact.

If the gentleman will yield on a couple factual problems, one is the question of dredging. The gentleman has a provision in his own bill that will not allow any of this money to be expended until we get the appropriate environmental permits. So he has already taken the step to protect against a problem occurring there.

We have a provision in our own bill that says if it is going to be very expensive to deal with the environmental problems, you have to come back to Congress and get approval. So this cap applies between now and 1991. It deals with military construction funds. Housing is a base-by-base question. If we do not build the housing at Newport, we are going to have to add existing facilities at the existing home ports. There is no way to do this on the cheap. It is going to cost you some money.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, let me reclaim the time, if I might, because the chairman of my subcommittee wants to get in on the act.

Just let me say that the gentleman is very generous in offering to cap the project at $250 million.

Mr. DICKS. Seventy-two.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is all that you want out of this $799 million, and we can appreciate your generosity, except that some of us see there is no money in here, zero, zilch, naught in here for anything but New York and Washington State.

Mr. DICKS. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. No. So the gentleman wants to protect; he says, "That is fine, I am going to help my place, and we will help this place, and anything else that is left over, we are going to be just as fair as we can be in apportioning that, if there is anything left." It really should not work that way.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I thank my distinguished colleague for yielding, and I think that the gentleman states the case accurately. As I have tried to listen to the debate as it has unfolded, the practical effect of this amendment, this capping amendment, is to simply certify the figure that the Navy advanced several months ago, $799 million. But when you then factor in family housing, which in my estimation is not an enhanced program when you are dealing with the quality of life of human beings, other facilities that will be obviously necessary as a military facility evolves—not an enhanced program but a necessity as I understand military life, and third, as the gentleman adequately points out, those facilities that are downstream may have great difficulty receiving funds.

All we are doing here is institutionalizing the figure $799 million that we asserted in our committee was an inaccurate picture of what the ultimate cost of strategic homeporting would be all about. Even though this amendment passes as a cap, the practical effect is that we are still embracing a program that probably will end up costing between $1.5 and $2 billion.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HEFNER. We certainly do not want to limit the debate here, but we have a lot of things to do.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment end in 8 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER]?

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, would that include all amendments thereto?

Mr. HEFNER. No, on this particular amendment; not this section, just this particular amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, just so I am clear, is this on all amendments, or just on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. HEFNER. Just on the gentleman's amendment to put a cap on the home porting.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. I just want to make one point on this, and then I will withdraw. We are going to spend an additional 5 or 6 hours arguing between $100 million and $400 million that has been made a large national issue. At the least, we are talking about $800 million here, but we are going to make sure that we only have an hour of debate.

I have got to say that I think home porting is as important as the Contra issue.

Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my reservation of objection, but I will object if any Member tries to limit the next amendment up on home porting.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlewoman will yield, I think that she is exactly right. I think that it is much more important. I am just trying to get to the next amendment, which, according to my understanding, is going to be an amendment to eliminate home porting. We seem to be hung up here on interpretation, and we may never reconcile this.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's request is that all debate on the Dicks amendment cease in 8 minutes.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Members standing at the time the unanimous-consent request was agreed to will be recognized for 1 minute each.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL].

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I never had a problem with the amendment. All we were trying to do with the ranking member and others was clarify what it meant. Clearly, it does not include other costs beyond the military construction. Clearly, it will cost more to have families live in New York than in Virginia or other areas of this country. So I think that we have the facts on the record.

As I said, even a temporary cap is better than no cap. So we are not going to object to this amendment. We want to get to the main amendment to delete the funds for this idea.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKS yielded his time to Mr. SWIFT.)

□ 1415

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT].

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, as so often seems to happen in these debates, we end up talking about apples and oranges. I am going to try to state my understanding and see if this is fair to everybody.

What I believe the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] does is to cap at $799 million those facilities that the Navy said would cost $799 million.

What we are aimed at here is the concern that all of us in Congress from time to time have, that an agency says they are going to be able to do something for so much money and then we get into overruns.

The purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] is to cap what the Navy says they can do for $799 million at $799 million.

We are not saying that there might not be the Navy coming to Congress for some things outside of that; some housing, particularly in New York not in my State, not in the other States, but perhaps in New York.

There will be some road construction that will come out of the military access road fund, and we are not talking about that.

So let us be clear. What we are trying to do is address directly the legitimate concerns of Members who do not want the Navy willy-nilly to overspend what it said it can do for $799 million. We do not claim any more for this amendment than that, but we do claim, and I think for those who are trying to clarify the issue, it seems to me that what I have just said is consistent with what the gentleman from Michigan has said, what the gentleman from Alabama said earlier, that is all the amendment is. I think it is a good sound amendment and I would urge all my colleagues to support it.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWIFT. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman. It is a good summary.

Th CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY].

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Dicks amendment and I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, since I do not sense there is any opposition, I would hope that the Chairman and the ranking member would be willing to accept my amendment.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, we are prepared to accept the amendment. As the gentleman said earlier, some cap is better than no cap, so I am prepared to accept the amendment from my point of view.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I do not have any objection to the amendment. If there are people on this side who do, however, have objections, and want to speak against it, I do not want to just accept the amendment. I want to allow those people the opportunity to be heard on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS].

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I just want to bring us back to where we started out when the gentleman first offered his amendment.

I have no objection to it, but when the gentleman started out, he said he wanted to do this, because there had been exaggerated figures of $1½ billion thrown around and he wanted once and for all to lay those figures to rest.

Well, the fact is that it has been established in the course of this discussion that the total cost may be $1½ to $2 billion and the proposed $799 million cap does not change that. We will be spending, if the home-porting program is allowed to stand, between $1½ and $2 billion. Those are the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HERTEL OF MICHIGAN

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HERTEL of Michigan: Page 3, line 1, strike out "$1,364,090,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,224,290,000".

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, let me begin by saying that we spent a lot of time on an amendment that we agreed with, but it was important to clarify.

I think the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT] did an excellent job of clarifying that.

Certainly we would rather have even a temporary cap. This House, this Congress, future Congresses can always raise any cap. It is only in statute, not in stone.

But what we learned from that long discussion was that this only involves a small portion, a portion of the total cost of establishing home porting as a policy.

Let me say, I respect my friends on the other side of this question on both sides of the aisle, especially those from New York and Washington, even though it has become clear to me in the last few weeks that even the members of those delegations from those two States that are concerned do not agree unanimously with home porting.

I have no interest parochially, I have no naval base in Michigan or in the Detroit area. I got involved in this because I am a member of the Subcommittee on Installations and after all the lengthy hearings and all the testimony, we found out that it was going to cost far more than the $800 million that we have been discussing in this past amendment.

Let me tell the House the serious situation that we are in regarding the budget. In the appropriation last year that passed this Congress, we spent on military installations and construction $9.1 billion last year. In this appropriation and in the authorization that passed our Committee on Armed Services yesterday, it has already been cut to $8.34 billion. That is quite a large cut already and that cut is on existing facilities.

Those many Members who are concerned that they could not get the authorization for their States or their districts, that is because there was not enough money. There was a cut, not a freeze, let me make it clear, a cut, and a large cut already.

For the first time possibly in the history of the subcommittee, there were no add-ons, because there was no money, not a single add-on of all the Members who came to the committee and the subcommittee were accepted, not one. If you wonder why not, it was because there was a cut, not a freeze, but a cut, no money.

The only new money of any consequence is home porting, and we are only talking about two ports in this appropriation, Everett which has already been deferred by the authorizing committee, and New York which has already been cut by the authorizing committee from the $91 million requested for 1 year to $54.4 million which is in this appropriation also.

Now, the ranking member, the gentleman from Alabama, the ranking member of the full Armed Services Committee, said, "What about the other 11 ports after you take the big 2 first, use up all the money with all the questions involved, there is not going to be any money left for the ports in Texas, Alabama, Mississippi, or Florida."

If you look at the Navy's track record, definitely not.

But more than that, what about all the other existing facilities to support our military? Do you know where they will make up for the money where they want to increase it for home porting? The Navy wanted to cut money for secondary electric capacity for our Navy people in Guantanamo Bay, surrounded by Castro's Cuba. They wanted to cut that to start home porting.

What would the people down there do with unfriendly forces surrounding them, without enough electricity, if the first generator broke down?

But we changed that, we would not accept that from the Navy.

The Navy also to get their money for home porting suggested that we cut some of our intelligence capacity. It was not even our naval money that they were suggesting we cut.

The Intelligence Committee told us that could not be done, that would endanger the Nation; but that was the Navy's recommendation to get their money for home porting. We kept the money in for those intelligence needs.

So our committee had to make some very tough decisions, and as the ranking member of the full committee has said many times, we have to be careful that we do not endanger the security of this country, and that certainly involves the facilities in this country and around the world.

There is a lot of talk about the budget conference committee right now and the difference in the figures of the Senate of $301 billion and in the House of $285 billion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HERTEL of Michigan was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if you went all the way to the Senate figure, if you went and compromised between the House and the Senate figure, you still would not have enough money to avoid a cut in the military installations and construction budget for the first time in 6 years. That is how serious the question is.

We are already $1.6 billion below the President's request in the authorization that passed the Armed Services Committee yesterday. We do not have any new money. We do not have enough money for existing facilities, and over a hundred Members of this Congress know that they were not able to get the requests that they made to the committee for things in their districts because of this very tight situation. That is why we are saying that we should not go ahead with something that will be this expensive.

We know now after the last discussion on the cap amendment that we are talking about far more than $800 million. We are talking about housing. I said it costs more to house people in New York than it does in Virginia. That is a fact. We all know that. No one is going to dispute that.

We all know it costs to move personnel and families.

We all know that quality of life is one of the best things we have done in the last 5 years for the military.

Let me talk about the defense side of this and read a letter from BARRY GOLDWATER, the chairman of the Armed Services Committee in the Senate, who has received, as I said before in the general debate, more awards from the defense community than any other American in the history of this country. This is a letter that he wrote March 7, 1986.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would caution the gentleman not to refer to Members of the other body.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to refer to the letter?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it may be submitted.

There was no objection.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I refer to this letter from Mr. GOLDWATER. He writes:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES,
Washington, DC, March 7, 1986.

Hon. CASPAR WEINBERGER,
Secretary of Defense, Department of Defense, Washington, DC.

DEAR CAP: The issue of homeporting for navy ships is soon to come up before the Senate and quite frankly I'm opposed to it.

It seems to me that about half of our fleet is out to sea at all times and there is no reason, in my mind why we have to go to all this expense to prepare harbors and docks for ships where those facilities already exist.

I can tell you that this is pure unadulterated politics and it is an area where we can really save money and I don't want to take any positive action on it in my Committee. I would like to discuss this with you and preferably with you alone because any discussion involving the Secretary of the Navy can produce nothing but political results.

With best wishes,

BARRY GOLDWATER.

This is a letter from the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee. This is his opinion.

As I said at the outset of this debate, it is not a partisan issue. It is an issue, No. 1, of not having a strategic need; No. 2, not having the money.

If you are concerned about facilities that already exist around the world and in this country, if you are concerned about the level of funding that we have in the armed services budget, please vote for this amendment to save this money.

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. I rise in support of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, at the risk of being called one who has parochial or provincial interests, I must say that there is a certain amount of truth in that, but it is more defensive than offensive; and what I would like to say to the body today about the subject of home porting is that the rules, the ground rules, the objectives, the whole situation has changed markedly since the committee upon which I have the pleasure to serve, the authorizing committee, the Committee on Armed Services, voted for the concept of home porting and dispersion, and I agree with that. I think that that is something we should hold for the future.

Now, I say the future because several things have happened since we arrived at that conclusion and endorsed the concept of home porting, and that is Gramm-Rudman-Hollings-Mack: limiting among other things defense expenditures drastically.

For the past few years, we have cut defense authorization a little here, a little there, until we have gotten to the place where we are today with Gramm-Rudman-Hollings-Mack, to the point that we are not looking at $320 billion for defense, we are not looking at $305 billion or $301 billion. We are looking at the House mark of $285 billion. That is fewer real dollars, actual dollars than last year.

□ 1430

So now, we are going to have to look into the future to establish priorities. One thing at which we must look is the subject of home porting.

Can we afford to build home-porting facilities now? When, under the strictures of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings-Mack we do not know, if we will ever get to a 600-ship Navy, to a 15-carrier battle group Navy, or the number of airplanes that would be required for those big-deck carriers if we got to a 15-battle group Navy.

So the subject comes up, then, what do we do now? How do we go back to $285 billion in authorization? Here, quite frankly, Members of this body, is where I will get a little bit provincial and parochial.

The Secretary of the Navy was asked, when challenged by the MilCon Subcommittee of the authorizing committee, the House Committee on Armed Services, "Mr. Secretary, where are you going to come up with the money to provide the new home porting funds for Washington and for New York?"

He said in effect, Simple. Among other things, we will take it out of California.

Well, I happen to represent a part of California. There are no Navy ports in my district, but I have some sort of provincial bias toward my State. But I pondered those remarks that the Secretary made, and he said basically, in order to get new ports, we will take money out of old ports, to provide for this 600-ship Navy, these 15-carrier battle groups, and the airplanes that go on the big decks that make up the carrier battle groups.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, we just cannot do that. With Gramm-Rudman-Hollings-Mack, we are going to be forced, we are forced, to look into the future to determine are we going to be able to stretch our programs like we did in the late 1970's, which practically economically bankrupted our position on defense. Are we going to take it out of uniforms and commissaries? Are we going to take it out of force structure, or what?

Let me tell my colleagues that rather than take it out of research and development which we so drastically need for the defense of our country, rather than take it out of uniforms and training and operations and maintenance, rather than take it out of military construction so our troops can be well housed and well clad and well fed, it is going to have to come out of troop strength eventually.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. BADHAM] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BADHAM was allowed to proceed for 4 additional minutes.)

Mr. BADHAM. Troop strength, Mr. Chairman, includes the myth of a 600-ship Navy. It includes 40 tactical air wings. It includes 15-carrier battle groups, and it includes the airplanes to go on the big-deck carrier battle groups.

Ladies and gentlemen, if we persist in the cutting of defense by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings-Mack, we are never going to get there. Realistically, that is the law of the land and we are sworn to uphold the law of the land. So be it.

My point is simply this, ladies and gentlemen: It is foolish, it is senseless, to talk about additional home port and home port facilities today when we cannot, under any circumstances, be assured of having the ships to put there, the people to put there, the carriers and the planes to put there.

So my contention is, let us go slow and look back on this and revisit this at another time in the future when we can assure that the facilities that we do have are properly maintained and that we do not go off building new facilities until we are assured that we are going to have the ships to put there, the sailors to put there, the big-deck carriers to put there, and the planes to put on them.

So I would contend in support of the Hertel amendment that we should go slow, let us divert these projects until we can at least be sure where it is that we are going.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. BADHAM] has again expired.

(On request of Mr. LOWRY of Washington and by unanimous consent, Mr. BADHAM was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I would be delighted to yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman on his statement. My State is one of the home ports, Everett in the State of Washington. I have decided that we just cannot afford it within the priorities of our budget and within the priorities of our military budget.

I really appreciate the gentleman's experience on armed services when we look at the question of whether there is going to be an affordable 600-ship Navy. When we look at all the studies, like the CBO study, on paying for a 600-ship Navy, and look at the financial requirements of that, when we are talking about a 3-percent real growth in the future for the next 9 years and take a look at the budget we have before us today, on which I submit we are going to go over Gramm-Rudman this year, and the one we have today is less than a freeze, can we really believe we are going to have a 3-percent real growth in the military for the next 9 years and use that as a way to justify this expenditure?

The gentleman's experience on this makes total sense. We have to have the courage today to address that, pick our priorities, spend our dollars better, which means not here.

Mr. BADHAM. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, if I might have the attention of the author of the amendment, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL], let me see if I understand the import of the gentleman's amendment.

The gentleman is offering to delete $140 million, as I understand it, outright. The $140 million consists of two packages, so to speak. One is $85 million that was carried over but was fenced for Everett, WA; and the other is $54 million for New York. Is that right?

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. If the gentleman will yield, that is exactly right. We are not talking about the concept in this amendment. That remains in the authorization. Many members of the subcommittee, in fact I, have put language to revisit the concept because the gulf ports are much cheaper and their communities have put up a much higher percentage of the funds necessary.

So that language is in the authorization to revisit it. What we are doing is saving the money for this year.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have a little problem in trying to reconcile the two because they are coming from two different directions. We really have to treat this home porting on a case-by-case basis.

We fenced the money for Everett and asked them to do four things. We just put it off for a year, but we asked them to do four things, in effect.

We said that they have, according to the press and people who live there, a toxic waste problem and we do not know if they are going to get an EPA statement or not, but we understand there is a growing resentment over the dredge and where the spoil is going to be put and is it going to be toxic. So we do not know what that is going to cost, and whether it has to be transported and a new method of sinking it 250 feet and capping it cannot be used, so it is going to be a lot more expensive.

We asked the State of Washington to solve the EPA question. There is an access road question, how it is to be financed, and that is rather expensive. We asked them to solve that question. There was a contribution from the State, local, and port authority, that they had to come up with the money. We asked them to come up with some money, whether it was a bond issue, an act of the legislature, or whatever.

We asked them to answer these questions and we will put this on hold. So this $85 million in there was contingent.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. If the gentleman will yield further, may I speak to that point?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, of course.

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. The ranking member relates that language very well since he was the author of that amendment to have those requirements met.

My concern, and the reason I am striking the money on fencing is because if that language of the gentleman is taken out in the conference committee by the other body, then that money would be unfenced.

Mr. DICKINSON. Then the other $54 million applies to New York, where none of these problems pertain at the present time, as I understand it. There is no access requirement. They have already donated some $15 million worth of land. They are not worried about the toxic dredging, and so forth. So we allowed them to go forward with that portion and oppose the deletion of the $54 million.

□ 1440

But you have them lumped together, so you are not fencing it. The gentleman is just saying he is deleting the entire two packages; $85 million here, $54 million here. Take it all out, not contingent on anything, and we will revisit it next year.

Am I correct in the effect of your amendment?

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, that is exactly correct.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman referred to a number of things that are Everett-specific. I appreciate the gentleman yielding for me to provide just a brief time to clarify a couple of points.

The concern, I believe, of the subcommittee was whether or not the EIS [environmental impact statement], was even going to be done in time for the money to be spent in fiscal 1987. I have a letter which I would be happy to share with the gentleman from the Corps of Engineers in the Seattle office that indicates that they are on schedule and they see no reason that they will not be. That will be resolved during this calendar year.

With regard to the access road, that is an issue which has been, I think, misunderstood, partly because initial estimates to which the road was designed are much higher than the Navy now says they need. So they designed a two-tiered road. Any time you go up in the air, you come up with an expensive road. We are not going to need to do that. It is being redesigned as a surface road now, and because it is still in the design state, we cannot tell you what the cost is. But it is going to be a lot lower than original estimates.

As had been the case all along, the city, the port and the State will all have money in the road and the defense access road would only be accountable for that portion that can be clearly and specifically assigned directly to the cost.

The last point I would like to make is that there has been some concern as to whether Everett planned to participate financially in this whole operation, partly going back, perhaps, to the promise the mayor gave the community that he would not ask for a bond issue.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON] has expired.

(On request of Mr. SWIFT, and by unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, what he was saying was very specific. He was not going to ask the city for a bond issue. That should not be interpreted as meaning there would be no local contribution. Both city government, county government, the port district, and the State are all expected to participate in some very specific ways that I can share with the gentleman.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman, but to reiterate what I said earlier, these were contingencies that we wanted to come about before we released the funds and approved it. So I am sure that within the next budget cycle, they will be resolved and we will go forward with it.

But we would just ask that it be held in abeyance. This is not the case in New York, but both of the cases have been lumped together now, so you are voting on whether to delete the money for both, with no contingencies, just outright. That is what the vote is.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I reluctantly rise in opposition to the amendment.

As many of you know, the strategic home-porting issue has become a political issue which is very unfortunate.

Last year, the Congress appropriated $61.4 million for Staten Island, and $17.6 million for Everett for the initial construction of facilities in these two sites.

After appropriating funds, the Navy agreed to delay obligating these funds until the Committees on Armed Services review the strategic home-porting concept, which is what they have done. They have agreed to the concept.

GAO has been critical of the cost, and as we have already heard here today, we have had some controversy about a cap and one thing or another, but I would think at this particular time, the concept has been initiated and I would rise in opposition to the amendment and hope that the Members would reject this amendment.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and rise in opposition to the amendment. I do not want to give any long speech on this. The Navy feels that this homeporting concept is very important and I urge my colleagues to vote against the amendment.

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a dangerous amendment and one that destroys a fundamental pillar of present and future U.S. naval strategy.

The need and reasons behind strategic home porting can be stated very succinctly. Congress has endorsed and provided funds for the development of a 600-ship Navy. We will likely reach that goal in just 3 or 4 years. In fact, each of the ships remaining to join the fleet are now either under construction or they have been authorized to be constructed.

As we move toward 600 ships, we face a choice. Our existing ports cannot accommodate these new ships or their personnel. We can either build new piers and facilities at our present home ports or build new home ports.

The Navy found that this choice had important strategic implications: Our ships are now dangerously overconcentrated, with about half of our fleet in only two ports. Strategic home porting would disperse the fleet and thus reduce fleet vulnerability and allow quicker access to certain theaters of operation, thereby allowing us to establish a naval presence at a crisis point earlier. Strategic home porting would increase battlegroup readiness as well as organizational and command effectiveness. It takes full advantage of our industrial and shipbuilding capabilities and will help to preserve those capabilites in various areas of the country.

So, clearly, on a strategic basis, home porting was the preferred action.

There has been a great deal said here today about strategic home porting. Everybody talks about this as though it is a new concept. The fact is that when we had more ships, we had more home ports. When we were faced with an austerity program back in the 1970's, they cut back on the ships, and because they cut back on the number in the fleet, necessarily they had to cut back on the number of home ports.

Now we are going back in the opposite direction, building more ships to the goal of the Navy, and that requires, for a commonsense standpoint, the construction of new home ports.

Nobody has mentioned today the fact that through the Navy's competitive quest here, they have picked up $150 million from the various home port sites as consideration for bringing the Navy ships to their areas.

When the costs of the Strategic Home Porting Program were considered, it was found that the difference between building new home ports, and putting ships in existing home ports was $217 million.

This is the figure that the Navy used.

Operationally, the cost difference would be $35 million to $50 million a year. The Navy, to check these figures, brought in a very, very prestigious accounting firm, Coopers & Lybrand, who have an expertise in naval strategic readiness. They found that the Navy was too conservative in their estimates.

As a matter of fact, it was their judgment, after reviewing all the figures, that were you to build the existing home ports up to the capacity that would be needed, you would save only somewhere between $100 million and $200 million.

When we hear this talk about $1.5 billion and $2 billion, the actual delta cost, the cost differential is somewhere between $100 million and $200 million.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I want to make sure my colleagues heard that.

Mr. MOLINARI. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is saying that there is a cost, when these 120 ships have to go somewhere. If we put them in those existing home ports it is going to cost a substantial amount of money, probably around $600 million.

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, at least $600 million would be my estimate.

Mr. DICKS. The Secretary of the Navy says that the difference is between $50 million and $200 million to disperse the fleet. Is that correct?

Mr. MOLINARI. That is correct.

Mr. DICKS. Has not every Chief of Naval Operations, including Admiral Zumwalt, stated unequivocally that from a military perspective, dispersing the fleet is the right strategy because it will make it more difficult for any attacker to hit those ships. Is that not correct?

Mr. MOLINARI. Almost. I think every one except one. I think there is one CNO who disagreed.

Mr. DICKS. He works for the chamber of commerce at Norfolk.

Mr. MOLINARI. Chamber of commerce, the gentleman has got it. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. LEVIN of Michigan). The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MOLINARI] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MOLINARI was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

□ 1450

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman tried to compare the cost of present home ports versus the contruction of new home ports.

Now, is the gentleman talking about the A&E figures of new home ports or just the bare bone figure that we voted on today? Understanding, if the gentleman will, that we are talking about building infrastructures at these new ports.

So let us compare apples to apples and oranges to oranges, as somebody said. Is that a fair assumption that I made?

Mr. MOLINARI. Comparing apples and apples and apples and oranges; I do not know that that is a fair assumption, Mr. SISISKY. Yes, you are talking about new infrastructure, but you are also talking about new infrastructure at Norfolk and some of the other facilities.

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MOLINARI. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SISISKY. I must bring this up, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman referred to an accounting firm that did the work for the Navy. Did the gentleman——

Mr. MOLINARI. Reclaiming my time, may I correct the gentleman, please.

Mr. SISISKY. Excuse me.

Mr. MOLINARI. They only reviewed recently the Navy's accounting figures.

Mr. SISISKY. If the gentleman will yield further, Mr. Chairman, I just want to be sure. The General Accounting Office, in their report, took 15 months for the report. I want the gentleman to know the date of a letter that came to members of the subcommittee for review was no more than 2 weeks. They reviewed—I am talking about analyzing numbers and everything else—in less than 2 weeks.

Mr. MOLINARI. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, that is substantially correct; but I think that is to the credit of the Navy. The Navy knew that this debate was coming up; they knew there was a great deal of controversy, so they asked this firm to come in and said, "Look over our figures. Tell us where we made mistakes," and you know what? They found there was a mistake; that the delta cost differential was not $217 million as the Navy had stated in Secretary Lehman's letter, but it was somewhere between $100 million and $200 million.

So we are talking about a net cost differential of maybe as low as $100 million but look what we are gaining.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOLINARI. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says we are talking about a net cost of $100 million, and yet he is talking about the strategic benefits of disbursing the fleet throughout the outer coastal regions of the United States as opposed to concentrating all of our ships on one little point on the east coast and one little point on the west coast.

It seems to me that makes eminent sense. The Army disburses its army bases throughout the intercontinental United States and around the world; the Air Force disburses their bases all around the continental United States and throughout the world; yet the Navy combines all of its forces in one spot today, on the east coast and one spot on the west coast. That really does not make much strategic sense, in my mind.

Mr. MOLINARI. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his contribution. Let me say that is something that concerns me very deeply.

When I look at the numbers of ships—and I do not like to get into this argument because I know it is a sensitive one for those that have home ports in their area now, but those ports that have this extraordinary number of ships—and somebody has touched on Pearl Harbor.

My God, when we all see those films each year, I think we all have the same impression. How stupid could we be to permit this to happen? Here we are today thinking of making—in fact, we have been making the very same mistake.

Let me conclude my debate first, and I will be glad to respond to anybody else that would like me to respond. The two sites that we are debating now; Everett and Staten Island, have been considered the top priority by the Navy for military construction in 1987; and the Navy has been willing to take cuts in other areas to keep this program on track.

Three times the House has voted on home port funding, and all three times we have approved it. Both the Senate and House Armed Services Committees have endorsed the program; extensive hearings have been held by those who are considered experts in this House; and the votes were taken within the last 2 weeks before the Senate Armed Services Committee and the House counterpart.

Mr. Chairman, I think we are up to a situation now where the Navy has spent some 4 to 5 years on the study. There has been debate time and time again. I think the issue is clear at this point, certainly in my mind. I think it is time to move forward. I would hope that when we finish, that we can defeat the amendment before us.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time to oppose the amendment, and hopefully I can give my colleagues on the floor and those colleagues that are listening to me elsewhere a justifiable reason for opposing this amendment.

I begin with myself, personally; not my congressional district, not my political career, but myself as a father of two young men that are serving in the Navy as officers.

I do hope the Members will forgive me for the personal reference, but it is very important. I have a son who is an officer in the Navy as a doctor, a surgeon. I have one who is in the Mediterranean on a missile cruiser that challenged Mr. Qadhafi and crossed the "line of death." I speak for them.

Second, if you will pardon the personal reference, when I was 17 years old, I joined the Navy and served 18 or 19 months in the Navy toward the end of World War II. Ever since then I have had this involvement with the Navy, that I have become in my own sense, in my own sphere, among my peers in my district, somewhat of an expert on the Navy.

This is what we are discussing today: Will we forget Pearl Harbor? Not the Japanese and not the involvement of another country, but where our ships were. Where they were located and how it was such a disastrous point of time for our naval protection of the security of this Nation.

Do we want that, or would we allow that to happen again? Mr. Chairman, this is where the 600-ship Navy theory or concept came about, and this is where the concept of this home port and spreading out where the ships are, how they are protected, how they could come into flotillas—and I do not think I am divulging any military secrets, but my boy that is out in the Mediterranean sailed from Florida. Some of his flotilla came from all of the eastern shore, and somehow they met out in the mid-Atlantic; and they went to the Mediterranean, and that is where they are now.

Can we be so provincial, can we be so selfish to say, "No, I want them all here, I want them all there. Yes, it's good for my political career. Yes it's good for the region"? I think that we are beyond that.

Mr. Chairman, we should not be discussing this issue here. That should be a concept and a part of military strategy that should not be discussed here.
